Gradually the corridors were filled with a white-sheeted crowd of men and women. Each looked at the other with faces expressive of surprise, and many were the whispered conjectures as to what the end would be. Finally one more bold that the rest turned the knob of the door. It yielded to the pressure, and a curious spectacle was presented to their astonished gaze. The official lay flat on the floor, with the government clerk, dressed only in the most abbreviated of undergarments, sitting astride of him and pounding him vigorously with both fists. The widow, more charming than ever in her undress costume, was vainly endeavoring to separate them.

Subsequent investigation elicited the fact that the widow was an adventuress, who had procured her letters of introduction, in many cases, through blackmailing the writers. She had bled the official, who was completely infatuated with her, to the tune of several thousand dollars. But for the clerk she entertained the strongest affection. In order to more thoroughly carry out the intrigue and hoodwink the official, it was decided that the clerk should receive the widow's advances coldly. This deceived everyone but the official, whose eyes, sharpened by jealousy, soon discovered the little game. One night he laid a trap for them, and they fell into it with an innocence surprising when their duplicity is remembered. When at last he confronted them with his presence, instead of falling at his feet and imploring his forgiveness, the widow buried her head under the pillow, but the clerk, jumped from the bed, struck his superior a rattling blow full in the face. In falling, he grabbed a heavy table, which came to the floor with a crash. Here followed the scene above narrated. And now the dashing widow has fled to parts unknown, proceedings for a divorce suit are talked of, and a government clerk is out of a job.

A Downhill Fight.

[Leadville Democrat.]

One of those curious and dangerous episodes that characterise the miner's life in the snowy mountains of Colorado was brought to the attention of the reporter yesterday. Tom Cox and Jim Null are two miners working far up on the black, snowy slopes of Mount Elbert, near Twin Lakes. They sleep in a tent near the mouth of the Golden lode, in which they are working. Yesterday morning the two men, who had been working all night, went in the tent for the purpose of going to sleep. One of them got in a bed, and, enveloping himself with the blankets, was snug and comfortable and drowsy in a moment. The other, not in so great a hurry, noticed that the melting snow was dripping through the roof of the tent and right on the spot where he had to sleep. He couldn't stand a wet couch, and arousing his companion, asked him to get up so that the bed could be moved to a position where the melting snow would not touch it. His sleepy partner growled out a refusal. There was a hot reply, and in less time than it takes to write it the two were engaged in a fierce personal encounter. They were both clad in their night shirts alone, and a small tent is but limited space for two angry men to fight with each other. They had hardly clinched before one carried the other though the front flaps of the tent. Right here it is necessary to say that the tent was pitched on the fearfully steep slope of Mount Elbert, and there wasn't more than two feet of level ground between the front of the tent and the precipitous slope of the mountian. This slope was covered with four feet of soft snow, and it extended down for 2,000 feet before there was a resting place. In the fierce fight between the two miners they were carried down the dizzy slope, and with their hands upon each other's throats, they went whirling down the mountain like a pair of bowlders. They had gone but a short distance when anger vanished in the presence of a possible death, and each man turned his attention to the paramount work of saving his life. Down they went along the fearful slant of the great mountain, and on each revolution they sank in the soft snow, sometimes head first and sometimes [illegible] first. They were paralyzed [illegible] fright, and no [illegible] escaped [illegible] lips. Queer Capers of a Mule.

Philadelphia Times.

On Saturday night the members of the Carpenter family heard a ghost performing all sorts of capers in the old vacant house which adjoins their tenament, on the rear of John Finney's coal yard, on the southeast corner of Washington avenue and Passyunk road. The ghostly visitor was first heard clattering around in the lower rooms, shaking the entire building with his ponderous footsteps. Then came a pause, during which the affrighted Carpenters sat up in the bed, and, with curdling blood and pimpling skins, awaited further developments. The silence was soon broken by the measured tread of the supernatural stranger, and a few moments later they heard him mounting the stairs leading to the second story. The stairs cracked and groaned under the bogie's weight, and he could be heard breathing like a steam engine. This was more than the Carpenters could stand, and the entire family left the house and aroused the neighbors, to whome they told their hairraising story, and it was in some degree substantiated by the strange sounds which were wafted through the coal yard from the upper part of the haunted dwelling. Finally one daring man called for volunteers to explore the house, suggesting as a precautionary measure the advisability of procuring lanterns before entering. A band of courageous men responded to the call and a lantern was fetched from a neighboring saloon. The front door of the house was locked and barred, and while the explorers were talking about breaking it in Mr. Carpenter said the back door was wide open, but that it could only be reached by going through the coal yard. The crowd surged into the yard and came out in the yard attached to the haunted house. They advanced up stairs, and in the second-story room were startled to see outlined against the wall a strange and apparently unearthly form. They stood their ground stoutly, however, and the man with the light walked boldly into the apartment and discovered to the satisfaction of his comrades and himself that the strange figure was that of a mule. The news was soon transmitted to the anxious waiters below and they swarmed into the place. The mule belonged in the coal yard, and had during the night left his corral, entered the empty house, and in investigating the premises clambered up stairs. After finding the animal, the next question was how to get him down stairs again. No one was bold enough to attempt to lead the beast down, for fear it would stumble and precipitate itself upon him. The brute was locked in the room and remained their until yesterday when it was coaxed down stairs by means of a bait consisting of two heads of green lettuce tied on the end of a fishing pole and held seductively in front of his nose. The holder of the pole stood safely in the room below, and the mule picked his way slowly to the bottom and was led out of the house.

Edison and the Gooses Eggs.

Indianapolis Sun.

I have spoken about Edison's patience and preseverance. A funny story, the truth of which several of his friends attest, has been told me by one of his enthusiastic admirers to throw into relief these qualities. Ganders, as rural folk will know, flog with their wings children who show themselves disposed to interfere with hatching geese. When Edison was a boy of 7 or 8, and still wearing petticoats, boys' clothing being thought by his people too dear, it was observed by them, at the farm in Michigan where he was brought up, that his bare legs were often badly beaten by the gander. He was told to keep out of that bird's way and to let the geese alone. The next spring hostilities were again declared between him and the gander. One fine morning Edison disappeared. It was ascertained that he took with him a store of food. As he was still missing at night great uneasiness was felt. A search was begun next day. The child was found in a wood, sitting down and holding out his skirts over a sort of straw nest that he had made and filled with eggs which he had taken from under an incubating goose. He wanted to see whether he could not hatch just as well as that bird. The idea had set him in a fever twelve months previously, and he had not abandoned it. Unphilosophical parents whipped and scolded him.

An acquaintance, to whom a Michigan farmer had told this curious anecdote, went to Edison and asked whether it was not fabulous. "No, it is quite true," he replied. "I was terribly disappointed when they pulled me off my nest, and had not the courage to try again. But if I went now to hatch those goose's eggs I should succeed. I have more perseverance."

Pretty Girls and Their Gallants.

Washington Letter in Chicago Times.

Mrs. Senator Jones, of Nevada, has introduced a very pretty hospitality this winter which will be imitated. She invites twenty pretty young ladies to an afternoon lunch, having the edibles temptingly displayed on a center table. Ten little side tables or teapoys are ranged around the walls of an adjoining parlor. There are no servants visible, each cavalier waiting upon the maiden of his choice and enjoying a tete a tete with her for his reward. After the eating, the clever ones of both sexes amuse the others by solos, duets, recitations and readings.

To the enormous mass of artillery already in her possession Germany is constantly adding more. Since 1871 Prussia alone has added 2,000 guns to her stock. Many of them are of the heaviest caliber.

SAMARITAN
NERVINE

SAMARITAN NERVINE

Cures Epileptic Fits, Spasms, Convulsions, St. Vitus Dance, Vertigo, Hysteria, Insanity, Apoplexy, Paralysis, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, and all Nervous Diseases. This infallible remedy will positively eradicate every species of Nervous Derangement, and drive them away from whence they came, never to return again. It utterly destroys the germs of disease by neutralizing the hereditary taint or poison in the system, and thoroughly eradicates the disease and utterly destroys the cause.

SAMARITAN NERVINE

Cures Female Weakness, General Debility, Leucorrhœa or Whites, Painful Menstruations, Ulceration, of the Uterus, Internal Heat, Gravel, Inflammation of the Bladder, Irritability of the Bladder. For Wakefulness at Night, there is no better remedy. During the change of life no Female should be without it. It quiets the Nervous System and gives rest, comfort and nature's sweet sleep.

SAMARITAN NERVINE

Cures Alcoholism, Drunkness and the habit of Opium Eating. These degrading habits are by far the worst evils that have ever befallen suffering humanity. Thousands die annually from these noxious drugs. The drunkard drinks liquor not because he likes it, but for the pleasure of drinking and treating his friends, little thinking that he is on the road to ruin. Like the Opium Eater, he first uses the drug in small quantities as a harmless antidote. The soothing influence of the drug takes strong hold upon its victim leading him on to his own destruction. The habits of Opium Eating and Liquor Drinking are precisely what eating is to alimentiveness, as over-eating first inflames the stomach, which redoubles its craving until it paralyzes both the stomach and appetite. So every drink of liquor or dose of Opium, instead of satisfying, only adds to its fierce fires, until it consumes the vital force and then itself. Like the gluttonous tape-worm, it cries "Give, give, give!" but never enough until its own rapacity devours itself. Samaritan Nervine gives instant relief in all such cases. It produces sleep, quiets the nerve, builds up the nervous system, and restores body and mind to a healthy condition.

SAMARITAN NERVINE

Cures Nervous Dyspepsia, Palpitation of the Heart, Asthma, Bronchitis, Scrofula, Syphilis, diseases of the Kidneys and all diseases of the urinary organs. Nervous debility caused by the indiscretions of youth, permanently cured by the use of this invaluable remedy. To you, young, middle-aged and old men, who are covering your sufferings as with a mantle by silence look up, you can be saved by timely efforts, and make ornaments to society, and jewels in the crown of your Maker, if you will. Do not keep the secret longer, until it saps your vitals, and destroys both body and soul. If you are thus afflicted, take Dr. Richmond's Samaritan Nervine. It will restore your shattered nerves, arrest premature decay, impart tone and energy to the whole system.

SAMARITAN NERVINE

Is for sale by druggists everywhere or may be had direct from us. Those who wish to obtain further evidence of the curative properties of Samaritan Nervine will enclose a 3-cent postage stamp for a copy of our Illustrated Journal of Health, giving hundreds of testimonials of cure from persons who have used the medicine, and also their pictures photographed after their restoration to perfect health. PROVED A SUCCESS

THE PASTILLE
Prof. Harris' Radical Cure
Trade Mark
FOR NERVOUS DEBILITY

BY YEARS OF USE!

A valuable Discovery and New Departure in Medical Science. A positively effective Remedy for the speedy and permanent Cure for organic weakness—the deplorable disease resulting from indiscreet practices or excesses in youth or at any time of life—by the only true way, viz: Direct Application acting by Absorption, and exerting its specific influence on the Vesicles, Ducts, and Gland, that are unable to perform their natural functions while this disease pervades the human organism. The use of the Pastille is attended with no pain or inconvenience, and does not interfere with the ordinary pursuits of life; it is quickly dissolved and soon absorbed, producing an immediate soothing and restorative effect upon the nervous organizations wrecked from vicious habits or excesses, stopping the drain from the system, restoring the mind to health and sound memory, removing the Dimness of Sight, Confusion of Ideas, Aversion to Society, etc., etc., and the appearance of premature old age usually accompanying this trouble, and restoring the vital forces, where they have been dormant for years. This mode of treatment has stood the test in very severe cases, and is now a pronounced success. Drugs are too much prescribed in this trouble, and, as many can bear witness to, with but little if any permanent good. There is no nonsense about this Preparation. Practical observation enables us to positively guarantee that it will give satisfaction. It has been in general use for several years and we have thousands of testimonials from patients, as to its value, and it is now conceded to be the most rational means yet discovered for reaching and curing this very prevalent trouble, that is well known to be the cause of untold misery to so many, and upon whom quacks prey with their useless nostrums and big fees. The Remedy is put up in neat boxes, of three sizes. No. 1, (enough to last a month,) $3; No. 2, (sufficient to effect a permanent cure, unless in severe cases,) $5; No. 3, (lasting over three months, will restore those in the worst condition,) $7. Sent by mail in plain wrappers. Full DIRECTIONS for using will accompany EACH BOX.

Send for Sealed Descriptive Pamphlets giving Anatomical Illustrations and Testimony, which will convince the most skeptical that they can be restored to perfect health, and the vital forces thoroughly re-established same as if never affected. Sold ONLY by Balky Horses.

As long as we can remember we have read of remedies for balky horses, and they have been pretty much of the same nature, to wit: To examine the harness on one side and then on the other, then jump into the wagon and drive off. Very nice, but try it. Next, take the horse out of the shafts, and make him go round and round until he is giddy, etc. Rather difficult to make a horse giddy. Next, to place the hand over the horse's nose and hold it there preventing him from breathing until he wants to go. Easy to try. Next, take a couple of turns of stout twine and tie around his foreleg just below the knee, tight enough for the horse to feel and tie in a bow-knot. He will at once start, and the string can be removed. Next, take the tail of the horse between the hind legs and tie by a cord to the saddle-girth. Next, tie a string around the horse's ear close to his head. There is another which we know frequently answers, which is to catch up a handful of dirt and forcing it into the mouth of the animal. But there is still another, the one we have adopted in all cases, and have never yet known it to fail. It is to pass a twine around the lower jaw, and of course below the tongue, and tie it quite tight over the top of the head, leaving an end of two or three feet by which to pull at, walking in front of the horse. This will be found to be a remedy in all cases if properly done.—Germantown Telegraph.

The appointment of Mr. Chandler to the naval portfolio has developed an interesting phase of Washington social life which sets the gossips agog with speculation. It will be remembered that when J. Wilkes Booth was shot, the picture of a beautiful young lady, a reigning society belle, was found on his person. The original of this picture was recognized in the person of Miss Hale, the daughter of a leading politician and statesman, and a lady of whom Booth had become deeply and seriously enamored. What encouragement he had received was not precisely known, but there was enough between them to form the basis of a good many romances, which afterward appeared in the public press. Miss Hale afterward became Mrs. Chandler, and is now the wife of the secretary of the navy. The same whirligig of time which has brought this about has also made the then young son of the martyred Lincoln secretary of the war. It now appears, according to the official etiquette, that it is the duty of the secretary of the war to escort the wife of he next in rank to dinner on state occasions. He must take the wife of the secretary of the navy. Secretary Lincoln, in short, must escort the one-time sweetheart of the assassin of his distinguished father. Therefore society is shocked.

A Skeleton in a Tree.

[North Georgia Citizen.]

Two men in the northern part of Gilmer county chased a fox to his covert, which proved to be an immense hollow trunk, charred and blackened by forest fires. It was comparatively but a huge stump, being not more than twenty feet high. The wily robber of the hennery had entered an aperture near the base of the tree, and all efforts at smoking him out had proved futile. As a last resort one of them proposed baring the fox's mode of entrance and then falling the tree. This plan was adopted, and a few vigorous strokes of their axes sent the old shell crashing to the earth, and Reynard, in trying to make his escape, was summarily dispatched with an axe. As they were preparing to take their departure, one of the men discerned something white glistening in the old, hollow stump, and upon examination was horrified to behold the bleached bones of a dismembered human skeleton. On closer inspection a powder horn and bullet pouch were brought to light, together with a few moldering articles of raiment but nothing else was found that would testify as to who the person had been.

A pretty mantlepiece ornament may be obtained by suspending an acorn, by a thread tied around it, within half an inch of water in a vase, tumbler or saucer, and allowing it to remain for several weeks. It will soon burst open, and small roots will seek the water a straight and tapering stem, with beautiful glossy green leaves will shoot upward and present a very pleasing appearance. Chestnut trees may be grown in the same manner, but their leaves are not so beautiful as those of the oak. The water should be changed once a month for water of the same warmth; bits of charcoal added to it will prevent it from souring. If the little leaves turn yellow put one drop of ammonia in the water, and they will renew their luxuriance. Another pretty ornament is made by wetting a sponge and sprinkling it with canary, hemp, grass and other seeds. In a few days the seeds will germinate, and the sponge will soon be covered with a mass of green foliage if kept moist.

Taking Time by the Forelock.

[Detroit Free Press.]

At the battle of Groveton Stonewall Jackson tried an experiment which nearly frightened a Federal division out of their boots. Bars of railroad iron were cut up into foot lengths and fired from some of his heaviest guns, and the noise these missiles made as they went steeling through the air was a sort of cross between the shriek of a woman and the bray of a mule. The Federals listened in wonder at the first few which banged through the tree tops, and presently one of the pieces fell just in front of a Pennsylvania regiment. A captain stepped forward to inspect it, and after turning it over he rushed to his colonel with the news:

"Colonel, them infernal rebs are firing railroad iron at us!"

"No!"

"They are, for a fact!"

"Captain advance your company to that ridge and deploy, and the minute you find Jackson is getting ready to fire freight cars at us send me word. I don't propose to have my regiment mashed into the ground when it can just as well be decently exterminated in the regular way!"

Brother Jonathan.

The origin of this term as applied to the United States, is as follows: When General Washington, after being appointed commander of the army of the Revolutionary War, went to Massachusetts to organize it, he found a great want of ammunition and other means of defense: and on one occasion it seemed that no means could be devised for the necessary safety. Jonathan Trumbull, the elder, was then governor of the state of Connecticut; and the general, placing the greatest reliance on his excellency's judgment, remarked, "We must consult Brother Jonathan on the subject." The general did so, and the governor was successful in supplying many of the wants of the army, and thenceforward, when difficulties arose, and the army was spread over the country, it became a by-phrase, "we must consult Brother Jonathan;" and the name has now become a designation for the whole country, as John Bull has for England.

The Retort Sarcastic.

Clermont Courier.

Judge Tarbell tells the following good joke on himself; A short time after his retirement from the bench he happened to meet an old friend whom he had not seen for some time. The judge, all smiles and heartiness, effervesced over his "dear friend" in such a way as to provoke the inquiry:

"What office are you a candidate for now, judge?"

The judge made a deprecatory movement with an outward-turned palm, and said: "For none at all, my dear brother; I'm simply a candidate for the Kingdom of Heaven."

His friend regarded him sorrowfully for an instant, and then with more wit than politeness, and more profanity than either, said: "I'll bet you don't carry a d—d township."

Doubtless the judge lost sight of the man's profanity in admiration of his sublimely truthful candor.

Wonderful Power.

When a medicine performs such cures as Kidney-Wort is constantly doing, it may truly be said to have wonderful power. A carpenter in Montgomery, Vt., had suffered for eight years from the worst of kidney diseases, and had been wholly incapacitated for work. He says, "One box made a new man of me, and I sincerely believe it will restore to health all who are similarly afflicted." It is now sold in both liquid and dry form. [Danbury News.

Southern Letter.

HOT SPRINGS, ARK., May 1st, 1882.

DEAR COURIER:—The madam informs me that she promised a number of our friends at our old Hoosier home to write them as to her home in the sunny south, and I am brought in as a second party to do the work. Of course, we both have a very warm regard for many of your readers, and shall always feel a great interest their welfare. The columns of the COURIER are largely scanned each week, and their contents devoured with a relish, as we note the doings and happenings among those with whom we were so long associated. Then, to be brief, we are pleasantly domiciled on the side of the mountain, just far enough up to overlook the city and across the beautiful valley of the Ouachita (pronounced Washitaw), beyond which the summits of mountains blue are outlined against the sky. We can hear the music of the band marching along the street at our feet, while the glare of many street-lamps defines the course of the valley, and the base of the mountains as they turn abruptly from the valley below. A soft, balmy air floats in from the distant peaks, freighted with the perfume of numerous flowers that thrive and bloom here in luxurious extravagance. The great bath houses have closed for the day, and the sidewalks are swarmed with human beings as they promenade up and down the narrow valley, connecting the city above with the city below. There are thousands of visitors here now, and our hotels are crowded. It is our busy season, and Central Avenue almost resembles a Broadway.

Mrs. M. says she never slept so sound or ate so heartily as she has since her arrival here. She is delighted with the warm baths, and is already benefitted. She was surprised to see so many handsome residences and cottages so cosily and beautifully situated at the base and along the sides of the mountains. She had an idea that it was a rough, rude place, but across the valley and up the slope beyond, you can see as handsome houses as human heart could wish. She likes the climate, too; a little warm in the day, but deliciously cool and pleasant at night. She hasn't got onto the hang of nigger servants yet, but thinks they could know a good deal more than they do. Hardie is clerk at the Palace bath house—an edifice that cost $30,000—and is giving satisfaction. He has captured all the girls, and they call him the handsomest boy in the state. I am at newspaper work again, and am as busy as a nailer. So that will give you all an idea of the family, except the baby who is having a circus every day.

Mrs. Mays regrets that the short time she had to pack up, and that prevented her from acknowledging in a formal way, the very elegant present made her by her friends a few days before she left. Though many miles separate her from these kind people, yet she often looks across those mountain peaks in the direction of sweet Auburn, and in her heart there wells up a feeling of grateful remembrances that enshrines them all, so that the least among them shall never be forgotten. Those are grand, good people in your good old Hoosier town, and at least in one hearth-stone in the sunny south will their good deeds be ever remembered, and their kind faces never forgotten. T. C. MAYS.

National Banks and National Debt.

It is stated that there are in operation 2,248 national banks. These banks, on the first of October, 1881, had resources amounting to $2,358,400,000—an amount exceeding the entire national debt. The power exercised by these banks over the business affairs of the country is practically unlimited. They can expand or contract the currency at will. Nor is this all, nor possibly the worst feature of the national bank system. Through their Bankers' Association they can bring the vast money power into operation and concentrate it for the purpose of affecting either state or national legislation. When the bill was before congress to reduce the interest on the national debt to 3 per cent., the national banks were prompt to interpose their influence and to demand that the interest should not be reduced. Failing in congress, they brought their power to bear upon a poor, weak, venal fraudulent president, and secured a veto. The threats they made to intimidate the people's representatives in congress were carried out to some extent, and the currency was contracted. They evinced a disposition to bring on a panic and create universal demoralization if congress should dare to act contrary to a policy which they dictated. These banks are now asking for congressional legislation to perpetuate their corporate existence. Mr. Buckner, of Missouri, in a speech recently delivered in congress upon a resolution to fix a day for the consideration of a bill to extend the corporate existence of national banks, said:

"Mr. Speaker, this bill is a vain and useless effort to galvanize into a short-lived and spasmodic existence a system that contains within its own organism the seeds of decay and death. The breath of its life is debt, and without debt it ceases to live. National banks and national debt are the Siamese twins of our financial system. The one cannot exist without the other. The right to continue their existence for another period of twenty years, as proposed by the committee's bill, can not add a day to their duration or prolong the period of their final dissolution. That depends entirely upon the rapidity with which the people are willing to discharge the bonds which guarantee their circulation. The president of the American Bankers' Association and president of one of the leading banks of New York City said, in an address before the Niagara Convention of Bankers of last August:

'It is very obvious that the continued reduction of the public debt is fast removing the foundation of the national banking currency, and that the system itself, thus losing its characteristic basis, is approaching dissolution, and it is evident that the existence of the present system of banking can not be long protracted, and that very soon substantial changes in the basis of our national currency will be inevitable.'

This sagacious and intelligent banker advocated the substitution of some other basis than United States bonds for the bank note circulation, and neither he nor any other member of that convention even hinted at the necessity or desirability of the law now before the house. Whether expiring banks go into liquidation by operation of law or by the vote of their shareholders, or some or all of the shareholders organize a new bank under the same or a different name, or whether their charters are extended by the provisions of this bill, the foundations of the system will in either contingency continue to be underminded and destroyed as long as debt redemption is continued; and no such patent nostrum as prescribed by this bill will exempt the national banks from their inevitable doom. I say inevitable, because there is no more universal sentiment in this country than the fixed and determined purpose to discharge the last dollor of the public debt-bearing interest as rapidly as the resources of the country will permit. What the banks need, therefore, is not deceptive and unnecessary legislaton, such as we have in this bill, but something to restore the constituent element of the system, and to secure a firmer and stronger foundation for their mischievous and vicious note circulation."

By the foregoing it will be observed that the banks expect by the perpetuation of their corporate existance to perpetuate so much of the national debt as may be requirred as a basis for the circulation of their notes. The sum of $1,000,000,000 has been named; that is to say when the national debt has been reduced to that amount it is to be regarded as a permanent debt existing for the benefit of the national banks, since as the law now stands, the national banks and the national debt are the "Siamese twins of our financial system." To pay the debt is to get rid of the banks, and they are now bringing all their influence to bear to perpetute their existance, and those who favor national banks will be in due time be clamoring for the perpetuation of the national debt. Those who favor national banks also favor the retirement of the greenback currency and the demonetization of silver. With greenbacks out of the way, with silver demonetized or its coinage stopped, there will be a demand for at least $1,000,000,000 of bank bills, which the national banks would supply, and, these things accomplished, the entire business of the country would be at the mercy of the national banks. To this arrangements the people of the United States will not consent.

Be Sensible.

You have allowed your bowels to become habitually costive, your liver has become torpid, the same ails your kidneys, and you are just used up. Now be sensible, get a package of Kidney-Wort, take it faithfully and soon you will forget you've got any such organs, for you will be a well man.—Albany Argus.

A Brazilian Snake.

A very unpleasant account is given by a Brazilian paper of the proceeding of a huge water snake called the "sucuruyu," which is to be found in some of the rivers of Brazil. An accident occured the other day on the banks of the Rio Arassuahy, owing to the voracity of one of these reptiles. A slave, with some companions, was fishing with a net in the river, when he was suddenly seized by a sucuruyu, and, in spite of his resistance, was dragged under the water in the presence of the horrified spectators. He never appeared again, and no doubt is entertained that he was swallowed by the sucuruyu, who made an effort with his hinder coils to carry off at the same time another of the fishing party. It is the exception for the sucuruyu to attack human beings, but it loses no opportunity of seizing deer, calves and other quadrupeds when they come to drink.

PRESIDENT ARTHUR recently had a few of his old New York bummer friends to dine at the White House. They had a high old time. It was on Sunday, of course, for Arthur is at the head of the great morality party After the regular feast, which was rare and costly, a choice variety of the rarest wines and liquors, aided to complete the jollification. And being at the head of the prohibition and only temperance party, of course the president and his friends, drank and caroused until, three o' clock next morning. And all this happened on a Sunday, and in the very, same building in which Garfield suffered so long, only a few months ago, and the head personage in the disgraceful business, was the man, who was made president, by the act of the assassin whose bullet removed Garfield and made it possible for these disgraceful scenes to take place in the president's mansion once more. It will now be in order for some republican to talk about the "whisky party."

They were very fond of each other and had been engaged; but they quarreled, and were too proud to make it up. He called a few days ago at his father's house to see the old gentleman on business, of course. She was at the door. Said he: "Ah, Miss Blank, I believe; is your father in?" "No, sir," she replied, "pa is not in at present. Did you wish to see him personally?" "Yes," was the bluff responce, feeling that she was yielding, "and very particular personal business," and he turned proudly to go away. "I beg your pardon," she called after him, as he struck the lower step, "but who shall I say called?" He never smilled again. This was too cruel.

A forgotton exchange gives us the following information concerning fauna and flora of New Holland: "The Kangaroo, an animal between a squirrel and a deer, has five claws on its fore-paws, and three talons on its hind-legs, and hops on its tail; the Mole lays eggs, and has a duck's bill; there is a bird with a broom in its mouth instead of a tongue; there is a fish, one-half belonging to the genus Raia and the other half belonging to that of Squalus; the pears are made of wood with the stalk at the broader end; and the cherry grows with the cherry-stone outside,"

It is a good thing for Noah that he had the only ark afloat in all the universe at the time of the flood. If there had been just one more ark there would have been a collison the third day out, unless those things were managed better then than they are now. And probably they were not, as it seemed to be considered dangerous to send out more than one ark at a time.

While the Cambridge elephant was being placed on its flat car for shipment from here, a little street Arab in the crowd, noticing the animal's huge toe-nails, called out, "Oh! Jimmy, just lookee here! Blamed if he hain't got teeth on his feet!"

A Sure Cure for Piles.

Do you know what it is to suffer with piles? If you do, you know what is one of the worst torments of the human frame. The most perfect cure ever known is Kidney-Wort. It cures constipation, and then its tonic action restores health to the diseased bowels and prevents recurrence of disease. Try it without delay. The dry and the liquid are both sold by druggists.—Globe.

Geographical Puzzle.

While visiting a friend in the most northeastern state of the Union, I determined to arise with a city of Indiana, and was invited by a city in the eastern part of Colorado to row on a lake of Maine. The water was a cape off the coast of Ireland; all was quiet, and the waves seemed to murmur a mount of Asia.

We soon felt a country of Europe, and as we had provided ourselves with a city of Italy, that part of a lake of California which is situated in the northern part of France, and a river of Montana, we had dinner, and for dessert we had a lake of New York, and also grapes from a city of Spain.

We then proceeded to shore and built an Island of New York. After lunch we began fishing, and threw in a river of France, and caught a peak of Colorado; but soon tiring of this, my companion lay down to rest, while I wandered off and found an island south of Cuba combined with a river of Virginia, and proceeded to gather some more.

My companion told me he was much annoyed by a small bay of Florida. Soon after we were startled by a bay in the southern part of Canada, and knowing that it would be a lake north of Minnesota, we hastened homeward.

As we proceeded we passed two men who were on a river of Germany, and whose clothes were two cities of France.

We stopped in at a mount of Washington Territory, and purchased a city of Ceylon for a little river of Australia at home.

As we parted at the door we bade each other a cape off the coast of Newfoundland. We found that though our fort in Georgia had not been great, our pleasures had not been a city of Michigan.

The Nation.

Since its consolidation with the New York Evening Post, has increased its facilities in every department, enlarged its size to twenty-four pages, and added many able writers to its previous list. It is now pronounced by many able readers to be better than ever before.

Established in 1865, the Nation was a pioneer in this country as a weekly journal of literary and political criticism of the highest order, conducted free from the control of party or interest of any sort. Despite a precarious support during the first few years, it has held to its original aim, and has long been a recognized authority at home and abroad. Its editorial management has been unchanged from the first, and its projectors intend that with the present facilities, the Nation shall become more than ever before the medium of the ablest thought of the time.

The form and style of the paper are chosen with a view to the most suitable shape for binding, and a set of the Nation preserved, bound, and indexed, makes the most complete and readable record of current events of importance in the political and literary world available for the American public. The subscriptian has been reduced to $3 per annum. Specimen copies sent on request. Address the Publisher, 210 Broadway New York. 18-2t.

An Extraordinary Offer.

There are a large number of persons out of employment in every county who could be making from $100 to $300 a month working for us. There are many who have employment who could make a much larger amount by obtaining the agency of their county of an article of great merit that will sell well in all well-to-do families, and pay a profit of over 100 per cent. One agent in Pennsylvania sold 32 in two days and made over $60 clear. Any man with energy enough to call and show our invention can make $1,500 to $3,000 a year. We only want one good man in each county, to whom we will give the exclusive sale. The business is pleasant, permanent and profitable. We wish to hear at once from those who are out of employment, or desire to get better. Send stamp and address and receive our large descriptive circular, giving full information.

Mr. Gladstone has risen to the occasion by liberating the Irish Land League members of Parliament, and proclaiming a policy of reform and conciliation in Ireland.

The attempt to assassinate Jay Gould and Vanderbilt by the use of infernal machines sent through the mails shows that Nihilism is taking deep root in this country.

The title to 1,800 farms, or about 130,000 acres, in Hardin county, Ohio, occupied for upwards of fifty years, is being contested by Virginia claimants before the Land Commissioner in Washington.

Gladstone thinks he sees a "gleam of hope" for the settlement of the Irish land question upon a basis of mutual satisfaction. He has in preparation a bill, which he hopes will prove an effectual compromise.

Ralph Waldo Emerson, the great poet, essayist and philosopher, whose fame in the world sheds lustre upon his country, died at his home in Concord, Massachusetts, on Thursday evening, aged nearly 79 years.

Railroad Commissioner Armstrong has written a letter to Attorney General Brewster, recommending that the suit against the Central Pacific railroad be pressed, and that suits be instituted against all Pacific railroads for arrears of contributions to the sinking fund under the Thurman bill, and be vigorously prosecuted.

The bill which Senator McPherson, of New Jersey, has introduced in the Senate of Congress, providing for the construction of a new railway from New York to the Pacific, does not ask for any subsidy or grant of land, but simply requests the right of way. The friends of the new scheme declare that the project has American and European capital behind it to the amount of $150,000,000.

Co-operation is very successful in France, and mutual relief societies prosper well. Their present number is no fewer than 6,525, of which 1,916 are authorized by the government, and 4,165 have been otherwise approved. The membership is more than a million, and the women members alone number upward of 100,000. The total capital exceeds 90,000,000f.

A horrible affair is reported from Georgia. A gang of 100 State convicts, chained together, were being transported on platform cars, en route for work at wood-cutting. The train stopped at a station, a portion of the gang getting off of the cars still chained fast to those on board. The train started suddenly, and those who had got off, being unable to get on the cars. Were dragged over the rails and ties for some distance, feet foremost. Six of the unfortunates were so badly mangled that they are not expected to survive.

The United States Senate has passed an important bill, having in view a radical change in our policy toward the Indians. It provides for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on various reservations, and for the extention of the laws of States and Territories over Indians. This looks to making the Indians individual land-owners, with a view to inducing them to become cultivators of the soil, self-supporting and independent of Governmental reliance for protection and subsistance. It is a step in the direction of Indian Civilization.

The question of an electric railway for Berlin is being considered. The railway would run from the west to the east of the city, and would establish direct communication with the Metropolitan Railway. It is to be constructed overhead, and supported on high columns. The trains are to lower themselves on arriving at each station to the level of the street for passengers to get out and enter, and will then again be elevated to the level of the line overhead, all this being accomplished by power supplied by means of electricity.

In a discussion of the question of American citizens in English prisons, in the House of Congress, the other day, Mr. Orth made a strong showing of the abuses that are practiced under the name of American citizenship. He referred especially to the O'Mahoney case, which is the basis of much of the blustering demagogism prevalent on the subject, and showed that O'Mahoney had come to this country and remained long enough to get out his naturalization papers, when he had returned to Ireland, established a public house and whisky shop, accepted a public office under the government, and was now attempting to use his naturalization papers to shield himself in certain covert attacks upon the English Government.

The new school laws of Iowa provide that the salaries of County Superintendents shall be increased to $4 a day; that Boards of Directors shall set out and properly protect twelve or more shade trees on each school house site, and that a State Educational Board of Examiners shall be created. This board is to have power to issue State certificates valid for five years, and State diplomas good for life, and its members are to be the Superintendent of Public Instruction, the President of the State University, the Principal of the State Normal School, and two persons to be appointed by the Executive Council, one of whom shall be a woman. The object of this law is to do away with the annual examination of well-qualified teachers.

The Philadelphia Ledger has been investigating the subject and finds that coffee-houses for the promotion of temperance seem to meet with much greater success in England than in this country. The coffee-houses are financially successful, and in two years fifty-three companies were incorporated, the number of houses now open for business being between 2,500 and 3,000. London, at the close of 1879, had thirty-nine houses, owned by four societies, that paid four per cent. on their capital; in Liverpool there were thirty-five houses, paying ten per cent., and so on throughout the kingdom, the profit ranging from four to ten per cent. in all the larger cities. Some of the houses are fitted up in the most attractive style, as "palaces," the purpose being to compete as far as possible with all classes of liquor saloons. The Manchester Coffee Tavern Company report an average daily attendance at their eight houses of 1,160 persons, and some of these, it may fairly be presumed, would be led to seek intoxicating liquors for refreshment but for the existence of the coffee-houses.

The Attorney General writes to the Auditor of Elkhart county: "Under section twelve of the act concerning drainage, approved April 8, 1881, (Acts of 1881, p. 40), the services of the Commissioners of drainage, engineers, chainmen, axemen and rodmen, by them employed, must be paid for out of the county treasury. It was not the intention of the law to reimburse the county for the expenditure. No provision was made for taxing up these costs against the land benefited by the drain. The costs are put upon the same footing as the costs of road viewers."

The Supreme Court has decided, in a late case, that the lottery schemes which have been common in this State, are unlawful, and those who advertise them are subject to a fine of not less than $10 or more than $500. The Indianapolis Journal says: "This, as will be seen, is a direct decision against all such advertising in newspapers or on hand bills. It reaches the advertising of church raffles as well as dealers in any kind of merchandise who give away prizes to be distributed by chance. In the case mentioned the appellant was convicted and find $10. Section 171 of the same act prohibits any one engaging in or operating such schemes, and the same penalty is prescribed for its violation.

Vanderbilt's Family Mausoleum.

New York World.

Mr. William H. Vanderbilt spent nearly all day yesterday on Staten Island, where he resided for many years, selecting a site for a large family mausoleum. He finally decided on a spot lying just outside the old cemetery and facing the Moravian church in which the Vanderbilts of the island worshiped for generations. The site is a large knoll separated from the cemetery by a ravine, which will be made into a roadway. Mr. Vanderbilt also means to put the whole cemetery in order and to beautify it by planting trees and evergreens. The paths are to be graded, and the spot is to be made as lovely as the most scientific landscape gardening can make it. Carte blanche has been given as to the expense by Mr. Vanderbilt. The spot to be occupied by the mausoleum of the family contains about one and one-half acres. It is to be seventy feet high, and on any clear day the buildings will be visible twenty miles off at sea. He is also building a new parsonage for the pastor of the church and will furnish it handsomely. The mausoleum is to be built of Westbury granite, which has a grain nearly as fine as marble, and is much more durable than Quincy granite. It will cost $200,000. The church and cemetery are near the old Vanderbilt homestead, which contains 200 acres, all of which was but recently given by Mr. Vanderbilt to his son, George Vanderbilt, with the understanding that at some future day the young man will build a magnificent cottage upon the grounds. Mr. Vanderbilt means to sail for Europe, May 6th, on the steamer Britanica, his intention being to return on the same vessel.

Sarah Bernhardt's Husband.

Paris Evenement

M. Aristides Ambrose Damalas is the third son of M. Damalas, who was formerly Mayor of Syra, a post which he renounced after the Greek Revolution of 1862, and who afterward with his wife, a daughter of M. Lucas Ralli, Mayor of Piraeus and a wealthy merchant, settled at Marseilles, where he died. M. Damalas had four children, three boys and a girl. One of his sons is now established as a broker at Alexandria; another resides sometimes in Paris and occasionally in London; and the third is Sarah Bernhardt's husband. The daughter is married to a Smyrna medical man of Irish extraction, and, although separated from her husband, lives in the East. M. Damalas, senior, left some 300,000f to each child. M. Aristides Damalas did not practice any profession, but had a strong inclination for the stage, and much frequented the company of actors and actresses. Four years ago, when war between Greece and Turkey seemed imminent, he took service in the Greek cavalry, but soon left it and obtained a post as Chancellor at the Greek Consulate at Moscow. This, too, he soon gave up, and returned to Paris, where he spent the last 1,000 francs of his fortune. He took a few lessons from Delaunay and entered Sarah Bernhardt's Company. The rest is known. As regards the great fortune he is reported to expect, the Evenement says his mother is wealthy, but she is only fifty-four years of age, and is not likely to part with anything in her lifetime.

FROM WASHINGTON.

It is probable that a day will be fixed Monday for the discussion of the bill extending bank charters. The Republicans decide that it is best to allow the amendment to be offered, as many on their side of the House desire the bill to be amended in some particulars.

Blaine's friends are highly pleased over his course in the Investigating Committee. It is felt that he has fairly succeeded in putting his administration of the State Department in a proper light, an opportunity for which he had not before had.

The scene between Belmont and Blaine is the principal topic of conversation at the Capitol to-day, and the general impression is that it is fitting climax to the long farce. The scene, while the most exciting of anything ever seen here for many months, yet was rather ridiculous in many respects. Blaine, as every one knows, is a man of fine physique, while Belmont is a very small, rather insignificant looking man of perhaps 30, weighing a little over 100 pounds. He is, however, an accomplished boxer and fencer, having taken prizes in New York for excellence in this line of athletic accomplishments.

The War Department has dispatches confirming the reports of the Indian depredations There is much indignation outside of army circles that nothing more has been accomplished to protect the people of Arizona. At the department it is explained that it is impossible to use the cavalry to any advantage in the mountains and canons, and that infantry are entirely worthless. The whole number of troops in the Department of Arizona is about 1,500, one-half cavalry and Indian scouts.

Mrs. Mason leaves for her home in Virginia soon. The total subscriptions for "Betty and the baby" amount to about $8,000. There is no possibility that Mason will be released before the fall term of court, even should Lyddy's petition be allowed.

Attorney General Brewster has given a decision that where mail contractors fail to make trips by reason of the floods or any cause, the price of the trip must be deducted from the pay.

It is probable the discussion of the tariff bill will end with the close of next week, and on the week following the other election cases will come up. The Tariff Commission bill is pretty sure to pass.

Should the bill pass increasing the strength of the signal corps, its workings will be extended in the South, where the increase is greatly needed.

The bill removing the stamp tax seems likely to pass with little opposition, and will probably come up immediately after the election cases are disposed of.

Rev. Thomas Mitchell, of Brooklyn, has challenged Ingersoll to a debate on Ingersoll's disputed points regarding the Bible, the debate to be held in Washington, and to continue until one backs down.

Augustus M. Soteldo was arraigned to-day and pleaded not guilty to the charge of murdering his brother, and also with assault with intent to kill. Barton was remanded for trial.

Mr. Davis, in the House, obtained unanimous consent to call up his bill directing the Secretary of the Treasury to refund to Colonel W. H. Thompson $490 80 duties paid to the Collector of the port on fifty-four uniforms imported for Company G, Sixth Illinois National Guard, and it was passed.

The Lynch-Chalmers case being under consideration, Mr. Calkins spoke for nearly two hours, and was frequently applauded by his party friends. In conclusion he reviewed the benefits granted the colored people by the Republican party, and assured that people that the party would continue to educate them, and, standing by them in each advancing step in civilization, would invoke's God's blessing upon them and their children. The conclusion of his speech was greeted with loud and long-continued applause on the Republican side and in the galleries, in which a large number of colored men were assembled.

The vote was then taken on the resolution of the minority of the Committee on Elections, declaring Chalmers to be entitled to retain his seat. This was rejected—yeas, 104; noes, 125—a party vote. About thirty pairs were announced on this vote.

The question then recurred on the first resolution of the majority, declaring Chalmers not entitled to his seat. At first there was a disposition shown on the Democratic side to refrain from voting, and on the first roll call not more that twenty Democrats voted, among them Randall and House, Tucker, Carlisle and Holman. This, however, was enough to make a quorum, and upon the second roll call the remaining Democrats cast their votes in the negative. The resolution was adopted—yeas, 124; noes, 71.

The second resolution declaring Lynch entitled to the seat was agreed —yeas, 125; nays, 83.

Lynch then appeared at the bar of the House, escorted by Mr. Calkins, and the oath of office was administered him by the Speaker.

Judge Wylie quashed the indictments against Miss Armstrong, on the straw bond cases on the ground of misnomer. The prosecution gave notice of an intention to reindict her. Argument is now being heard on the motion to quash the indictment against Boone.

Representatives Kasson, Dunnell, Wilson and Belmont will constitute the sub-committee to take testimony in New York in the Chili-Peru investigation.

Judge McArthur set aside the verdict for $100,000 damages rendered in the Kilbourne case for false imprisonment on the ground of excessive damages, and gave each side twenty days in which to make further motions.

The public debt reduction during the past month was over $14,000,000, making the total reduction for the ten months of the fiscal year about $120,000,000, or nearly double that of the corresponding months last year. It would have been greater but for the decreased internal revenue receipts, caused by the agitation of the whisky tax question.

J. S. Mills makes an argument before the Finance Committee of the Senate to-morrow, opposing the extension of the bonded debt period. The friends of the bill, however, claim strength enough to pass it in the Senate. Mills favors a tax on the white wine vinegar men, as he claims they make a low grade of whisky.

Blaine's friends are enthusiastic over the result of his bout with the Foreign Affairs Committee, and say he is stronger for the Presidency than ever before. He goes to Maine soon to take an active hand in the canvass there, which has been one of the most important in the State for several years, as three Congressmen are to be elected at large, and a Legislature elected which will chose a Senator. Blaine will not be a candidate for the Senate, as he has found it not so pleasant a place as the House. He is doubtless massing strength for the race of 1884.

Comptroller Knox's letter to the Cincinnati National Bank, showing how it might reorganize by a roundabout process, causes much unfavorable comment among the opponents of the National Banking system. The discussion in the house this morning, on fixing the date for the consideration of the bill extending the charters of banks, showed much feeling on the subject, though more of the consistent Democrats, like Randall and others, admit that the system, with some amendments, is the best than can be had.

The debt reduction for the ten months of the fiscal year exceeds that of any previous full year. It will reach about $150,000,000 for the year.

A letter has been received from Captain Howgate, the escaped embezzler, by a friend here, asking for money for personal expenses. He says he expects to return when the Government is ready for trial. He says his health is improved, but he is as much a prisoner now as when in jail.

President Garrett, of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, who left yesterday for Chicago, will spend some weeks west, where he has not been for some years.

The friends of the Tariff bill have counted noses, and claim they will pass it by forty majority.

The Military Committee will hold a special meeting to-morrow to consider the bill for the compulsory retirement of army officers over 62 years of age. The committee have 400 private bills on their calendar, and in order to dispose of them, will ask leave to hold meetings during the sessions of the Senate.

Representative Hatch this afternoon got a bill through the House appropriating $75,000 for a public building at Hannibal, Mo.

Considerable feeling has arisen between Mr. Thomas, of Illinois, Chairman of the Committee on Levees and Improvement of the Mississippi river, and Mr. Gibson, of Louisiana, regarding the appropriation for the Mississippi, Thomas claiming that Gibson is favoring a clause which would prohibit the use of the funds for levees to protect lands from overflow. Gibson holds that the section of the River bill which he favors would not prohibit the use of the money for that purpose.

The Senate Finance Committee today decided to make a favorable report on Buckner's nomination, recommending that he be confirmed for Collector of Internal Revenue at Louisville, Kentucky.

The vote in the Senate Committee on Commerce to-day, on the nomination of Mr. Worthington for Collector of Customs at Boston, was as follows: For confirmation—McMillian, Conger and Jones, of Nevada, Republicans; Farley and Vest, Democrats. Against confirmation—Miller, of New York, and Kellogg, Republicans; Coke and Ransom, Democrats. Its said Kellogg voted "no" to oblige Senator Hoar, because of favors and assistance rendered him by Mr. Hoar when his (Kellog's) seat was contested.

Much interest is felt in whisky manufacturing circles in regard to Friday's meeting of the Senate Finance Committee on the bill extending the bonded period. Those best posted believe that in order to pass the bill and get the President's signature it will be necessary to amend it by at least reducing the amount allowed for "outage" and perhaps make other modifications.

Some of the strongest opponents of the Chinese bill say they believe the President will veto the bill as it passed the House last night; but it is generally believed he will concede something and sign it, rather than endanger the party's chances on the Pacific coast by further delay.

Archbishop Cocchie, of South America and the West Indies diocese, is here, en route to Rome, where he will urge the consolidation of all Catholic America under one head, and the removal of Papal residence to this country.

It is stated that the recent suit by parties against the old real estate pool shows that Kilbourne's refusal to produce the books to the committee in 1876 was for self-protection instead of the company's protection, as the entries in the books would have looked extremely bad for himself. Kilbourne will probably not get over $25,000 in the next suit.

Senator Voorhees is a good deal agitated over the talk floating about in the newspapers that parties have been trying to blackmail the whisky men, on the ground they could control votes in the Senate. A resolution of investigation will probably be offered in the Senate to see who these alleged blackmailers are.

It is announced by the Garfield Monument Commission that responses to their appeal have been so liberal as to warrant the assurance that their proposed work will be consummated, but subscription lists will be opened in every city and town in the United States on Decoration Day, May 30, in order to allow the general public to contribute to a more elaborate monument.

Captain George L. Browning, of the Seventh United States Infantry, died at Paris, yesterday.

The committee did not reach the question of compulsory retirement of army officers, but directed Senator Hawley to submit a resolution to formally and fully send that subject to the Military Committee, they deeming it a question that should go to that committee rather than the Appropriation Committee.

Catching a Rat, Under Difficulties.

Boston Globe.

A cat, a rat, a pretty and stylish young lady and an intrepid and valorous clerk form the dramatis personæ of this narrative. It all happened last week in one of the most fashionable shoe stores in this city, located on Washington street. For some time past the store has been troubled by an inroad of rats, causing great detriment to the stock and annoyance to the proprietor. A cat was then procured which at once began to catch them, to the great joy of all concerned. One day last week she brought up a vigorous rodent from the cellar and began to toy with it, before killing, after the manner of her kind. Suddenly it was discovered that it had made its escape, and almost simultaneously the persons in the store were startled by a feminine shriek emanating from a nice looking young lady who had been in the act of trying on a pair of boots. The look of horror and disgust on her face bore ample testimony to the truth of her assertion: "Oh, heavens! something has bitten me!" One of the clerks, a young man justly noted for his courtesy and gallantry to the fair sex, and whose identity will be effectually concealed under the name of Smith, sprang forward and grasped the lady's dress-skirt at a point she indicated just below the waist. It was the missing rat, who had there sought an asylum from his feline foe. Mr. Smith held him tightly and invited the lady to the rear of the store, where, with as much delicacy as the circumstances would permit, he removed his ratship from beneath the dress by the tail and dashed it on the floor. At this point the lady fainted from fright and nervous strain. By the kind attention of those present she was soon restored and able to depart, which she did, but not without first learning the name of her preserver. For a day or two after this Mr. Smith was subjected to a great variety of teasing remarks from his fellow clerks, some even asserting that he would now have rats caught and brought there, and other remarks equally ill-natured and unjustifiable. On the third day a large package was left at the store for Mr. Smith, who for a long time refused to open it, being appehensive that the aforesaid jokers had sent him a half-dozen rats of assorted sizes. His curiosity eventually triumphed over his fears, and amid great, though suppressed excitement on the part of all present, the package was opened and found to contain an elegant and costly cigar stand, fashioned in ebony and gilt. Thus were the foolish jesters silenced, and thus courtesy and daring rewarded.

Just in Time.

Detroit Free Press.

It was also an Ohio man, who, when a terrible storm set in one night, rushed into a house of a neighbor and cried out:

"Jones, this is the ending up of earth!"

"I'm afraid so—I'm afraid so!" was the reply.

"And what shall we do?"

"Make our peace with heaven."

The wind blew still stronger, the house began to shake, and the excited man exclaimed:

"Jones, you lost five bushels of wheat last Fall!"

"Yes."

"And you have your suspicions?"

"I have; the man who took my wheat had better own up."

"Can you forgive him?"

"I can."

"Well—"

Here the wind suddenly dropped, and after a look through the window, the conscience-stricken man turned and finished:

"Yes if I ever meet him I'll advise him to call around!"

POSITIVELY CURED BY

Benson's Capcine Porous Plasters.

Reasons Why they are Preferred to All Other Porous Plasters or External Remedies:

First.

Because they possess all the merit of the strengthening porous plaster, and contain in addition thereto the newly discovered powerful and active vegetable combination which acts with increased rubefacient, stimulating, sedative and counter irritant effects.

Second.

Because they are a genuine pharmaceutical preparation, and so recognized by the profession.

Third.

Because they are the only plasters that relieve pain at once.

Fourth.

Because they will positively cure diseases which other remedies will not even relieve.

Fifth.

Because over 5000 physicians and druggists have voluntarily testified that they are superior to all other plasters or medicines for external use.

Sixth.

Because the manufacturers have received the only medals ever given for porous plasters.

A CURIOUS strike is reported from Vienna. The beer drinkers of that easy going capital have determined to drink no more beer until the local brewers consent to revise their prices, which were lately raised without any satisfactory reason.

PETITIONS are being sent to congress to prevent the repeal of the tax on matches. These articles are so cheap that even with the tax on them they do not constitute a very heavy burden, and there are many who think, the reduction ought to begin at some other point.

IT has been demonstrated by a Detroit journal that Kernan, who, during the campaign of 1876, was deputy sub-assistant paragraphic fire-eater of the Okalona States, was paid for stirring up the northern heart by the Michigan republican committee.

IT is believed that over two thousand Indians, are on the war path in Wyoming territory, and fears are rife that further trouble may be expected. The military force in the territory is not large, but active measures are being taken to keep the trouble in check as far as possible. The outbreak in Arizona, is believed to be over.

A MEXICAN living at Jalisco in that country was found with some extra mules in his pasture last week. As some one was reported to have lost mules of that description, he was accused of the theft. This he stoutly denied, but to no purpose. He was taken out and shot by soldiers. Within two hours after his death it was found out that he was innocent.

JESSE JAMES' widow is out in a card, denying any connection with the proposed biography of her late husband. She insists that any book publisher, who says she is furnishing material or in any way helping to get up a life of Jesse James, states a falsehood.

HON. HORACE MAYNARD of Tennessee, died at his home in Knoxville last week, of heart disease. He had been a prominent man in public affairs for some years. The last public position he held was that of postmaster general at the close of Hayes' administration.

SOME one is sending us the Essex Eagle, a live nine column folio paper published at Lawrence Mass. It is unusually wide awake for a down east weekly, and is ably edited. Some one is entitled to our thanks for our friendly eastern visitor, but until more definite information, we can only thank him in a general way.

ONE of the Elkhart editors has been pluming himself on finding out that Mr. Stoll writes all the correspondence in the Monitor. He knew the composition, and all that sort of thing. The feeling of this astute editor may be imagined when Mr. Stoll makes the plain declaration that he never wrote a word of the articles named.

AMERICANS are pushing their trade in Australia, so successfully that many articles of British manufacture are entirely crowded out of the market. That is, we can compete in quality of goods, and in prices in that distant land, but need a tariff at home, to protect us against goods imported into this country from Great Britain. Tariff is a queer institution.

LAST Sunday evening Mr. Norman Beckley had a talk with parties in Wabash by telephone, a distance of 68 miles, after which there was a connection made between Goshen and Wabash via. Elkhart, a distance of 78 miles. Every word was distinctly understood by both parties, and a long social chat was had all around. Soon we may expect telephone communication with Indianapolis and other smaller places that may wish to communicate with Elkhart.—Elkhart Monitor.

THE Ohio "idea" has taken a new phase. It is in the line of temperance reform this time. At Cedarville in that state, a saloon keeper was blown out of his bed at an early hour last Thursday morning by a charge of dynamite that some hot headed temperance reformer had placed in the saloon. The moral of all this is that saloon men must sleep farther away from their places of business or else temperance men will have to adopt a more enlightened and humane way of dealing, with their erring neighbors.

THE astronomers of the Dudley observatory in Albany say that to keen-sighted persons the comet discovered March 18 will be in sight May 5, but to ordinary observers in will attract no attention till the middle and last of that month. In June it may be visible in daytime. Its greatest peculiarity is its very close approach to the sun. June 10 it will pass the perihelion and at that time will approach to within seven times the sun's own diameter from that body. Whatever its constituent parts the comet will then be larger in gaseous form.

DISPATCHES have reached this country, that Lieut. DeLong, the commander of the ill fated Jeannette, has been found. He and the ten men with him, all perished near the mouth of the Lena river. All their papers have been discovered. The third boat and its crew, under Lieut. Chip, has not yet been heard from. Two of DeLong's crew were saved when they first reached land. They were sent ahead to find some way to get to the inhabited part of the country, and fell in with some fishermen who took them to the settlements. These two men, with the boat's crew under Dannehauer, are probably all the lives saved from the unfortunate expedition.

THE Indianapolis Journal has the following savage article on the greenback people: "General J. B. Weaver has written a letter to Senator Vorhees, proposing a coalition between the democratic and greenback parties. The indecent, unprincipled, shameless, open trafficking in their votes and "honor" constantly carried on by the leaders of the so-called greenback party is a scandal that would be infamous, if it were not so amusing. There has never been a day since the greenback party was formed that the men who assumed to lead it were not in the market. They could always be bought by either party that would give the price asked. Let the democratic party have the monopoly of all negotiations." After reading such articles as the above, we do not wonder that so little love is lost between nationals and the republican party.

A MAN named Newton, living at Philadelphia, has originated a new plan for dealing with Indians. It certainly has its good points. This new departure can be stated in brief as follows: The government shall keep faith with the Indians. All intruders shall be rigorously excluded from the Indian Territory. The semi-civilized tribes shall govern themselves and regulate their own land tenure. Laws shall be administered through department orders, for the protection of life and property, and an efficient Indian police maintained. Indian agents are to have permanent positions and liberal salaries, and to be under the control of an Indian department, which is to be a separate branch of the government. Paid inspectors of the agencies, unconnected with the department, shall be appointed by the president. No liquor, but a limited supply of arms and ammunition, and no privileged persons to be allowed on the reservation. The entire reservation population to be educated—the children taught trades in manual labor schools. The lands on the reservation to be divided in severalty as the exigencies, demand, and made inalienable and non-taxable for a fixed period. Any surplus lands to be sold for the benefit of the whole tribe. Government lands outside the reservation are to be granted in severalty to all Indians who will cultivate them.

LORD FREDERICK CAVENDISH chief secretary of the British government in Ireland, and Mr. Burke assistant secretary, were brutally murdered in the streets of Dublin, on Sunday last in broad daylight and on the public street. The crime was committed with such suddeness, that the murderers escaped. Great excitement prevails all over the Kingdom.

tf. MRS. W. P. MYERS.

—Ben Goodman: "Oh, say, John Weaver, who did you say has been down at Charley Hoff's house and took the measure for his roof, with the intention of putting it on?"

"Well, Ben, I should say you ought to know from past experience. No, did he think he was going to put on this roof?"

"Well, John, whenever they come again without authority, let them put it on and I will collect it at his expense."

GREENBACK SPEECH.—There will be a greenback meeting in Auburn, on Saturday of this week. Hon. H. Z. Leonard, who is candidate for secretary of state on the national ticket, will address the people on subjects of interest.

DIED—At his home in Butler township, Marshall Keeran, aged 40 years, 6 months and 20 days.

The deceased was born in Newton township Licking county, Ohio, Oct. 10, 1841, and moved to Indiana in May 1848, where he lived with his parents most of the time. For many years he has suffered from liver and pulmonary afflictions rendering him unfit for arduous labor. Thus with a slighted and gloomy prospect before him, the dread disease taking a firmer grasp each succeeding day, death came at last on Sunday morning, April 30, 1882, and on Tuesday, May 2, he was followed to the tomb by a large concourse of relatives and friends. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. Cook.

DIED.—April 29, 1882, Mrs. Lydia A. Heitz, aged thirty-four years, ten months and fourteen days.

She was married to John H. Heitz February 7, 1869, in Butler township, DeKalb county, Indiana, where they have resided until her death. She was the mother of five children, three of whom survive her. She united with the Methodist church twelve years ago last winter, and remained a devoted Christian until called from labor to rest. She was a loving companion, and affectionate mother and a kind neighbor, and loved by all who knew her, as was attested by the large concourse of friends who followed her to her last resting place.

Final Settlement Notice.

Notice is hereby given to the creditors, heirs and legatees of Sarah A. McClure, deceased, to appear in the DeKalb circuit court, held at Auburn, Indiana, on the 27th day of May, 1882, and show cause, if any, why the Final Settlement Accounts with the estate of said decedent should not be approved; and said heirs are notified to then and their make proof of heirship, and receive their distributive shares.

Witness, The clerk of said court, this 5th day of May, 1882. JOHN W. BAXTER, Clerk.
19-2w.

Liquor License.

Notice is hereby given to the citizens of the town of Auburn, DeKalb county, Indiana, that the undersigned will make application to the board of commissioners of said county, at their next regular session, to be held at the court-house in said county, commencing on Monday, the 5th day of June, 1882, for a license to sell spiritous, vinous and malt liquors in less quantities than a quart at a time, with the privilege of having the same drank on the premises where sold. The premises on which I desire to sell are located as follows: Commencing at the southeast corner of lot number 27, in the original plat of the town of Auburn, DeKalb county, Indiana, running thence west 23¼ feet, thence north to Sixth street, thence east 23¼ feet, thence south along the line of said lot number 27, to the place of beginning.

THOMAS SOMERS.

Notice of Administration.

Notice is hereby given, that the undersigned has been appointed by the clerk of the DeKalb circuit court of the state of Indiana, administrator of the estate of George Clark, deceased, late of said county.

Said estate is supposed to be solvent.

WASHINGTON TEETERS,
Administrator.
May 5, 1882.
W. H. Dills attorney for estate. 16-3w

By order of the judge of the DeKalb circuit court, the stallions belonging to the estate of George Clark, deceased, will continue at the same stands and on the same terms and conditions as directed by said Clark in his lifetime.

W. TEETERS, Administrator.
May 6, 1882.

—The tinner who has had "twenty-five years experience" in the work and "knows just how to do it," may be all right from his standpoint, but Ben Goodman says you can bet your bottom dollar, that when I have had twenty-five years experience, I will know how to do the work my own way and not try to imitate any of my competitors. I have not done it yet, and never expect to copy from any one.

—The ladies of the Presbyterian social will give a strawberry and May festival in a short time, when a good time may be expected.

—A small republican caucus was held at the court house gate Tuesday evening and Harry Weamer's voice could be plainly distinguished above all others.

—J. B. Lanning was in town Saturday. We are glad to learn that he is having a good run of business at Moor's Station, where he is now doing business.

—Jake McGinness, the good looking auctioneer from Jackson township, was in town Tuesday. He has been running a brick yard for parties in Spencerville.

—O. P. Smith, R. M. Lockhart, S. Z. Dickinson and others, whose names we did not learn, came over from Waterloo, Saturday, to attending the temperance meeting.

—The friends of Mr. Jack Little and lady are invited to call at his father's residence and extend the hand of welcome usually given upon an occasion of that kind.

—Mr. A. Obendorf, one of our enterprising young teachers, made us a friendly call a few days ago. Though recently from Ohio he is fast making acquaintances and friends.

—A fellow craftsman refers B. F. Goodman to a tin shop at Fort Wayne, and if he does not care to act wrongfully to his "working chums" he will certainly "cheese the racket."

—Edward Baker is making substantial improvements on his residence near the Jackson depot. It will not look like the same place when he has finished his contemplated changes.

—Frank Zimmerman has given his house and barn a fresh coat of paint. If any one wishes to see a nice job as well as a fine residence it will pay to take a walk in that direction.

—A glance at the contents of Ochs' store will settle the matter. Business is business and every man should go where he can get the most for the money he has to invest. Cut this out and keep it.

—Frank Latson works for Charley Pommert. The two make a good pair and those of our citizens who want a first-class shave or hair cut should call in. Rooms next to Braun's meat market, Seventh street.

—The firm of McQuiston & Long are having their delivery wagon repaired over—it wasn't large enough to deliver the goods that their trade demands. This is no ff. local.

—We were shown some early rose potatoes at McQuiston & Long's that are the nicest we ever saw. They have 500 bushel all of a bright color and extraordinary size, and no better ones could be found for eating or planting.

—Township institutes are again at work. No better indications need be given that our educational interests will be carefully watched than is to be found in the interest shown by teachers and parents in the institute work.

—While strolling through the court house we came across deputy clerk James Baxter and struck him for an item or two. Jim. is a wholesouled fellow, stands "high in his boots," and will not be forgotten by the COURIER boys.

—At last we have teachers enough to fill all the schools. The last districts began their spring term on Monday of this week. Let us have some good Normal schools again this summer and this scarcity of teachers will soon be over.

—Just received at McQuiston & Long's four hundred bushels early rose potatoes.

—J. J. Martin takes his final departure from his home at the Junction this week, having removed his family to Albion. It is with many regrets that we see him go, as no better citizen ever resided in Auburn.

—The newly elected marshal gives indications of being a good officer, but then there is nothing astonishing about this as straight democrats, who have the confidence of the party, always make good officers.

—T. C. Mays has one of his characteristic and chatty letters in this issue of the COURIER. It will seem natural to the people of this county to read Tom's articles once more and will revive many pleasant memories.

DRESS MAKING.—Mrs. Dr. Sebring and her niece have located in the rooms over Mrs. Clock's millinery store where they expect to carry on the business of dressmaking. They expect to do first-class work and a share of public patronage is solicited.

—Luther Roth died Monday afternoon of consumption. There have been several in the family who have met death with the same disease. Luther was a steady, temperate young man and leaves many friends who regret his untimely death.

NORMAL SCHOOL.—Mr. Harrison, so long connected with the public schools of Auburn, will open a Normal school here, beginning Monday, August 7, and continuing eight weeks. Any further information can be had by applying to him at this place.

—C. P. Glasier, road superintendent of Jackson township, was in town last week. He is entering on the duties of his office with great earnestness, John Weaver, in the west part of the township and Henry Hines in the east, have been appointed assistants.

—The temperance meeting held here last Saturday completed its organization by electing a permanent president, vice presidents, secretaries, and committeemen for each township. We did not receive the report in time to give it in full, but understand the meeting was quite an interesting one.

—Auburn can boast of a first-class carriage manufactory. Obe Cool is at the head of it and his ability for enterprise cannot be questioned. He is turning out nice nobby buggies made of good material for about the same as a "Cincinnati" can be purchased for. The works are located on Eight street.

—By a private letter we learn that all the teachers of the Garrett school have been engaged for the next year. As this action of the school board was unanimous it speaks well for the work done by the teachers during the past year. School closes for this year, on May 12. C. M. Merica is principal, while T. S. Merica, Miss Emma Mills and Miss Maggie Dolan are assistants.

—A. J. Little, jr., and Miss Mary Pitcher were married at her home near Bellvue, Ohio, yesterday. Jack, as he is familiary known, is a first-class printer, now engaged on the Toledo Daily Telegram at which place he will make his home. He was for some time foreman of the COURIER and left with much regret upon the part of the entire force. We hope their lives will be pleasant and prosperous, and that no obstacles will come in their way to check them from traveling smoothly along the rugged path of life.

—Our young friend Frank Lees had a narrow escape from this "world's good," last week, at Kingston, Ill. The train, in which he is express messenger, ran off the track hurting him badly but not seriously. Many thoughts pass through the mind at a time like that—the weeping of a father and mother, (another fellow's daughter) brothers, sisters and friends, never to see the old home again and many things that we might call fresh to our memory. Together with his comrads we are thankful that his injuries are light and may the misfortune never happen him again.

—We have received the May number of the Original English Chatterbox from the American publishers, Messrs. Estes & Lauriat, Boston, Mass. This is the children's magazine, par excellence; containing 32 pages, and 16 full page illustrations each month. It has more than a million readers in England and America. For one dollar sent by a new subscriber they will send, postpaid, Chatterbox for one year and a beautiful steel engraving of a little girl puzzling over her first sum, and entitled "Ought and Carry One." The engraving is 18x24 inches, and sells for $3.00, thus giving every new subscriber $4.00 worth for $1.00.

—A thoroughbred bum named Williams, known well at this place as a writing school teacher, while on a drunk was making arrangements with an ignorant old man living near Huntertown to deliver a temperance lecture there for his board and the proceeds of the collection. A loan of a little money was his object, and whether he succeed ed or not we do not know. However, as long as temperance and religious people uphold reformed gamblers, reformed drunkards, reformed clowns and many other kind of reformers who tell the people what mean, low debased characters they have been, just so long these people will get left. The strange part of it is that they board, clothe and pay them for such work while at the same time they know that they are doing wrong "in the sight of men."

Birthday Party.

May 3d the friends and relatives of A. J. Carmer and wife visited them for the purpose of celebrating the fiftieth birthday of Mrs. Elizabeth Carmer. By one o'clock p. m. forty or fifty persons were present, and by request Chas Eckhart, on behalf of friends and relatives, presented the following articles: Folding chair to A. J. Carmer, hanging lamp, two sets of glass ware, gold collar pin, cake and fruit dishes and other valuable presents to Mrs. E. Carmer. Mr. Carmer and wife, in a few appropriate remarks, acknowledged the receipt of the above, after which the friends were invited to the dining room where refreshments were served in first-class style. After dinner all had a good social time. The father of Mrs. Carmer—John U. Ashleman—moved to this county from Ohio about forty years ago. There are nine children, Mrs. Carmer being the oldest and Mrs. Saxton the youngest. Up to the present time death has not visited this family, which is very remarkable. The following persons were present: Moses Ashleman and wife, Wm. Ashleman and wife, Christopher Ashleman and wife, Charles Eckhart and wife, Mrs. Mary Raut, Mrs. Ragina Weaver, Mrs. Annie Walker, Mrs. Rosa Saxton, Wm. Carmer and wife, Frank Thomas and wife, C. P. Coleman and wife, James Coleman and wife, Wm. Demanville and wife, Daniel Krum and wife, Fred. Krum and wife, Mrs. A. Moser. In addition to the above, there were fifteen or twenty children belonging to various members of the family. This occasion will be remembered for a long time, and it is hardly probable that such a meeting will take place again, where the whole family can be present. However, we trust that many such meetings may be enjoyed in the future. C.

Sunday-School Institute.

The Sunday-school institute of Richland and Fairfield townships met at Sedan, Indiana, April 29, 1882, at nine o'clock a. m. Devotional exercises conducted by Henry Seiler, of Fairfield; welcome address by Joseph Raab. Three topics pertaining to the Sunday-school work were taken up and discussed by Rev. L. Harding, of Corunna, Rev. S. Kelso and James Griswold, of Auburn, followed by volunteer speeches and songs, which occupied the time until about twelve o'clock, when a recess of one hour was taken. During this time tables were prepared and furnished with the good things of the land, by the citizens of Sedan and vicinity, and all were invited to partake without price or money.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Prayer by Rev. J. H. Paschal, Rev. A. R. Shaffer, of Waterloo, then took up the subject assigned to him. J. H. Pascall was next called on to fill his part of the programe. Mrs. T. L. Hines, of Sedan, then used one-half hour in teaching a normal class. The question box was then opened containing twenty questions which were then read from the stand and answered by members of the society. Written reports of six schools in Richland township were read and handed in. These showed a corps of 37 officers, 24 teachers and an average attendance of 257 scholars. Fairfield S. S. was reported to be in a good condition. The association then determined to hold their annual pic-nic at Showers' Corners, June 10th, 1882. Dismissed by the benediction.

The question is often asked, "How can we keep the boys on the farm?" That old veteran farmer and bee keeper, John Menser, has answered the question pretty effectually by giving his boys a part of his lands to work with the understanding that they are to have it after his death.

How things change! A few years ago the idea of a county central committee appointing delegates to all the district conventions would not have been entertained for a moment. Whose representatives are those delegates? Are they to represent the central committee or the people of the township? If the people, have they been consulted? When was the power conferred on the committee to appoint delegates or the duty imposed on it? Does not the action of the committee violate the very first principle of democracy? If the action of the committee is unauthorized, are democrats in any way bound by it? The action of the committee seems strange to an old democrat, and I ask the question because I want to know. F. OUR RAILROADS.

He stood in the station; she at his side,
(She his fair, young, blushing bride;
For their honeymoon they're starting now;
It always follows the marriage vow.
She looks at the flaring railroad maps,
At the train of cars and his baggage traps,
And whispers, "Pettie, how shall we go—
By the Kankakee or the Kokomo?"

"These railroad maps confuse the eye;
There's the C B Q and the R N Y.,
And this one says your life is at stake
On any road but the Slaye Blue Lake,
The N E R L P Q J.
Have sleepers on the entire way;
But I've heard these trains are much more slow
Than the Kankakee or the Kokomo."

She murmured, "Sweetie, I've heard pa say
What a fine old road is the P G E,
But mamma seemed to disagree,
And prefers the X S H O P.
On the Texas-Cowboy Mustang line;
But still, perhaps, we'd better go
On the Kankakee or the Kokomo."

A conductor chanced to pass them by,
And the bridegroom caught his gentle eye;
He said, "Oh, man with the cap of blue,
Inform me quick, inform me true,
Which road is best for a blushing, pure,
Young, timid bride on her wedding tour?
And tell us quickly what you know
Of the Kankakee and the Kokomo."

The conductor's eyes gave a savage gleam,
These words rolled out in a limped stream:
"There's the A B J D V R Z,
Connects with the Flip-Flap-Biff-Bang-B,
You can change on the Leg-off-Sueville Grand,
And go through on the Pan-cake-Ace-Full-Hand,
That road you named is blocked by snow,
(The Kankakee and the Kokomo.)

"The Pennsylvania, Pittsburg Through,
Connects with the Oshkosh Kalamazoo,
With a smoking car all afternoon,
Just the think for a honeymoon,
And the Central Scalp Tooth Bungville Switch
Goes through a vine-clad country rich.
Of the road you named I nothing know,
The Kankakee and the Kokomo.

The bride said: "Baby, 'tis best by far
Like the dollar, we return to pa,
(That's a pun I heard while on a train
On the U R F G Jersey main,)
The conductor smiled; his eye-teeth showed,
He had spoiled the trade of a rival road,
He knew in his heart there was no show
On the Kankakee and the Kokomo,

And the bride and groom returned to pa,
Who heard it all and then said 'Pshaw!
If you found that you couldn't go that way,
Why didn't you go on the Cross-eyed-Bay?'
The bridegroom gave a howl of pain;
The railroad names had turned his brain.
He raves, insane, for ever more,
In a mad-house, chained unto the floor,
He gibbers, "Tootsie, shall we go
By the Kankakee or the Kokomo!"

A BRAVE IRISH BOY.

A STORY OF KENTUCKY.

In the month of May, 1864, a boy of fifteen, with a small bundle under his arm, might have been seen walking wearily over a rough Kentucky road. His hair was brown, his eyes were gray, and there was a good humored expression on his broad Celtic face, for our hero was an Irish boy, who had gone out into the world to seek his fortune.

"Where will I sleep to-night:" was the thought of Pat Roach, for that was his name. "Last night I slept on the ground, and it's stiff I was this morning."

At this moment his eyes fell upon a large and imposing mansion, on a little eminence to the right.

"Maybe they'll let me sleep in the barn," he thought. "Anyhow I will give them the chance."

He turned into the front gate and walked up to the front door and knocked, for there was no bell.

The door was opened by a colored woman.

"Well, child, what do you want?" she asked not unkindly.

"Can you let me sleep in the barn?" asked Pat.

"What does the boy want, Chloe?" asked a young lady who had just entered from the broad hall.

"He wants to sleep in the barn, Miss Jennie."

The young lady came forward and looked pleasantly at the boy.

"What is your name?" she asked.

"Pat Roach, Miss."

"Where are you going?"

"To seek my fortune, Miss."

"Haven't you a home?"

"Yes, Miss, but there's more of us than father can keep, and I am the oldest. So I am going out for myself."

"Where did you sleep last night?"

"On the ground."

"That was a pity. You didn't enjoy, did you?"

"Not much," answered Pat, shrugging his shoulders. "It was cheap."

"I suppose you havn't much money?" said the young lady, smiling.

"Not a cent, Miss."

"Have you had any supper?"

"Yes, Miss, I,ve had a cracker."

"You must still be hungry?"

"Try me and see," said Pat, drolly.

"I will, said the young lady, smiling. "Chloe, take the boy into the kitchen and give him a good supper."

"And may I sleep in the barn afterward, Miss?"

"No, but you may sleep in the house. Chloe let him occupy the little back room on the second floor." Thank you, Miss, said Pat gratefully. "It will be a fine thing to sleep in a real bed again."

Chloe was well disposed to second the benevolent intentions of her young mistress. She gave Pat the best meal he had eaten for months, and drew out the boy's story, which Pat was quite ready to tell. In return she told the boy that the estate was owned by Mrs. Stanton, and her daughter, who were left wealthy by the late Mr. Stanton, who had died during the last year. Besides her self there was a man-servant, but he was lying sick with fever.

"You'd better hire me," suggested Pat, "while he's sick."

"You can't do a man's work, chile."

"Try me and see," said Pat. "I can ate a man's supper, anyhow."

"You're right there, honey," said Chloe, showing her teeth.

A little after eight o'clock, Pat, being fatigued with his long tramp, went to bed and was soon fast asleep. Mrs. Stanton and her daughter sat in a room on the second floor, one working and the other reading aloud, when the daughter approaching the window descried to her alarm, a company of ten men, approaching the house.

At this time it was not uncommon for small roving bands, passing themselves off as Confederate soldiers, but really only robbers, intent upon plunder, to scour the country, forcing their entrance into lonely houses, and carrying off whatever of value they found.

Now it happened that Mrs. Stanton, who had recently received a large payment, had no less than two thousand dollars in Northern greenbacks in her house, and these she feared would be discovered in ransacking the house, and carried off. This money was uppermost in her mind and that of her daughter.

"What shall we do with the money, Jennie?" she asked in a tone of distress. "Where can we hide it?"

"I know of no safe place. The house will be thoroughly searched."

"But I can't afford to lose it," said Mrs. Stanton in dismay.

"Give it to me, mother. I have thought of a way of saving it. There may be some risk about it but it may do."

"From a bureau drawer the mother took a roll of large bills, and with trembling hands delivered it to her daughter.

"What are you going to do, Jennie?"

"I will tell you afterwards. Now there is no time."

The young lady summoned Chloe, briefly explained her purpose, and proceeded to the room occupied by Pat Roach.

Pat awoke, on being shaken, and stared in surprise at his visitors.

"What's wanted?" he asked.

"Are you an honest boy? Can I trust you? asked the young lady abruptly.

"I never stole a cent in my life," said Pat proudly.

"I will trust you, then," said Jennie briefly. There are some robbers approaching the house, who will carry off all they can find. Now we have $2,000 in the house."

"Two thousand dollars!" ejaculated Pat in amazement.

"Yes. The only place they won't think of searching is in your pocket. Dress as quickly as possible, and put this money in your pocket."

"Yes, Miss; what will I do then?"

"These men will probably stay all night. Early in the morning—before sunrise—you must leave the house and stay away till ten or eleven o'clock. Chloe will give you some food to take with you. Do you understand?"

"Yes, Miss."

By ten probably those men will be gone, and you can bring the money back."

"Yes, Miss. I'll bring it back faithfully." Loud knocks were heard at the door, and the two hurried away. Opening the front door they confronted the troop of marauders.

"What do you want at this late hour?" asked Jennie.

"Supper and shelter for the night," answered the leader.

"Who are you, sir?"

"Captain Jones, of the Confederate army."

"Why are you away from the main army, sir?"

"That's my business," answered the so-called Capt. Jones, impudently.

"If you insist upon entering, you must, but we object to turning our house into a camp."

"Can't help it, Miss. It's one of the necessities of war. File in men."

Chloe was obliged to produce from the pantry all the cooked food in the house, and the men did justice to it. Jennie Stanton remained up feeling in no humor to go to bed. When the repast was over, Captain Jones said:

"Miss Stanton, I learn you have a large sum of money in the house. We must have it."

"What, would you plunder us?" asked the young lady indignantly.

"We don't take it for ourselves, it is for the cause," said the leader hypocritically. "You may as well bring it at once and save the trouble of a search. You can't deny that the money was paid you last Monday."

"I don't deny it," said the young lady intrepidly, "but it has already passed out of my possession."

"I don't believe it," said the Captain looking very much disappointed.

"Then you may search the house," said Jennie, outwardly bold, but inwardly trembling, lest the money be discovered.

"I will," said Captain Jones. "Of course where such a large sum of money is concerned we can not trust the word of any one."

"Very well, sir, proceed. Chloe go with these gentlemen."

She slipped away to inform her mother of what she had done, and put her on her guard.

In the course of their search they came to Pat's room.

"Who sleeps here?" asked the leader.

"A poor Irish boy who asked for a lodging."

"Let me see him."

The door was thrown open, and Pat stared at his new visitor.

"What is your name, boy?" asked Jones.

"Pat Roach."

"Do you live here?"

"No, sir; the ladies let me sleep here to-night. They gave me a good supper besides."

"Where are you traveling?"

"In seeking my fortune."

"Are these your clothes?"

"Yes, sir."

To Chloe's great alarm, Capt. Jones took up Pat's poor garments, and thrust his hands into the pockets. But she need not have been alarmed. Pat had taken out the bills, and put them under the sheet upon which he was lying. Only a cent was found in the pockets.

"You are not very rich," said Jones.

Pat laughed.

"If I was, what would I be seeking my fortune for?" he answered.

"There's nothing here," said Jones unsuspiciously.

The search continued, and a few articles of small value were discovered but the great prize was not to be found. Capt. Jones concluded that Miss Stanton was right after all, and contented himself with what he had found.

About four o'clock in the morning Pat was called by Chloe, who gave him some provisions in a paper, and let him out.

"You'll come back?"

"Never fear," said Pat.

About nine o'clock Jones and his party, after an ample breakfast, left the house. Still Mrs. Stanton felt nervous and anxious about the money.

"Jennie," she said, "that boy will never come back."

"I think he will mother.

"It was a crazy idea trusting a poor Irish boy, whom we had never seen before last night with so large a sum."

"It was the only thing we could do, mother. If we lose it, it will be no worse than having Capt. Jones take it."

"Two thousand dollars will be a great temptation to a boy like that."

"Mother, I like the boy's face, and I will stake a great deal on his honesty."

"When you have lived as long as I have, Jennie, you won't be so ready to trust a stranger. Why, the boy is only a tramp."

"Even a tramp may be honest." Mrs. Stanton sighed.

"Depend upon it," she said, "we shall never see the money again."

Two hours passed. It was after eleven, and still nothing was to be seen of Pat. The young lady herself grew nervous. After all, perhaps her mother was right.

But at half-past eleven there was a knock at the door. It was opened, and there stood Pat.

"Have you got the money" asked Chloe breathlessly.

"Every dollar of it," said Pat promptly.

"What made you stay so long?"

Pat explained that he had met Capt. Jones and his men, who made him black all their boots, and thus detained him an hour. For this service they gave him a five-dollar Confederate note, which was far from being extravagant renumeration for his labor, depreciated as it was.

"He didn't think I had such a pile of money in my pocket," chukled Pat. "I could have paid him better for blacking my boots."

"Did you come here directly after you left him?"

"No, Miss, I didn't dare, for fear he would suspect something. I came as soon as I could. Here,s the money, and I'll bid you good-by."

Jennie said a few words to her mother. Then she turnde to Pat.

"How would you like to live with us?" She asked.

"Tip-Top!" answered Pat promptly.

Then you shall do so. You shall not be wholly a servant, but we will see that you are educated and prepared for a good position hereafter. You have shown yourself worthy of confidence, and will find us not ungrateful."

So Pat found a home and friends. He had sought his fortune and found it. He is now a prosperous and triving man, and has been able to provide for his parents, and help along his younger brothers and sisters. Had he abused the confidence reposed in him and carried off the two thousand dollars, it is hardly likely that his future would have been as bright.

An Honest Man.

Detroit Free Press.

One day in the years agone a stranger arrived at Dearborn, in this county, and inquired for a citizen commonly known as Uncle Ike. The old man was soon found in a grocery, and after the usual "how-de-do" the stranger said:

"Do I addres Uncle Ike Barlow?"

"You dew," was the reply.

"Well, my name is Thorburn, of Ann Arbor."

"Jess so."

"They tell me that you are a great horse trader."

"Wall, I dew make a trade now and then. What ye got?"

"I've got a horse I brought along on purpose to trade with you. Let us first understand each other. You are a member of the church?"

"Y-e-s; I expect I be."

"Then of course I shall expect you to to be honest with me. I've been looking at your old nag over there by the post. How old is he?"

"That 'ere hoss," slowly replied Uncle Ike as he puckered his lips and squinted his left eye—"let's see—let's see! Wall now, I quite forgit whether he is 9 or 10 years old, but wee'l say 10.

"Uncle Ike, isn't that horse all of 20 years old? Come now, as a member of the church, give me an honest answer."

"Look a-here, mister," said the old man, after a strong gaze at the stranger, "I never trade horses but one way."

"How's that?,,

"When I'm buying of a hoss I'm a purty good member of the church. When I'm a-selling of a hoss I rekon on skipping two prayer meetings. When I'm a trading hosses then I calkerlate on backsliding altogether for a hull month, or until I know the victim won't begin no law suit. Now, stranger, that's me, and if you have come to trade hosses don't reckon that Matthew, Mark, Luke or John ever writ a line advising a church member to come right down and give away the ringbones on his own anamile!"

The History of Tomato Canning.

New York Sun.

In 1850 H. W. Crosby was steward in Lafayette college, Pennsylvania. He began stewing tomatoes. The putting up of meat in cans suggested to him that tomatoes might be safely and securely canned in a similar fashion. He put up seven cans and brought them to this city. Mr. Crosby left a can with each of the principal hotel-keepers here in 1851. They expressed their satisfaction with the sample. In 1852 he put up 1,000 cans, and found some difficulty in getting rid of them. They were sold by wholesale at $3,50 per dozen and by retail at fifty cents a can. Crosby sent some to the president, through Senator Broadhead, during the holidays of 1853. The publication of the fact that tomatoes were preserved in cans in good condition at Christmas helped sale wonderfully, and the demand became firm. The number of cans prepare last year was 36,771,600 and the brought $3,381,870 to packers. Ther are now more than 250 factories, in a the states, engaged in packing for the market.

Claim Allowed After Twenty Years

Janesville (Wis) Gazette

At the siege of Vicksburg, in 1863, Colonel Britton had the misfortune to have a horse killed, and applied to the Government for pay for his loss, the horse being his private property. The necessary papers and vouchers were forwarded to Washington and placed in the hands of a claim agent. Time flew on, the war closed, and no word of settlement of the claim was received by the Colonel, and he finally gave up all hope of receiving pay for the animal. To his great surprise he received a letter from the national capital conveying the intelligence that his claim had been allowed, but that he would have to wait until next December for his pay, as a bill would have to be presented to Congress for an appropriation to pay his claim, and it could not be reached before that time. The Colonel is well satisfied, and the matter of waiting six months for the settlement of an account twenty years old will not make any difference with his financial business.

LIVING CURIOS.

The Demand and Supply of Giants, Midgets—Preferring Rural Wanderings to a Sedentary City Life—Snake Charmers and Wild Men.

New York Mail

This is the time when the circus managers complete their arrangements for the spring and summer season with human curiosities. The freaks of nature become restless in anticipation of saw dust rings and side shows, as they prefer to travel with a circus to staying at stationary museums, because larger salaries are given them, their hotel bills are paid by the management, the fat woman rides in a hack instead of a street car, enjoying, as she enters, the expression which mantles cabby's face. He little dreamed, probably, what was before him when he contracted to convey the fat woman to the show, from her hotel to the tent for two circus tickets. Woe to the vehicle if she takes her seat energetically. The Albino looks to his better advantage as his fair skin and pink eyes receive the light of the matinee sunbeams dancing through the openings in the canvas. The Circassian girl, her hair freshly brushed with sour beer, lays in a new supply of powdered chalk and rouge, and with beating heart contemplates the havoc she will create in the rural breast. The giant can pick cherries along the country roads without borrowing ladders from the farmers, or amuse themselves by lifting the rustic lassies from the ground with agility. As there is usually but one set of human curiosities in each circus, considerable competition exists among these freaks of nature. There is, for instance, but one giant, one fat woman, one Circassian girl, one brace of dwarfs, male and female, etc. The knowing curiosities generally wait to the last and take up with the smaller shows, preferring money to notoriety, something which they probably have already gained.

The large show, pay smaller salaries than their diminutive competitors, because, as the managers of the former claim, they partly pay the exhibits by giving them a chance to become famous. This season circus managers are very anxious to obtain fine specimens of abnormal developments and other things of that sort, the success of the museum on Broadway and those in Brooklyn and elsewhere having demonstrated that the people are just as anxious to obtain a fat woman as a thin acrobat, a female skeleton as an elephant. Formerly the circus relied upon the the huge crude paintings placed at the entrance of the side show to attract the public eye, but during the past few years the giant has been honored with eight-foot paper posters, his cuts have disgraced the columns of the rural press, while lithographs of the bearded woman, or wild men of Borneo, are placed side by side with those of Edwin Booth or Clara Morris in the town shop windows, and we may see the melancholy eye of Anna Dickinson trying to decipher the hieroglyphic countenance of the What Is It. There is something else which cheers the human curiosities. The supply of them does not meet the demand, and the salaries have consequently incarased. Indeed, circuses have depleted many of the museums of their giants, bearded woman, etc., causing museum managers to seek new fields, and to substitute for fat woman and living male skeletons such attractions as a tattooed lady, long-haired damsels, female phantoms and electric boys. Thus necessity is the mother of invention, even in the show business. To show the value of metropolitan notoriety to living curiosities, it may be instanced that Cheemah, the Chinese dwarf, and Bruestand, the Norwegian giant, were imported to this country at a cost of $75 per week. At the conclusion of their short contract with Bunnell they were engaged by a circus man and paid $200 apiece. The famous living skeleton, who up to this year never received a higher salary than $40 a week, now grows fat on double that amount. But notwithstanding the prosperity of human curiosities, there is nothing on record to prove that a female skeleton ever became an attraction as a fat woman. There is but one genuine Hindoo snake charmer in America, yet every show has its snake enchantress. A boa-constrictor, usually kept in a blue box with a glass top, is looked after generally by a fat woman or Circassian girl, who handles the snakes without extra pay. Her only danger is from constriction, but the only boa is almost invariably too delicate to "constrict."

THE SALARIES PAID TO FREAKS OF NATURE.

The pay of fat women runs from $15 to $75 per week, according to weight and personal beauty. There is one attraction in the business who, in addition to being a fat woman, is besides a bearded lady, and also charms the snake. Her salary is the smallest in the show, because she is cross-eyed. The highest price paid to a fat woman is received by Hanna Battersby. Her face is very pretty, and she weighs 790 pounds. Her height is six feet. She has, however, a dangerous rival in the fifteen-year-old giantess, Jessie Warner, who now tilts the beam at 500 pounds and stands six feet four inches. The ever increasing thirst of the public for novelties has made museum managers send into the wilds of Africa and to the out-of-the way islands of the Pacific for interesting samples of humanity, to whom they have to offer special inducements to come to this country. A band of Zulus recently exhibited in this city costs $400 per week and expenses. This line of curiosities is different from home monstrosities, inasmuch as the longer they stay here the less their salaries grow. In other words, a savage ceases to attract quicker than armless, legless men or a five-legged calf. The highest salaries paid to giants go to Captain Bates and wife, who are eight feet high. They are very wealthy, and it is difficult to get them to exhibit themselves. They will sometimes, however, stand before the vulgar gaze at $500 per week and expenses on short contracts. Within recent years the Tom Thumb school of dwarfs has been replaced to a great extent by the Midgets. The two which attracted so much attention at Masonic Hall received together $500 per week. Dudley Foster, the five pound midget, though only ten years old, gives his parents $100 every Saturday. Two-headed girls are extremely rare and are worth $600 per week and expenses. Their rarity makes them very conservative and sensitive as to bogus two-headed curiosities. Giants are very sensitive, also, and a seven-foot five-inch man has been known to cry like a baby because the printer cut off one inch from his stature.

The Vaccine Farms.

Philadelphia Record.

Probably the largest vaccine farm in the United States, is that of the New England Company, which is located at Chelsea, Mass. Its product is prepared for the physician's use in different ways. The one most generally in use is an ivory point tipped with virus. Another is a vial containing lymph which has been treated by a process of brine to keep it in a fresh condition, and by means of which physicians are enabled to charge their own points. A third method is a small glass cone covered with a button-shaped lump of dried matter. This can be filed off by the doctors to the amount required, and after being dissolved in a little matter is ready for the blank point. The "buttons" can be kept in a perfect condition for months, and the plan is a great convenience to doctors residing in rural districts where the ordinary points are not easily accessible, as the whole arrangement, which can be carried in the vest pocket, is available at all hours, and in all places. Heavy daily consignments of this New England virus, in its different forms, are being received daily at Eighth and Walnut streets, but they are not enough to supply the demand. In one large drug store 3,500 points were sold in one day before 3 p. m.

The Jenner Vaccine farm, at Chambersburg, Pa., which is conducted by Drs. J. L. and L. F. Sheeserott, has an agency on Seventh street, above Sansom. This place has also experienced a rush. Up to the close of the last year the demand was so gradual and moderate that a supply was always on hand, but of late it has been found a matter of impossibility to keep pace with the orders, and it has been necessary to distribute the receipts on a smaller scale than called for by the orders, in order that the preventive of disease may cover as wide a radius as possible. The Chambersburg virus is put up in quills each sufficient for two vaccinations, ivory points charged on both sides, and also in tubes about the thickness and half the length of a penholder. There are also crusts about the size of a penny piece, which are mixed with glycerine.

The Impossible Girl.

From Puck.

He offered her a handsome opal ring. "Excuse me," she said, while a blush crept over her velvety cheek: "opals are unlucky." Then he fished a package of caramels out of his pocket and attempted to present it to her. "I never touch them," she murmured, languidly, "as they destroy the teeth, and draw the fillings out. My mother got some between her teeth the other day, and her jaws were held together so tight for two hours that she couldn't talk." "You must have had quiet in the house." "Sir?" "I say you must have had a riot in the house. I mean that your mother must have been so provoked that she could'nt preserve her usual state of beautiful serenity, but was obliged to give way to her feelings in spite of her heroic efforts to appear calm. Would you like to go to the minstrels to-night?" "No, I thank you," she whispered feelingly. "I am always saddened by such woeful dramas as Camille, Hamlet, and Miss Multon, and the last time I was at the minstrels I saw how those plays could be made more heartrendering with jokes of the minstrels worked into them." He then invited her to take a walk, and partake of ice-cream and other luxuries calculated to thrill the feminine mind with ecstasy. But she refused each and all of them. And the young man danced around with his pocket-book in his hands, and thought what expense men would be saved if all the girls were like this one. And he sang:

I've found me the wife of the future,
I've found the impossible Girl.

Then he woke up and ascertained that he had been dreaming. The Impossible Girl has yet to be discovered.

Secretary Teller's Indian Policy.

Special to New York Graphic.

The new Secretary of the Interior gave expression to his views on one point of the Indian question to-day that indicates a modification of Secretary Kirkwood's policy. He was asked what he thought of the allotment of land in severalty to the Indians. Said he: "The allotment in severalty I do not regard as practicable, except in cases where the Indians are partially civilized. It is no use to put wild Indians on land parceled out to them, because they will not stay on it if we do. They do not want a lot laid off for themselves, because they do realize the worth of it. If Indians are somewhat civilized, so as to know the value of land and what it can be made to produce, and then are broken in to work, it may do to give them a farm, but the wild Indians do not want a farm, and wont stay on it if it is given to them."

It is believed that the Indian policy under the new Secretary will be characterized by more firmness in practical dealing with the Indians than for some years. He has been among them, and has had experience with the worst of them in Colorado.

Lincoln as a Peace-maker.

From the Philadelphia Ledger.

Rev. Dr. W. N. Miner, of Trenton, N. J., relates an anecdote of Abraham Lincoln which places him among the peace-makers. Dr. Miner was a resident in springfield, and gives the narrative in the words of another resident: "I had some trouble with a neighbor, and determined to go to law with him. When I got to Lincoln's office, I found my opponent was already there and had stated his case. I told my side of the story, and Lincoln then said: 'You have a good cause to go to court; but if you do you will both loose all your money and make yourselves lifelong enemies. Why don't you settle the matter right here?' We argued for some time without coming to an agreement, and finally Lincoln said: 'Well, I'm going to dinner. Try and settle it before I get back; and, in order that you shall not be disturbed, I'll lock the door.' He locked us in and left us there, and when he returned we had compromised our trouble."

JOCOSITIES.

"Woman," says Mr. Eastman, "is a problem we can never hope to solve, it is one we shall never, never be willing to give up."

A San Francisco man has been arrested for deceiving a widow. While his crime is to be abhorred, it must be admitted that his genius commands admiration.

She confided to him that she never wore anything but silk stockings when she went to dances. He said he had no doubt the costume was becoming, but—ought there not be a little more of it?"

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union at San Antonio, passed some resolutions the other day, one of which is to the effect that, "Thousands of widows sit in hopeless weeds on account of strong drink."

A chinaman stepped into a jewelry shop in San Francisco and asked for some "consistencies." Being asked to explain himself, he said he didn't know what consistency was, but he had been told it was a jewel.

"O Henry, aren't his eyes lovely?" she murmured, gazing into the face of a very homely poodle. "So liquid." "I thought he'd lick-wid his tongue," replied Harry. The match was broken and the dog gets all the petting now.

Twenty years ago a Louisville man swore that he would never marry until woman should acquire sufficent good manners to go abreast over a crossing, and not occupy the entire width of the sidewalk. The horrid wretch is still single.

The religious education of the young is terribly neglected in this country. "Are you a Methodist?" "No sir." "A Presbyterian?" "No, sir." "Well, what are you?" "Why, if anything, I am just a little Episcopalian on my mother's side.

A person in New York has written a story entitled: "The Soul as a Star." We are anxiously awaiting "The Liver of a Comet," and "The Lungs of a Meteor" will soon appear. We will not sleep again until "The Stomach of an Asteroid" is laid upon our table.

Dialogue in a market: "Have you any fresh eggs?" "Yes mum, plenty; them with the hen on 'em." "With the hen on them?" "Yes mum; we always put a hen on our fresh eggs to distinguish 'em. Beg pardon, mum, don't think you understand. Hen the letter, not tne the bird. Hen for noolaid, mum! Take a dozen? Thank you!"

Under the laws of the pilgrim fathers a man could not kiss his wife on Sunday, and after somewhat critical examination of portraits of wives of those days, we think the laws were eminently just, if not in the main lenient. The pilgrim fathers should have been fined for kissing such homely wives, any day of the week.

About twenty-five years ago there presided over one of the eastern circuit of Indiana a Judge whose ignorance of the law was most profound. He was dubbed "Old Necessity" by the younger members of the bar, because, they said, "necessity knows no law." On one occasion, at the close of a long and learned argument on a demurrer, he delivered himself of the following impartial decision: "In the opinion of the Court," drawing himself forward upon his desk, and trying to look very wise—"In the the opinion of the Court, either propositton would be equally preferable."

The Electric Corset.

Texas Siftings.

Wicked Clara Bell says: "One of the literally sensational novelties is the electric corset, of which rival manufacturers display a variety. All are made on the principle of substituting magnetized steel strips for the usual metal or bone. One enterprising exhibitor has his contrivance most neatly fitted on a pretty girl, and illustrates how completely she is lightning-bound by touching her corset here and there with a piece of steel. A spark drops out at every contact. What would happen if a magnetic kind of a chap hugged her can only be conjectured. As she is on exhibition in a dim room, the display of fireworks is excellent, considering that it doesn't cost anything. But it is for women only, not that there is anything indelicate about it, either, for the girl is all covered but her arms and neck, and is far less bare than the average belle at the ball. Still, I suppose that men would jam that store, and fight like mad to get into the front row, if she was made visible to their sex, just because she is arrayed in her dimimity. There seems to be a vast difference, to men's eyes between the tweedledee of an outer dress and the tweedledum of underclothing. I can't understand why, but it is so. Nine men out of ten will rush wildly to a window to see a woman in flowing white cross the way, and turn away disappointed when they find that the snowy garment is a wrapper instead of a chemise."

Brewster's Ruffles.

Louisville Courier-Journal

Attorney General Brewster's dainty ruffles at his wrist have often been noticed because unusual in man's attire, but no one seems to understand the beautiful sentiment which prompts him to continue to wear them, as he has done for over forty years, in spite of unpleasant remarks on the subject.

When he was first assuming the toga virilis, his mother, whose name he cannot even now mention without emotion, called him to her, and asked him to grant a request of hers. She then explained that her father, whom she had always venerated, and who was a very distinguished divine, had always worn ruffled shirts, and she would like her son, for whom she anticipated an equally brillant future as a lawyer, to wear ruffles in memory of his grandsire. She said she would not require him to wear them on the bosom of his shirt, as they would be very conspicuous, since ruffles had been so long out of fashion for men's apparel, but she thought that the wrists they were becoming to a man's hands, so she wished to make some herself and put them on her son's shirt. He acceded to her request, and for some years she always made his ruffles for him. He has worn them always since, and thus his ruffled shirts became an exponent not only of his love for his mother, of hers for her father.

FROM THE WIRES.

Lake City, Col., dispatch:

Sheriff E. N. Campbell was killed about 8 o'clock this morning. He and City Marshal Smith were on duty in a house guarding the contents of the building against the approach of George Betts and Jim Browning, keepers of a dance-house, who were suspected of stealing from the premises. About 2 this morning Bett and Browning entered the back door of the premises and struck a flashing match and were recognized in that light. Campbell ordered them to throw up their hands, at the same moment cocking his pistol. Two shots followed, one from the thieves and one from the Sheriff, the Sheriff immediately saying: "Oh, I am shot." The bullet entered Campbell's left breast above the heart. The deceased was about 40 years old. Betts and Browning were both arrested about two hours after the shooting.

This morning at one o'clock 100 masked men overpowered the guard and took from jail George Betts and Jim Browning, who shot and killed Sheriff Campbell yesterday morning, while attempting to arrest them. The men were taken to a bridge in the lower part of town and hanged. Both men died game, Betts asking some of the men for a chew of tobacco just before the rope was placed around his neck.

A London dispatch says:

The marriage of Prince Leopold to Princess Helen of Waldeck took place at St. George's Chapel, Windsor, to-day. A large crowd gathered at the station to witness the departure of the wedding guests. Windsor was gaily decorated with flags and bunting in honor of the event. The shops were closed and the town was crowded with visitors. Salutes were fired during the day. The war ships at Portsmouth and other places were decorated with flags. The marriage ceremony, which was conducted with great pomp, concluded shortly after 1 o'clock. The Archbishop of Canterbury was the chief officiating clergyman.

In the Hanlon-Trickett rowing match, this morning, Hanlon won by four lengths, and with the greatest ease. The course was from Putney to Mortlake, and the stakes were £1,000.

Des Moines, Iowa, dispatch:

While a balky horse was standing at the crossing of the Burlington Railroad, in East Des Moines, at 9 o'clock this morning, the wagon containing five persons, was struck by a switch engine, and a colored bricklayer named McGuire was killed, and a man named Graham, the latter white, mortally hurt. A child had a leg broken, and two women in the wagon were hurt.

St. Louis dispatch:

The first new wheat of this year's crop was received here this morning by S. W. Cobb & Co, and sold at the noon call at $4 50 per bushel, the highest price ever paid here. It consists of 100 sacks, is a little damp, but is plump, and grades No. 2. It was raised in Johnson county, Arkansas, and is the earliest shipment, by just one month, ever made to this point.

From a Memphis dispatch:

The dead bodies of a man and a woman, supposed to be victims of the Golden City disaster, were recovered yesterday, one at Cow Island, eighteen miles below here, and the other at Burdeaux Point, sixty miles below. W. F. McIntyre, clerk of the ill-fated steamer, leaves this afternoon to identify the remains.

Keokuk, Iowa, dispatch:

The Keokuk Constitution's special from its representative in the chase after Poke Wells, gives an account of a fight at the Winterbotham farm, three miles from Fort Madison. The telegram says: "Yesterday, at 1 p. m., the news was brought to a farmer by the name of Winterbotham, living three miles west of here, of the tragedy at the State prison, and his wife on being told became frightened and exclaimed: 'They are surely about these premises.' Her husband, in order to please her, immediatly set about to search the barn, and in probing through a pile of hay with a fork, struck Poke Wells in the shoulder, piercing him pretty sharply. The three men jumped up and sprang at Winterbotham, who is an elderly gentleman, and of course he retreated, knowing that they were desperate men, and would not spare his life. They rushed on him, when he dealt Wells a heavy blow with the back of the pitchfork on the left side of the head, which stunned him. He then cried aloud for his hired hand, who rushed in with a stick in his hand. Wells ran in and took the fork and went after Winterbotham, when the hired hand, who is a mulatto, threw a stick at Wells, who then started for the hired man. This party then ran, when the convicts caught a horse and all three rode about a mile, where they left it and took to the woods. One of them gave himself up (Fitzgerald). He stated to your representative to-day that Wells was suffering intensely from the wound in his lung received about one month ago, and said that he would stay close by Cook, the other one who is with him, as he (Wells) had to have assistance. We traced them this morning to the farm of Sample F. Hays, where two horses are missing, evidently taken by them last night. Men are scouring the country and doing all they can to rearrest the criminals. Mr. Hays lives three miles west of Weaver."

Knoxville, Tenn., dispatch:

Hon. Horace Maynard died suddenly this morning of heart disease. He got out of bed, telling his wife he felt unwell, and then dropped dead on the floor.

Horace Maynard was born at Westborough, Mass., August 30, 1814; graduated at Amherst College in 1838; removed to Tennessee, and studied law in Knoxville; was professor in the University of East Tennessee; was Attorney-General of the State from 1863 to 1865; was Presidential elector in 1852 and 1864; was elected to the Thirty-fifth, Thirty-sixth, Thirty-seventh, Thirty-ninth, Fortieth, Forty-first, Forty-second and Forty-third Congresses. Was appointed Minister to Turkey by General Grant, in 1875, and subsequently was Postmaster General in Hayes' Cabinet, being succeeded in office by Thomas L. James.

Kankakee, Ill., dispatch:

A license for the marriage of a girl 18 years of age and a boy 19 years of age, both of French extraction, was issued by the County Clerk this week, and the marriage has been consummated. The girl's father first made application in his own county (Iroquois), but was refused, as the girl had not attained the statutory age, but he afterward came to Kankakee county, and made affidavit that she was 14 years old, and thus obtained the license.

Indianapolis, Ind., dispatch:

Edgar Chittenden, son of Dr. Chittenden, of Anderson, Ind., was shot last night and probably fatally wounded by a man named Ryan, the defeated candidate for town marshal. The cause of the shooting was Chittenden hurrahing for the successful candidate in the presence of Ryan. Three shots were fired. Ryan has been arrested and is in jail.

CONGRESSIONAL SUMMARY.

WEDNESDAY, April 26th.

SENATE—The anti-Chinese bill was further discussed.

HOUSE—The sitting was spent in the consideration of the Lynch-Chalmers contested election case. No action.

THURSDAY April 27th.

SENATE.—Mr. Sherman introduced a bill to regulate the coinage of silver dollars. It repeals the act of February 1878, and restricts the coinage to the demand for public use and convenience. The bill to repeal certain political disabilities, and the Chinese immigration bill were discussed, without action.

HOUSE—The Lynch-Chalmers contested election case was further discussed. A message was received from the President respecting the Indian troubles in Arizona.

FRIDAY, April 28th.

SENATE.—The House bill fixing the time for holding elections in West Virginia was passed; also, the House bill prohibiting Chinese immigration—yeas 32, nays 15. Adjourned till Monday.

HOUSE—The Lynch-Chalmers contest case was further considered. Pending a demand for the previous question, the House adjourned.

SATURDAY, April 29th.

SENATE—The Lynch-Chalmers contest was decided by giving Lynch the seat: yeas, 125; nays, 82. Conference report on the Post office appropriation bill, agreeing to the Senate amendments for increased text-mail facilities was considered, without action.

MONDAY, May 1st.

SENATE—The business transacted was routine in its character and of no general interest.

HOUSE—The rules were suspended and May 9th designated as the day for the consideration of the bill extending the charter of national banks. A proposition to suspend the treaty with China with reference to immigration was voted down, yeas, 60; nays, 100. A bill was passed dividing Iowa into two judicial districts; also, the Senate bill providing for the sale of the lands of the Miami Indians, in Kansas. The rules were suspended and bills passed for the erection of public buildings at Detroit, Mich, $600,000; at Jackson, Tenn, $50,000; at Denver, Colorado, $300,000; at Greensboro, N. C., $80,000; at Council Bluffs, Ia, $100,000; at Peoria, Ill, $225,000. The above sums represent the maximum cost of the buildings when completed.

Mr. Bragg, of Wisconsin, and Mr. Holman, of Indiana, opposed these bills.

The next bill on which a suspension of the rules was asked was one for the erection of a public building at Galveston, Tex, $125,000. It was opened by Mr. Bragg, of Wisconsin, who fought it every step, and it was only passed by the vote of the Speaker, who cast his vote in the affirmative in order to make a quorum, the vote standing—yeas, 131; nays, 16.

TUESDAY, May 2d.

SENATE—A bill was passed granting twelve condemned cannon to the Morton Monument Association of Indiana. The bill to establish a court of appeals, was considered.

HOUSE—Bills for public buildings at Quincy, Ill, and Hannibal, Mo, were passed. The Senate amendments to the Chinese bill were concurred in. The tariff commission bill was further discussed.

An Odd Fatality.

A strange accident happened on the railroad between Rouen and Amiens, France, during the storm which raged there on the 25th ult. A workman named Deteaut, had taken tempoporary refuge in a cutting close to the line. The telegraph wires were just then blown down and Deteaut got entangled in them. A few minutes after, before he could extricate himself, a train came along, and the wires catching in the wheels the unfortunate man was dragged under the wheels and crushed to death.

Finley McKenny, supposed to be very poor, was dying at Morgantown, Ky. With his last breath he told his wife to break an old jug that had long stood in the grime of the smokehouse. She did so, and $1,200 in gold and silver rolled out.

THE TABOR DOMESTIC BROIL

Early Love and Life of Mr. and Mrs. Tabor—Characteristics of the Millionaire.

Letter in Chicago Times

Twenty-five years ago Horace A. W. Tabor took Augusta Pierce "for better, for worse," winning her away from wealthier suitors; took her from her pleasant Maine home, and brought her to the then wilderness of Kansas. Here they pre-empted a farm, but they were too poor to stock it. So they started for Colorado, amid the gold excitement, he hoped for a stroke of luck that would enable them to make enough to fit up their farm. She followed uncomplainingly wherever he went. And for twenty years they labored together in Colorado, she bearing her half of the burdens; the first white woman in many a region, living all the time beyond the limits of culture, cooking and working not only for her family, but for the men her husband employed, assisting him to wait upon the customers of the little mountain store of which he was proprietor. A life such as this for twenty years! Then the waiting, and working and hoping brought their reward. Presto! the Little Pittsburg was discovered in California gulch, where they had so long looked for gold, and found none. Mr. Tabor became a rich man. A State election was held. Mr. Tabor became a lieutenant-governor.

In fairy books, or novels, this would be the delightful climax of the story; it is the juncture where the chronicler should stop, but this tale didn't. True, they bought a handsome house, and lived very happily for awhile. But the Governor began to display a penchant for the society of ballet girls and other pretty but naughty females. At last his attentions to this class became so open that his wife could no longer live with him, so he transferred his residence to the Windsor Hotel; and, it is stated quite reliably, that he has several times offered her money if she would sue for a divorce, but the spunky wife would not gratify him by acceding. And for a year and a half they have lived openly apart, both going in the best circles of Denver society.

Now, Tabor is not otherwise a bad sort of a fellow. He has built elegant buildings for Denver and Leadville. He is always doing odd, generous sorts of things. I remember, when he intended building his opera-house, he met one day a stone-mason whose only fault was poverty, as he was both capable and honest. Tabor, who is himself a mason by trade, and knew the young man, said to him: "Are you not going to bid on my opera-house?" "No," replied the other, "for if I should win it, I have no friends who are able to go on the bond required of me." The amount was $20,000. "Bid on it," said Tabor, "and if you are the lowest, I will go on your bond myself." And, as the young fellow was the lowest he really went on his bond, and the happy mason did the work. Every once in a while he throws open his opera-house doors for a free matinee to the children of Denver. He is ever doing something generous, and indeed, it is partially through this very generosity and good nature that he has sinned.

But when he comes forward and pleads that he has given his wife $100,000, while he himself is worth $10,000,000, I have no patience with him. Granting that he has given it to her, about which I do not know, it is a very paltry sum, when by every unwritten decree of just humanity, she is entitled to much more. "The apple raised by the mutual industry of the pair should be equally divided between them." Oh! it will not be; you may be certain of that. Men do not not usually agree to a division of that kind; but it is a keen disgrace, I take it, to the Lieutenant-governor of Colorado that his wife should be compelled to go before the courts and ask for maintenance, and that he shall pay the taxes on the house she lives in, which is still in his name. But then, there were no taxes to be paid in the little log-cabin of yore, unless it were to the Indians, who sometimes constituted themselves collectors, anyhow, and were ones not to be despised.

The suit is the talk of the hour just now in Denver, and sympathy is all on the side of the wife. They have but one son, a young fellow of twenty-four now in Europe. He treats his parents with equal effection, and both are equally fond him. It is said, however, that the Colorado law makes no provision for a suit of Mrs. Tabor's kind, unaccompanied by a plea for divorce. So it remains to be seen what will be the outcome of it all.

A Strange Occurrance at Sea.

A dispatch from Baltimore, Md., says: Capt. G. H. C. Horner, of the the German ship Stella, which arrived last Saturday from Bremen, gives an account of a singular phenomenon which he witnessed while he was on his way to this port. On the morning of March 18 Chief Officer Deboer had charge of the morning watch. The weather was serene and clear, and the sea smooth and calm. The ship was bowling along at the rate of two miles an hour by the wind. At about 5:30 o'clock the vessel suddenly halted in her course, quivering from keel to keelson, and conveying the impression to those below that the ship had struck a rock. Captain Horner, who was below looking over his chart, at once ran on deck to ascertain the cause of the shock, and finding the weather clear and the sea tranquil, was puzzled. Neither the chief mate, who was on the quarter deck at the time, nor the look out could account for the strange occurrence. The Captain then ordered the heaving of the lead, but found no bottom at 100 fathoms. The pumps were sounded and the ship found to be tight. The shock lasted only half a minute, after which the ship went on as before. Captain Horner himself went aloft, but could discover no signs of any obstruction. He expresses the opinion that he encountered a tremor of submarine volcanic eruption. The ship's position at the time was in latitude 37° 21' north, longitude 23° 21' west. He found the rate of the chronometer correct, observation being taken 56 minutes after the shock.

A Legacy of Jesse James.

St. Louis Post Dispatch.

The owner of the house in which Jesse James was killed has filed a most singular claim against the state with the governor, asking for $2,600. She is a widow named Henrietta Salzwan, and she represents that her house was worth $3,000 before the state, by its agents, killed one Jessie James therein; that the said James being a notorious person, morbid curiosity-seekers, in their desire to secure mementoes of him, have wrecked and carried off the greater part of her house, so that she could not to-day sell the place for more than $1,000. Being damaged by the act of the state's agents, she comes to the state for reimbursement.

The Brown Divorce Case.

"I see," said Mrs. Smyth, looking over the evening paper, "that the Brown divorce case has gotten into the Courts."

"It has, eh?" said Mr. Smyth. "And now I suppose the papers will be filled with the disgusting details of the trial. These divorce cases ought to be heard by the Courts with closed doors. It is disgraceful that the public journals should be permitted to cater to the depraved appetites of the people. What does the report have to say, Ellen?"

"Mrs. Brown, it says, brought the suit, and Mr. Brown is the defendant."

"I know, but what does it say about the proceedings? Go on and read it."

"Mrs Brown came into the Court room, heavily veiled, with her counsel, and sat right in front of the Jury box. It is a very short report."

"That's queer. The Evening Sunbeam usually has such things in full. Well, go on."

"Mr. Brown sat with his counsel, and after the Jury was selected the counsel for Mrs. Brown rose to present his case. He spoke for half an hour, going over all the charges, which were of a revolting character, and"—

"Doesn't it give what the man said?"

"Apparently not. Too bad, is it not?"

"That's the poorest newspaper I ever saw. I'll buy the Argus after this. However, the Gimlet will have a verbatim report in the morning. Read what is there anyway."

"After the case had been thus opened the counsel said that he had twenty-three witnesses present, each of whom would unfold under oath a portion of this most painful story."

"Ah! now we are coming to it!"

"Here seems to be the testimony of the first witness in full. Perhaps, Henry, I'd better not read it. It is probably very shocking."

"Oh, well, of course such things ought not to be printed; but if the newspapers will insert them and thrust them into decent families, we might as well look over them. What did he swear to?"

"The paragraph is full of asterisks, as if some of the most unplesant revelations have been omitted."

"Mutilated, hey? Pshaw! How annoying! When I want a thing I want it. I don't want a few scraps of it. Read it anyhow."

"'The witness said'—but no, I was mistaken. 'Just as the witness began to testify the counsel for the defence rose to interrupt him.'"

"What on earth was he meddling with it for?"

"'The counsel urged upon the Court the desirability of preventing so much scandal, and he offered to consent that Mrs. Brown should have a simple decree of divorce upon the ground of desertion.'"

"Not accepted, of course? These lawyers are a nuisance."

"'This was agreed to by the counsel for the plaintiff, and the decree being promptly granted by the Court, the witnesses and the Jury were dismissed.'"

"And the whole thing dropped?"

"So the report says."

"Not a line of testimony?"

"No."

"It's outrageous. And a case that excited so much public interest, too."

"Shameful!" said Mrs. Smyth.

"But I'll get it in spite of the Court." said Mr. Smyth, "I know Simpson, one of the witnesses, and I'll call to-morrow and ask him to give me all the facts. Then we can pass them around."

Then Mrs. Smyth threaded her needle and Mr. Smyth stretched himself on the lounge for a nap. MAX ADELER

A Hard-Pressed Poet.

The Independent.

Examples like Edgar A. Poe make genius appear a dangerous gift. One would rather posess the honest mediocrity that makes steady and comfortable earnings possible than the erratic brightness which is forever repeating the extremities of plenty and want. George H. Boker tells this story about Poe:

One day I was sitting at a bookseller's who also published a serial, when Poe came in. If shabby, he was generally genteel and had the inherent look of a man of the world, out of place and ostracised, yet with a compensating pride in his sense of finer intellect. After some little while, he said to the publisher:

"Lend me $10."

"I can't do it."

He was already in debt to his friends a hundred or two.

"Lend me five then," said Poe.

"I can't do it, Poe. I have made up my mind not to lend any more.'

"Well," said Poe, "will you give me $10 for a poem!"

"Yes, I will be glad to do that." Poe sat down and almost without hesitation wrote a sonnet, exquisite in its wording, tender in its feeling. He handed it over to the publisher, who paid the money.

A Rival to the Mammoth Cave.

Prescott (Arizona) Miner

Near Winslow, in the Sunset Mountains, a cave has been discovered which is one of the greatest wonders of Arizona Territory. It is of unknown proportions, having never been explored, and the phenomenon connected with it that causes the wonder of beholders is the fact that a strong current of air rushes into the cave, of sufficent force to draw down into the depths all light articles placed near the entrance. The roaring of the winds into the cavern may be heard 200 yards away from the opening.

PROVED A SUCCESS

THE PASTILLE
Prof. Harris' Radical Cure
Trade Mark
FOR NERVOUS DEBILITY

BY YEARS OF USE!

A valuable Discovery and New Departure in Medical Science. A positively effective Remedy for the speedy and permanent Cure for organic weakness—the deplorable disease resulting from indiscreet practices or excesses in youth or at any time of life—by the only true way, viz: Direct Application acting by Absorption, and exerting its specific influence on the Vesicles, Ducts, and Gland, that are unable to perform their natural functions while this disease pervades the human organism. The use of the Pastille is attended with no pain or inconvenience, and does not interfere with the ordinary pursuits of life; it is quickly dissolved and soon absorbed, producing an immediate soothing and restorative effect upon the nervous organizations wrecked from vicious habits or excesses, stopping the drain from the system, restoring the mind to health and sound memory, removing the Dimness of Sight, Confusion of Ideas, Aversion to Society, etc., etc., and the appearance of premature old age usually accompanying this trouble, and restoring the vital forces, where they have been dormant for years. This mode of treatment has stood the test in very severe cases, and is now a pronounced success. Drugs are too much prescribed in this trouble, and, as many can bear witness to, with but little if any permanent good. There is no nonsense about this Preparation. Practical observation enables us to positively guarantee that it will give satisfaction. It has been in general use for several years and we have thousands of testimonials from patients, as to its value, and it is now conceded to be the most rational means yet discovered for reaching and curing this very prevalent trouble, that is well known to be the cause of untold misery to so many, and upon whom quacks prey with their useless nostrums and big fees. The Remedy is put up in neat boxes of three sizes. No. 1, (enough to last a month,) $3; No. 2, (sufficient to effect a permanent cure, unless in severe cases,) $5; No. 3, (lasting over three months, will restore those in the worst condition,) $7. Sent by mail, in plain wrappers. Full DIRECTIONS for using will accompany EACH BOX.

Send for Sealed Descriptive Pamphlets giving Anatomical Illustrations and Testimony, which will convince the most skeptical that they can be restored to perfect health, and the vital forces thoroughly re-established same as if never affected. Sold ONLY by

Unsolicited testimony to the Efficacy of Prof. Harris' Pastilles, taken from Letters received from Patrons:

Indiana, April 14, '82.—The Remedy is working perfectly. Had epilepsy from weakness, for 8 years past.

Iowa, Oct. 10th, '82.—I am almost surprised at your Pastilles. They have worked like a charm on me. I am just twice as much of a man as I was before taking. I was on the verge of the grave, I thought, and there was no cure for me, but now I am in good hopes for a cure.

West Virginia, Aug. 28, 1882.—I received your medicine and I believe it has cured me, for which I am very thankful. Inclosed find $5. Please send me another box No. 2 for a friend. You have done a great thing for me. I will send you all the orders I can.

From a Physician and Surgeon.

Missouri, June 26.—Please forward me another box of the Pastilles. The patient on whom I have used most of one box, in addition to a sample box, is fast recovering, and I think another will set him all right.

From a Druggist.

Maryland, Sept. 2 '82.—Last January we got a box of your Remedy for one of our customers, and it has made a perfect cure of him. We have another customer now suffering in the same way, and wish one No. 3 box.

The Wayne Creamery.

ONE YEAR'S OPERATIONS AND THE OUTLOOK FOR THIS SEASON.

About one year ago the Wayne creamery began operations in this city, manufacturing pure butter from cream gathered from cans, on the Fairlamb plan. The result of the first year's work is very satisfactory to its patrons, and the enterprise begins the second season under the most favorable circumstances, and enjoying the fullest confidence of the people. By the latter part of last June the creamery was manufacturing over three hundred pounds of butter per day. About that time the severe drouth of last season set in, drying up the grazing and the cows as well. All remember its severity. Hundreds of cows belonging to the patrons of the creamery for want of grass and pure water went dry, and the season, though unfavorable one, those who sold cream to the creamery have abundance of reason to be gratified with their experience, and have increased their number of cows for this season. Patrons of the creamery who kept accounts of the butter sold in the old way, of their own making, have made comparisons with the new plan of selling cream, and find that their profit from the same number of cows on the new plan is much larger, besides it saves them the labor of churning and marketing. Not only so, but they say that when they made their own butter and sold it, they could rarely obtain cash for their product but had to take trade. Under the new plan they are promptly paid cash for their cream, and can buy goods where they please. In this it has proven a great advantage to the farmers who sold cream.

The following statement will give the readers an idea of the profit under the new plan of selling cream. It must be remembered, however, that these statements embrace the period of the great drouth, and would have been much better but for that fact:

LETIS ALLEN, WAYNE COUNTY, IND.

Cream accounts with Wayne creamery Co., Cr.

Average of three cows eleven months........................$131 60

BENJAMIN MARTIN, WAYNE CO., IND.

Average of two cows eight months received for cream....$56 48

HENRY MILLER, DARKE CO., OHIO.

Average of four cows seven months, received for cream ..$91 52

Mr. Miller will sell cream this season from twenty-five cows, and finding it profitable, will continue to add cows to his herd.

MRS. E. KING, WAYNE CO., IND.

Average of eight cows for eleven months, received for cream........................$213 11

This lady claims that she can take twenty cows and make them net her one thousand dollars per year, and she is doubtless low enough in her estimate. There are many other patrons of the creamery whose accounts the past year show as well as s a.

The company will this season pay to the farmers of Wayne and adjoining counties $50,000, which were it not for the creamery, the same cream would be made into butter and sold as county butter is sold, and it would not realize them over $30,000 at the outside. So there is an advantage of $20,000 annually in having the creamery here.

This enterprise, like all other manufacturing, has its secret of success in improved facilities and skilled labor. In the old way of making cloth the country loom way produced a yard of woolen goods from fine wool that sold for one dollar per yard, but a factory with improved facilities and skilled labor will take one-fourth less wool of the same kind and produce a cloth that will sell for four dollars per yard. It is the same way with all manufacturing where the best facilities and skilled labor are employed.

PREMIUMS OFFERED THIS YEAR.

The creamery this year offers the following cash premiums to its patrons who sell them the largest number of inches of cream for the season beginning May 1:

First premium, cash............$50 00
Second premium, cash..........$25 00
Third premium, cash............$15 00
Fourth premium, cash..........$10 00

As an evidence of the market interest shown in the business by farmers, it may be said that the demand for cows is better here than for many years, and during the past few months there has been a decided advance in their selling price.

At the beginning of the season last spring the company guaranteed that the cream should not fall below a yearly average of seventeen cents. It is now found that the company's average price for the past year has been nearly twenty-three cents per inch, showing that they have more than kept faith with their customers. —Richmond Palladium.

One day last week R. Wes. McBride, while taking a walk around the western side of Center Lake, found almost imbedded in the ground, a deer's horn. Part of the skull was in good preservation, and over it quite a good sized shrub was growing.—Steuben County Journal.

Blood Will Tell.

Having arrived on the Fort Wayne fair grounds, with forty Short Horn Kentucky cattle, consisting of the fashionable and popular families: Young Mary, Rose of Sharon, Desdemons, Lady Jane, Frantic, Fashions, Rosemonds, Stattella, Rosemary, Ameha, Ianthia, Beauty, Flora, Ruby, Snowdrop, Pansy, Emma, Cleopatra, Adelaide, Arabella, White Rose. All highly bred out at top of pedigrees with Oxfords and Dukes, crosses. Sixteen of which are young bull ready for service; twenty-four cows and heifers, several with young calves by their side. All of which I will sell low according to blood and breeding. Will keep constantly on hand representatives of the best bloods of Kentucky. Farmers please call and see me.

THE LIBRARY OF UNIVERSAL KNOWLEDGE.—A reprint of Chamber's Encyclopædia, with 3500 pages of new and original American matter added. 1800pp. 15vols. S. W. Green's Son New York.

When the publisher undertook to furnish the American people with a "Library of Universal Knowledge" that should excel all other Cyclopædias, in quanity and variety of information, and at a cost which has no rival in cheapness, the choice of Chambers' Encyclopædia as a basis was wisely made. That work hits the happy medium between the elaborate treatises of the Britannica and the dictionary-like definitions of Encyclopædias of one or two volumes. Its information is succinctly presented, yet with sufficient fullness for all practical purposes, and the information is brought down to the latest date. There is, however, one serious defect in the Chamber's work, as in all foreign Cyclopædias. American subjects are not treated with sufficient fulness, and a large amount of information which every American reader would naturally look for in a work of reference of this character is "conspicuous by its absence." Here is where the American "Library of Universal Knowledge" has such marked advantage. The additional articles, either enlargements or wholly new, number over 15,000, bringing the whole number of titles up to more than 40,000, and the volumes from 10 of the Encyclopædia to 15 of the Universal Knowledge. The character of the additions and the increased value of the work may be judged by two illustrations. Opening the first volume accidently at "Allen," we found in the Chamber's text but one person of that name mentioned, and he a little-known literateur of Edinburgh, while the American biographical additions comprise thirteen Allens, all of whom merited record in an American Encyclopædia far more than did the Scots Allen. Opening at random the 6th volume at the article "Geology," there is found an article of four pages from the Chambers' edition with an added American article of 27 pages.

To give some furthur idea of the throughness with which the American editors have performed their labors, it may be mentioned that the first 10 pages of the first volume contain 90 subjects, and of this number 35 are transferred from Chambers' and 55 are furnished by the editors.

Our readers are invited to inspect this great work at our office.

England's Prime Ministers.

Below we give a list of the prime ministers of England since 1762, which is worth preservation for reference. The resignation of the Duke of Newcastle, in 1762, ended the long rule of the whig party, which had continued uninterruptely from the death of Queen Anne.

Since Palmerston, no prime minister has held that important trust so long as has Beaconsfield.

	1762—Earl of Bute.
	1763—George Grenville.
	1765—Marquis of Rockingham.
	1766—Duke of Grafton.
	1770—Lord North.
April,	1782—Marquis of Rockingham, died in office.
June,	1782—Earl of Shelburne.
March,	1783—Duke of Portland.
Dec.,	1783—William Pitt.
	1801—Henry Addington.
	1804—William Pitt, died in office, January 23, 1806.
	1806—Lord Greuville.
	1807—Duke of Portland.
	1809—Mr. Parcival, assassinated.
	1812—Earl of Liverpool.
April,	1827—Mr. Canning, died.
Aug.,	1827—Viscount Goderich.
	1828—Duke of Wellington.
	1830—Earl Grey.
May,	1834—Viscount Melbourne.
Nov.,	1834—Duke of Wellington, (temporary appointment.
Dec.,	1834—Sir Robert Peel.
	1835—Viscount Melbourne.
	1841—Sir Robert Peel.
	1846—Lord John Russell.
Feb.,	1852—Earl of Derby.
Dec.,	1852—Earl of Aberdeen.
	1855—Viscount Palmerston.
	1858—Earl of Derby.
	1859—Viscount Palmerston—died Oct. 18, 1865.
Oct.,	1865—Earl of Russell (Lord John).
	1866—Earl of Derby.
Feb.,	1868—Benjamin Disraeli, resigned Dec. 4, 1868.
Dec.,	1868—Wm. E. Gladstone.
Feb.,	1874—Earl of Beaconsfield (Disraeli).

In looking over the foregoing list, it will be noticed that William Pitt held office much longer than any prime minister before or after him, that the average tenue of office has been five years to each, and that five prime ministers have died in office.

SOLID GOLD WATCHES.

THE OPPORTUNITY OF A LIFE-TIME.

SOLID GOLD
ONLY $19 65/100

We have lately purchased a bankrupt stock of Watches and Jewelry, which we shall offer in our catalogue at about half the usual prices: As the stock is very large, and we wish to turn it into money quickly, we have determined, in order to arouse public interest and secure applications for our catalogue of fine goods, to make an offer of a SOLID GOLD HUNTING CASE WATCH at a price much below the cost of production. Our offer is to send by registered mail (carefully packed in a wooden box) a SOLID GOLD HUNTING CASE PATENT LEVER FULL JEWELED WATCH on receipt of $19.63. We warrant the massive cases to be solid gold and beautifully engraved as shown in cut. We warrant the movement to be a Swiss Patent Lever (which is the best movement known in the world) and full jeweled. These watches are not only the best time-keepers to be found now, but being full jeweled, will remain so and will be found as accurate 20 or 25 years hence as now, provided they have now had fair usage.

This is a startling offer, and that one cannot be made by any other firm, as the actual cost of the watches in Switzerland is about twice the price we ask for them. It must be taken advantage of at once, if at all. We make it only to secure customers for our other goods, catalogue of which will be sent to each purchaser. If any one on receiving the watch is dissatisfied, it can be returned at once and the money will be refunded. We sell all our goods on this condition, and have the largest jewelry trade of any house in America. To those who wish to see the watch before buying we offer to send C. O. D., if $1.00 is sent in advance as a guarantee of the express charges. Privilege of examination is given before paying the bill. If ordered C. O. D., however, the customer must pay all express charges, including return of money. We do not make a penny on this watch and cannot incur any expense beyound that of postage, which is provided for in the price named (19.63). If you want a watch for actual wear order this one. Watch speculators will readily see that such a watch as this which can be FULLY WARRANTED, can be sold or traded and immense profits made. The watch is really just as good as any $120 00 gold watch, and can be so represented. Do not buy brass, or composition metal watches, (really the same thing) with worthless movements, when by paying a little more you can have a solid gold watch which will be "a thing of beauty and a joy forever."

LADIES' WATCHES. SOLID GOLD HUNTING CASE, beautifully engraved nickel movement, warranted good time-keepers, sent by registered mail to any address on receipt of $13.87. If not satisfied on its receipt, send it right back and get your money, C. O. D., on the same terms as the Patent Lever Watch.

Remember, we warrant these watches to be exactly as represented, and that they will give more satisfaction, and that we deliver them to you free of charge in good order, on receipt of price—or C. O. D., subject to charges, with privilege of examination if desired. Remit by postoffice order, registered letter, or bank check on New York, or send greenbacks by express.

Cutting the Key Log.

A MOMENT OF GREAT DANGER—PERILS OF LUMBERING.

[The Field.]

The first thing to be done is to find out where the jam occurred, and then to discover what is called the "key log," that is to say, the log which holds the base of the "jam." An old experienced "steam driver" is soon on the spot, for the news is soon carried up stream that there is a "jam" below. Every minute is of consequence, as there are logs coming down and the "jam" increasing in strength. The "key log" being found, there is a cry for volunteers to cut it. Now, when you consider that there are some hundred big logs of timber forming a dam, and the instant the "key log" is cut the whole fabric comes rushing down with a crush, you will see that unless the axeman gets instantly away, he is crushed to death. There are usually in camp plenty of men ready to volunteer, for a man who cuts a "key log" is looked upon by the rest of the loggers just as a soldier is by his regiment when he has done an act of bravery.

The man I saw cut away a log which brought down the whole jam of logs was a quiet young fellow, some 20 years of age. He stripped everything save his drawers; a strong rope was placed under his arms, and a gang of smart young fellows held the end. The man shook hands with his comrades and quietly walked out on the logs, axe in hand. I do not know how the loggy-road one felt, but I shall never forget my feelings. The man was quietly walking to what very likely might be his death. At any moment the jam might break of its own accord, and also if he cut the key log, unless he instantly got out of the way, he would be crushed by the falling timbers.

There was a dead silence while the keen axe was dropped with force and skill on the pine log. Now the notch was half way through the log, one or two more blows and a crack was heard. The men got in all the slack of the rope that held the axeman; one more blow and there was a crack like thunder, and down came the wall to all appearances on the axeman.

Like many others I rushed to help haul away the poor fellow, but to my great joy I saw him safe on the bank, certainly sadly bruised and bleeding from sundry wounds, but safe.

One of the Six Hundred.

[Globe-Democrat, May 7.]

Last night the friends of Captain E. M. Haynes one of the 600 who took part in the charge of the Light Brigade at Balaklava, assembled at No. 718 Olive street and presented the old soldier with a steel engraving representing the return of what was left of the 600 as they rode "out of the jaws of death." J. Edwin Cope made the presentation speech. Haynes had enlisted in the British army when but sixteen years of age, and a year later had with his regiment, the Eleventh Hussars, taken part in the memorable charge. "His horse was shot from under him," said the speaker, "and he fell, wounded in the arm, head and knee. A less hardy man would have died, but the captain came of Bedfordshire stock and stood the fiery ordeal, coming out of the battle only when the smoke cleared away and comrades lent a helping hand." Mr Cope said he knew Haynes' father and grandfather. They came from the spot in England that had sheltered John Bunyan and Cowper, the poet, and Captain Cook, the great navigator. Mr. Cope said America was the home of two soldiers who had "come out of the jaws of death," and that St. Louis held one of these. The other was George Aldrich of New York. Captain Haynes, in accepting the gift from his friends, had but little to say, but said that little well.

For Fence Posts.

A writer in an exchange says: I discovered many years ago that wood could be made to last longer than iron in the ground, but thought the process so simple that it was not well to make a stir about it. I would as soon have poplar, basswood or ash as any other kind of timber for fence posts. I have taken out basswood posts after having been set seven years which were as sound when taken out as when first put in the ground. Time and weather seemed to have no effect on them. The posts can be prepared for less than 2 cents apiece. This is the recipe: Take boiled linseed oil and stir in pulverized charcoal to the consistency of paint. Put a coat of this over the timber, and there is not a man that will live to see it rot.—Indiana Farmer.

Hanged for Six Hours.

THRILLING EXPERIENCE OF A MEXICAN HORSE THIEF.

[San Antonio Express.]

A Mexican by the name of Senobio Martines was brought to this city recently from the Medina, in Bexar county, who had a thrilling tale of horror to tell, rivaling some of the desperate acts of the Bexar county Vigilante Committee in its palmiest days, when Mexican horse thieves might be seen hanging from the limbs of adjacent trees on almost any day in the week. During those times, too, several well known gentlemen were even accused of going to church on Sunday with hangman's ropes in their pockets.

He lives on the Medina, and for a long time past has incurred the displeasure of his neighbors from the fact that Senobio has been suspected of appropriating other people's horseflesh to his own use and disposing of the same for private gain. On Tuesday night of unknown men went to the house of Martines, took him away and hung him to a tree, leaving him shortly after for dead. The mob, however, neglected to tie the man's hands behind his back, and by holding the rope around his neck with both hands for six hours he succeeded in saving his life, and was cut down the next day by friends. The poor fellow can not tell who the parties were who committed the outrageous act, nor how many there were in the gang. He only knows that he went through the horrors of death, and is still much bruised about the face and neck. He was brought to this city and is now out on the Alazan creek, near town, with friends.

The Use of the Lemon.

A writer in the London Lancet remarks that few people know the value of lemon juice. A piece of lemon bound upon a corn will cure it in a few days; it should be renewed night and morning. A free use of lemon juice and sugar will always relieve a cough. Most people feel poorly in the spring, but if they would eat a lemon before breakfast every day for a week—with or without sugar, as they like—they would find it better than any medicine.

Lemon juice used according to this receipt will sometimes cure consumption: Put a dozen lemons into cold water and slowly bring to a boil; boil slowly until the lemons are soft, but not too soft, then squeeze until all the juice is extracted, add sugar to your taste, and drink. In this way use one dozen lemons a day. If they cause pain or loosen the bowels too much, lessen the quantity and use only five or six a day until you are better, and then begin again with a dozen a day. After using five or six dozen, the patient will begin to gain flesh and enjoy food. Hold on to the lemons, and still use them very freely several weeks more.

Another use for lemons is for a refreshing drink in the summer, or in sickness at any time. Prepare as directed above, and add water and sugar. But in order to have this keep well, after boiling the lemons, squeeze them and strain carefully; then to every half pint of juice add one pound of loaf or crushed sugar, boil and stir a few minutes more until the sugar is dissolved, skim carefully, and bottle. You will get more juice from the lemons by boiling them, and the preparation keeps better.

The Buddhists stick to their religion with great tenacity in spite of all efforts to christianize them. They have a bible in many respects, and a savior, born of a virgin, who fasted forty days in the desert, and was crucified to save sinners. The name of their savior was Jesu Chrisna. They claim greater antiquity for their bible, which is the reason that it is so hard to argue them into accepting christianity, which they maintain was simply copied from Buddhism. In numbers they claim to exceed the christians.

A strange accident, one that may prove fatal, occurred at Orland, Steuben county, last week. A lady named Vail had a pet cat which took sick and soon appeared to be dead. Mrs. Vail then put her hand on the cat's side, when it suddenly turned and bit her finger, tearing the flesh from it. Her arm soon became entirely swollen, the flesh turning black to the elbow. It is feared that even amputating the arm will not save the woman's life.—[Ligonier Banner.

An Ohio Cave.

[Cincinnati Commercial.]

An exploring party has made wonderful discoveries in a cave in Adams county, Ohio, supposed to be the work of the mound-builders. In Tiffin township is a plateau of 200 acres surrounded by hills. At a depression in the plateau there is a well three feet in diameter and twenty-five feet deep. Persons have frequently descended into the well and explored cavernous chambers of mathematical regularity to which it leads. On the walls of the chambers may be seen among other writings the inscription "Von Brody, 1786," made by that Indian hunter, who preceded the "Ohio Company" in 1776. In the fourth chamber, reached through a narrow passage, had long ago been found a well, ten feet in diameter and of unknown depth. It was to learn the secret of this well that two merchants, a lawyer and two newspaper writers provided themselves with a rope, ladder, implements for breaking stone and lanterns. They decended fifty feet into the well, where they found a narrow gallery fifty feet long, leading by a gradual descent to a chamber 225 feet long, 110 feet wide and 24 feet high.

In the center of the chamber was a large mausoleum, carved out of the solid rock and covered with devices, inscriptions and bas-reliefs. On a stone couch, in its center, lay the stone figure of a man of giant proportions and well carved. A carved winged cap or helmet covered the head. Carved vases, decorated with flowers and leaves, stood at the corners of the couch. A copper lamp hung suspended above the head of the figure. Twenty smaller tombs were found against the walls of the chamber, and twenty-five faces had been painted on the wall near the entrance. A tomb was broken open and revealed a well preserved mummy 9 feet 1 inch in length.—The hair was of fine texture, black and curly. A copper spear head, almost as hard as a file, several copper utensils, a cup, two plates and a small urn were also found in the tomb. Wrapped in varnish cloth, at the head of the mummy, lay a book of 100 thin copper leaves, on which characters had been engraved.

What a Menagerie Costs.

An untrained elephant at the age of 28 or 30 is worth $10,000, and a performing elephant $15,000.

The value of a male lion is about $2,000, and of a female about $1,000.

A fine specimen of the royal Bengal tiger is worth $2,500. The female is much less valuable.

The striped hyena is rated at $500, the spotted at $200.

A South American panther costs from $100 to $200. A male is worth about twice as much as a female.

The prices of sea-lions range from $100 to $200.

Seals cost from $300 to $400.

A polar bear is worth $1,000.

Black bears can be bought in any number for $100 each.

A poonah bear, from Hindoostan, is worth $500.

The South American tapir costs from $600 to $800.

The cost of a rhinoceros is from $6,000 to $10,000.

The value of the hippopotamus is from $3,000 to $5,000.

A giraffe 18 feet high is worth $25,000.

Camels cost $300 and $400.

The sacred cow can be purchased for $700 or $800.

The zebra is worth $700 or $800.

A gazelle costs $1,000; a nylghau, $1,500; an eland, $3,000; and a hartebeest, $3,500.

The ordinary oryx costs $1,000.

The llama is valued at $500.

The yak, from Sibira and Tartary, ranges from $1,000 to $1,500.

The one blesbok in this country cost $3,000.

The oudode, a strange-looking beast from the north of Africa, costs from $600 to $800.

Kangaroos are rated at from $500 to $1,000.

The price fixed for ostriches is from $2,000 to $2,500.

The prices of the different kinds of birds range from $5 to $100.

The big snakes are worth $200 to $500.

Monkeys are valued at from $50 to $200.

Some of the large menageries are worth $1,000,000. A small one would cost at the lowest estimate $50,000.

Annoyance Avoided.

Gray hairs are honorable but their premature appearance is annoying. Parker's Hair Balsam prevents the annoyance by promptly restoring the youthful color.

Raising Walnut Trees.

I saw in a recent number of the Farmer an inquiry in regard to propagating the walnut. As I have had some experience in that line, I will give it for the benefit of such as may wish to start a grove of them. Two years ago last fall, I gathered a quanity of walnuts, laid them on the ground and covered with leaves, so as to keep them moist. The next spring when I planted my potatoes, I took up the walnuts which were then cracking open and the sprouts beginning to show, and dropped them in the rows with the potatoes, covered and cultivated the same as potatoes. Some came up immediately, others not until late in the summer. They made a growth of from one to two feet that season. I had not enough walnuts to plant the grounds I wished, so I went into the woods and gathered those that had laid under the trees all winter and finished my planting. They were partially dry. Some of these came up that season, but many did not until the next summer. I have now 300 trees on one acre, ranging from one foot to four or five in highth, those that came up first making the strongest and thriftiest trees. Seeds with hard shells, intended for planting, should never be allowed to get dry. Plant close, then thin out.

THE BARD AND THE BUMBLE BEE.

CLARENCE A. BUSKIRK.

(One summer day, a pleasant hour
I spent within my garden bower,
While Burns, with sly and pungent power
My soul elated;
When came a bee to rob a flower,
And thus I prated:)

Aha! thou nasty, noisy thing!
Am I a clover-top, to bring
About my face thy saucy wing
And draggled breeches?
Be off now with that facile sting—
Too lithe it switches!

Because thy lazy legs are wet
With sweets which some poor flowret
Hath yielded to thy robber set,
Thou needst not swagger!
Thou'rt but a thieving villain yet,
Armed with thy dagger!

Thy vaunted business is a cheat;
Thy honied stores a gross deceit;
And thou, thyself, a vile dead-beat,
And worthless braggart!
Keep off! I'll own that in one feat
Thou art no laggart!

Egad! who'd think that thou could'st make
Big men like me to jump and quake?
Egad! much freedom thou dost take,
Thou buzzing sinner!
I show more spryness for thy sake,
Than for my dinner!

Keep off, I say! Take care, take care!
Jehosaphat! but that's not fair,
To fly so near a fellow's hair,
With mimic thunder!
Thou Satan's imp! to sting me there,
My coat tails under!

* * * * * * *

Alas! as age comes on, I find
It does not pay to speak one's mind
Always, because one feels inclined;
And that too many
Vile things insult our human kind,
Too fleet away with any.

"A word is but an idle thing"—
To keep away a hornet's sting;
But stones and sticks to break his wing
Are efficacious.
Protests in vain at wasps we fling,
But clubs are gracious.

A COOL SCOUNDREL.

My profession isn't a popular one. There is considerable prejudice against it. I don't myself think it's much worse than a good many others. However, that's nothing to do with my story. Some time ago me and the gentleman who was at that time connected with me in the business—he's met with reverses since then, and at present isn't able to get out—was looking around for a job, being at that time rather hard up, as you might say. We struck a small country town—I ain't a going to give it away by telling where it was, or what the name of it was. There was one bank there; the president was a rich old duffer; owned the mills, owned the bank, owned most of the town. There was no other officer but the cashier, and they had a boy who used to sweep out and run errands.

The bank was on the main street, pretty well up one end of it—nice, snug place, on the corner of a cross street, with nothing very near it. We took our observations, and found there was not any trouble about it. There was an old watchman that walked up and down the street at nights, when he didn't fall asleep and forget it. The vault had two doors; the outside one was chilled iron and had a three-wheel combination lock; the inner door was not any door at all; you could kick it open. It didn't pretend to be nothing but fire-proof, and it wasn't even that. The first thing we done, of course, was to fit the key to the outside door. As the lock on the outside door was an old-fashioned Bacon lock, any gentleman of my profession who chances to read this article will know just how easy that job was, and how we done it. I may say here that the gentlemen in my line of business having at times a great deal of leisure on their hands, do considerable reading, and are particularly fond of a neat bit of writing. In fact, in the way of literature, I have found among them—however, this being digression, I drop it and go on with the main job again.

This was our plan: After the key was fitted I was to go into the bank, and Jim—that wasn't his name, of course, but let it pass—was to keep watch on the outside. When any one passed he was to tip me a whistle, and then I doused the glim and lay low; and after they go by, I goes on again. Simple and easy, you see. Well, the night as we selected, the president happened to be out of town; gone down to the city, as he often did. I got inside all right, with a slide lantern, a greast drill, a small steal jimmy, a bunch of skeleton keys and a green baise bag, to stow the swag. I fixed my light, and rigged my breast drill, and got to work on the door right over the lock.

Probably a great many of your readers are not so well posted as me about bank locks, and I may say for them that a three wheel combination has three wheels in it, and a slot in each wheel. In order to unlock the door, you have to get the slots opposite to each other, at the top of the lock. Of course, if you know the number the is lock set on, you can do this; but if you don't you have to depend on your ingenuity. There is in each of these small wheels a small hole, through which you put a wire through the back of the lock, when you change the combination. Now, if you can bore a hole through the door, and pick up those wheels by running a wire through those holes, why you can open the door. I hope I make myself clear. I was boring that hole. The door was chilled iron; about the neatest stuff I ever worked on. I went on steady enough; only stopped when Jim—which as, I said, wasn't his real name—whistled outside, and the watchman toddled by. By-and-by, when I'd got pretty near through I heard Jim—so to speak—whistle again. I stopped, and pretty soon heard footsteps outside, and I'm blowed if they didn't come right up the bank steps, and I heard a key in the lock. I was so dumbfoundered when I heard that, that you could have slipped the bracelets right on me. I picked up my lantern, and I'll be hanged if I didn't let the slid down and throw the light right on the door, and there was the President. Instead of calling help, as I thought he would, he took a step inside the door, and shaded his eyes with his hands and looked at me. I knew I ought to knock him down and get out, but I'm blest if I could, I was that surprised.

"Who are you?" says he.

"Who are you?" says I, thinking that was an innocent remark as he commenced it, and a trying all the time to collect myself.

"I'm the President of the bank," says he kinder short; "something's the matter with the lock?"

By George! the idea came to me then.

"Yes, sir," says I touching my cap; "Mr. Jennings, he telegraphed this morning as the lock was out of order and he couldn't get in, and I'm come on to open it for him."

"I told Jennings a week ago," says he, "that he ought to get that lock fixed. Where is he?"

"He's been a writing letters and he's gone up to the house to get another the letter he wanted to answer."

"Well, why dont you go right on?" says he.

"I've got almost through," says I; "and I didn't want to finish up and open the vault till there was somebody here."

"That's very creditable to you," says he, "a very proper sentiment, my man. You can't," he goes on, coming round by the door, "be too particular about avoiding the very suspicion of evil."

"No, sir," says I, kinder modest like.

"What do you suppose is the matter with the lock?" says he.

"I dont rightly know yet," says I; "but I rather think it's a little wore on account of not being oiled enough. These 'ere locks ought to be oiled once a year."

"Well," says he "you might as well go right on, now I'm here; I will stay till Jennings comes. Can't I help you?—hold your lantern, or something of that sort?"

The thought came to me like a flash, and I turned around and says:

"How do I know you're the president? I ain't ever seen you before, and you may be a-trying to crack this bank, for all I know?"

"That's a very proper inquiry, my man," said he, "and shows a remarkable degree of discretion. I confess that I should not have thought of the position in which I was placing you. However, I can easily convince you that it's all right. Do you know what the president's name is?"

"No, I dont," says I sorter surly.

"Well, you will find it on that bill," said he' taking a bill out of his pocket, "and you see the same name on these letters," and he took some letters from his pocket.

I suppose I ought to have gone right on then, but I was beginning to feel interested in making him prove who he was, so I says:

"You might have got them letters to put up a job on me."

"Your'e a very honest man," says he: "one among a thousand. Don't think I'm at all offended at your persistence. No, my good fellow, I like it," and he laid his hand on my shoulder. "Now here," says he, taking a bundle out of his pocket, "is a package of $10,000 in bonds. A burglar wouldd't be apt to carry these around with him, would he? I bought them in the city yesterday, and stopped here to-night on my way home to place them in the vault, and, I may add, that your simple, and manly honesty has so touched me, that I would willingly leave them in your hands for safe keeping. You needn't blush at my praise."

I suppose I did turn sorter red when I see them bonds.

"Are you satisfied now?" says he.

I told him I was, thoroughly, and so I was. So I picked up my drill again, and gave him my lantern to hold so I could see the door. I heard Jim, as I called him, outside once or twice, and I like to have burst out laughing once or twice, thinking how he must be wondering what was going on inside. I worked away, and kept explaining to him what I was trying to do. He was very much interested in mechanics, he said, and he knowed as I was a man as was up in my business, and took quite a fancy to me. I turned around once in awhile and looked at him a setting up there as solemn as a biled owl, with my lantern in his blessed hand, and I'm blamed if I didn't think I should have to holler right out.

I got through the lock pretty soon, and put in my wire and opened it. Then he took hold of the door and opened the vault.

"I'll put my bonds in" said he, "and go home. You can lock up and wait until Mr. Jennings comes. I do not suppose you will try and fix the lock to-night."

I told him I should'nt do anything more with it now, as we could get in before morning.

"Well, I'll bid you good night, my man," said he, and I swung the door to again.

Just then I heard Jim, by name, whistle, and I guessed the watchman was a coming up the street.

"Ah," says I, "you might speak to the watchman, if you see him and tell him to keep an extra look-out to-night."

"I will," says he, and we both went to the front door.

"There comes the watchman up the street," says he. "Watchman, this man has been fixing the bank lock, and I want you to keep a sharp look-out to-night. He will stay here until Mr. Jennings returns."

"Good night," again says he, and we shook hands again, and he went up the street.

I saw Jim, so-called, in the shadow on the other side of the street, as I stood on the step talking with the watchman.

"Well," says I to the watchman, "I'll go and pick up my tools and get ready to go."

I went back into the bank, and it didn't take long to throw the door open and stuff them bonds into the bag. There was some boxes lying around, and a safe as I should like to have tackled, but it seemed like tempting Providence after the luck we'd had. I looked at my watch and see it was just quarter past 12. There was an express went through at half-past 12. I tucked my tools in the bag on the top of the bonds, and walked out to the front door. The watchman was the steps.

"I don't believe I'll wait for Mr. Jennings," says I. "I suppose it will be all right if I give you his keys."

"That's all right," says the watchman.

"I wouldn't go away very far from the bank," says I.

"No, I won't," says he; "I'll stay right about here all night."

"Good night," says I, and shook hands with him, and me and Jim—which wasn't his right name, you understand—took the 12:30 express, and the best part of that job was we never heard nothing of it. It never got into the papers.

GOOD NIGHT.

Good night—the little lips touch ours
And little arms enfold us;
And, O, that thus through coming years
They might forever hold us.

Good night! we answer back and smile
And kiss the drooping eyes,
But in our trembling hearts the while
The wistful queries rise,

Who, in the weary years to come,
When we are hid from sight,
Will clasp these little hands and kiss
These little lips "good night!"

RURAL LIFE OF ENGLAND.

English Farms and the Homesteads of English Farmers.

Captain Mayne Reed in N Y Tribune

English farms are generally of large acreage; if I mistake not, larger than the Americans suppose them to be. Holdings of 1,000 acres are not uncommon, and there are some of 2,000 or even more. This depends a good deal on the country; farms in the strictly agricultural shires being the largest, and on some of these the live and dead stock will be valued at £10,000 or £15,000. On the other hand there are farms of fifty acres or even twenty-five, though they are not numerous enough. For small farm holdings and "peasant proprietorship" have been unpopular in England, the powers that be not liking them. Yet are they just the thing England wants, though her people, strange to say, are little aware of it. The land owners do all they can to discourage the practice, preferring to let their land in large tracts and get their rents in a lump sum, with certain other conveniences accruing. Up to the present time they have had their own way about this, the farmers playing into their hands. For if one of these came to grief and had to turn out there was no fear of his farm lying unoccupied. The farmer bordering upon it was only too ready to take it in, as an addendum to that he already held, at the same or at even an increased rental. In the way of land the English farmer is an Oliver, "ever asking for more." Never knew I one who, in his own estimation, had enough, and scarce know I one who has not already double the quantity he is capable of cultivating as it should be cultivated. I could point to many who, year after year, have large fields lying fallow and unproductive, simply because they lack the strength in hands and horses to crop them at the required time. England's weather is proverbially fickle, and he who has not the means to take advantage of its favoring spells may lose largely by the want of them. Money will nearly always accomplish this—the ready cash to pay laborers' wages and call them up as by drum beat. But if the money be not there, and a week of fine weather be missed, or sometimes only a single day, there may be no other chance for the seed to go into the ground as it should be, or crop taken off it. From such cause I have seen £100 worth of hay lying rotten on the meadows of a single farm, and in a season by no means exceptionally unfavorable for hay-making. In point of fact, the holders of small farms, not thus handicapped, are they who succeed best, though it be only in a small way. And better is it for them in the end than for those with large ones without the capital to work them. This truth, almost self-evident, is at length beginning to dawn on the perception of the English farmer—not a very acute one. But his present difficulties and necessities have summoned up the strength of his intellect, and should he succeed in mastering the problem—and find out the mistake under which he has been long laboring—then a new state of things will arise; and large farms will be subdivided into small ones, with a separate homestead erected on each. When this comes to pass—if it ever does—your emigration commissioners at Castle Garden will have less work on their hands, at least as regards looking after emigrants from England. Taking English farms as they are now, one of 500 acres; and to such, be it understood, are the remarks that follow chiefly confined.

Approaching the homestead of an English farmer, the traveler, if a stranger to the country, will be surprised to see it placed in seemingly the very worst spot on the farm, the most inconvenient for its purposes. Nor is this a seeming, but a reality; the site in a majority of cases being against a steep declivity, where there is barely enough level ground to turn a wagon about upon. Why this is I cannot tell, nor can anyone else whom I have consulted on the subject. It is one of those obscure and perverse things whose very perversity courts inquiry while defying explanation. English roads often run straight up the steepest face of a hill, when a slight turn to right or left would conveniently avoid it. But for this there is an assignable reason; they are on the routes of the ancient "trackways," before wheels came into use, traversed only by the pack-horse, and that under the saddle. But the farmhouse, hung as it was on the hillside, where it has been hanging for a period beyond memory, is a puzzle even to the archæologist. In itself it is a structure sui generis, unlike anything else in the way of a dwelling-place. The eye encounters a grand array of walls, six to ten feet high, with several red tiled roofs, sometimes slated, rising above them; one of these being the barn, often as big as a town hall or church. Others of less dimensions are the stable, cow-house and cattle sheds, all set around and partially inclosing the farmyard or "fodder." This is a large, unpaved space, littered all over with straw, in which cattle and cart horses stand knee-deep. In Winter and wet weather it becomes "muck," when the farm laborers, who must needs pass through, walk in it up to their ankles. Outside is the rick-yard, or "rick-fodder," where the eye is feasted on like prodigality of straw, but to a still less profitable use; or rather to no use at all—stacks of it left unthatched, and rotting under the winter's rain! Yet taken to market when in good condition, or offered for sale where it stands, it would command a price of £2 10s per ton, almost as much as hay. But there is a clause in the farmer's agreement of tenancy which hinders his selling the straw "off the land." It must be consumed on it; and the cottager, living close by, who wants a "bottling" to bed his pig, or bait his donkey with, cannot get it there, but must often go miles for the commodity, to some other farmer who chances to be a freeholder. This withholding the right to dispose of his straw as he pleases—the reason, to prevent impoverishment of the land—is one of the English farmer's grievances; no slight one, either, and may often be the "straw which breaks the camel's back," forcing him into bankruptcy.

In the midst of the farm buildings, or a little to one side of them, is the dwelling itself, inconspicuous and generally of mean appearance. Enter it, and if a stranger you will be ushered into the parlor, small and fairly well furnished, though with a somewhat cold, uncomfortable aspect, fires being only kept up in it when there is a guest. But the real abode and common sitting-room of the family is the kitchen, a more ample apartment, with tiled or flagged floor, covered by a spread of cocoa-fiber matting. A high-backed "settle," slightly curved in shape, occupies one side of the fire-place, and possibly a stout, heavy arm-chair the other. The common culinary utensils will not be seen here, but in the scullery or smaller kitchen at the back, where most of the cooking is also done. Meals are served in the cocoa-carpeted sitting-room, on a table neither splendidly appointed nor luxuriously spread. The American who has read Harriet Martineau and the Howitts (William and Mary) will no doubt imagine that the English farmer fares of the best—old yeomanry style—grand joints of roast beef, venison pasties, plum puddings and the like. All fanciful—authors' fancies. Never was their description of life more unlike its reality; or, if it ever was real, I can emphatically affirm it is not so now. The farmer's fare may be plenteous, but it is aught but nice, and barely palatable. Plain roasting and boiling are all of the culinary art known to his wife and her one—their is usually only one—female domestic. Among the country people of England there is absolutely nothing that deserves to be called a cuisine. The Scotch and Irish have their "dishes," some of them appetizing and excellent, but with the English it is roast or boiled, chop, steak and rasher of bacon—nothing besides.

As already said, the farmer ordinarily keeps only one female servant, a rough country girl, little trained, and having slight knowledge of household duties in the "genteel" way. Where there is a large family of children there may be a second, half-house, half-nurse maid. Of men-servants, who eat and sleep on the premises, there are none save sometimes a lout of a boy, who has his bed in the "toilet," or some such roost over barn, stable or grainary. All man-service about the place is performed by the farm-laborers, who, being on board-wages, have no residential footing in the establishment. They come to it at 6 o'clock a. m., and go away at 6 o'clock p. m., these being their hours in most districts. And as the greater part of the work is done by horses, the men-laborers are few, three or four with a wagoner-boy being thought sufficent for a farm of 200 acres, even with a dozen milch cows, and a flock of sheep on it. In England men do the milking, and though the dairy or butter maid may still exist, the poetical milkmaid, pretty or plain, is obsolete.

Drugs in Patent Medicines.

An analyst of the New York State board of health, Dr. Hoffman, says in his late report that: "The trade list of secret and proprietary remedies embraces at present a much larger number of articles than all the legitimate preparations of the pharmacopœia. A number of them have been analyzed, and some have been found to contain potent drugs, the dispensation of which would hardly be risked in the practice of legitimate medication."

JOCOSITIES.

A Chinese baby, in Sacramento, has been named Arthur, and the little pagan has V toes on each foot.

It takes more than ten mills to make a cent, the Lynn Item says, when the operatives are on a strike.

All sorts of sleeves are admissible for ladies' dresses, but the coat sleeve, round the waist, remains the favorite.

One year ago a needle entered the wrist of a young lady in Elmira, and the other day it was removed from the right arm of the fellow who is her steady company.

She had been in the country only a short time, coming from the Emerald Isle, so her empoyer was not surprised when she causally asked if he'd have his eggs boiled in hot or cold water.

The remark of an exchange that "many of our successful lawyers began life as preachers" is gracefully corrected by one of the legal gentlemen referred to, who begs leave to state that he began life as an infant.

Sarah Bernhardt is married. When Charles Mathews married Madame Vestris there was much amusement. "She told him everything," and one pretty actress. "What courage!" said another. "But what a memory!" said a third.

I bend my knee in the sand;
My heart—she has gone before;
The prints of her foot is before me, and
I measure it o'er and o'er.
Look how the lines of strength
Cross it from side to side;
Just a short eighteen inches in length
And eight and three-quarters wide.

"Yes," she said. "My husband has treated me brutally, but I'll be revenged! I'll begin cleaning house at once, and he'll sleep in a room with the carpets up and loose tacks on the cold floor; he'll eat his meals on the top of the ice chest in the woodshed for ten days."

Rose McWhortlesberry heard her master remark that "Kismet" meant "fate," and this was the reason why she so much astonished her mistress by remarking the next day to Bellinda the chambermaid: "Oh, Belindy, I can scarcely walk wid de chilblains all over me two kismets."

She was sorry she spoke. Young farmer (surveying the stock)—"A pretty tidy lot, Maria." Wife (considerably the senior)—"Aye, but they would na be there maybe warn' it for my brass!" Husband (nettled)—"Why, lass, gin it be come to that wit ye, if it had no' been for your money, mayhap ye wid na been here yerself!"

The Charm of Manner.

A man died a violent death in New York, a few years ago, who was known to all the country as a thief, a libertine, a speculative gambler in the most exaggerated degree, and who priced himself in being known as such; yet when he was dead there was a sudden hush of regret.

One person told how fond a son he had been to his father. Another how generous was his care of the poor. This man had a story to tell of his jumping from his carriage to help a fallen horse in the road; that, of the pet birds who followed the gambler from room to room of his house, perched on his shoulder, eating from his lips.

Even good men were so dazzled by the sunny generosity, the warm sympathy and general good comradship of the man, that they were almost blind, or at least were silent as to his crimes, until the secular press boldly denounced their false charity, showed its probable effect upon the boys who were just entering life, and labeled the dead man as only a successful, openhanded swindler.

Now the point is, if geniality and generosity are such good qualities as to lend a gloss to a debased and vicious character, why do not good people use them oftener to adorn their real virtues?

Nothing is so rare in the world as that unselfish, cordial, good fellowship; that quick throwing of ourselves into the interests and feeling of others, which gave to this unprincipled man his magnetism and influence. Nothing is so attractive or powerful with every rank or class. Not beauty, or money, or intellect, has its irresistable charm. Simply because the most interesting thing to every man is his own self, and the more concern you show in that the greater will be your influence with him.

Besides this, it is the right feeling to cultivate towards others, and the right manner to show. Many high principled people do their duty all through life, but with as hard and callous a temper and face as if they were paying a debt of of which they begrudged every penny.

They render their dues, perhaps, to God and to Cæsar, but in rusty black metal, instead of shining, jingling coins. They march alone along the pathway of life wrapped in their own thoughts and purposes, when they ought to be singing in good company.

Many girls who lack beauty of face, many dull boys, who will read this, who are tempted to envy the beauty and cleverness of their companions, but who do not realize that they have within their own reach a real Aladdin's lamp—a sincere, cordial manner, an unselfish interest in others—which will not only command friends for them but will brighten their own inner lives as no other gift can brighten them.

Facts About The Pension Roll.

A resolution was adopted in the Senate on April 5, calling for the total number of pensioners upon the roll, annual value of the pension roll, and the amount actually paid, including arrears, for the year ending September 4, 1881. The Secretary of the Interior, through Commissioner Dudley, has obtained the information called for and has sent it to the Senate. The number of pensioners on the roll in September, 1881, was 179,851, the annual value of whose pensions was $29,268,460. Of these, 15,000 were not paid, and the pensioners not having called for their pensions within three years, they have lapsed; 5,000 were sailors, whose residences were not known, and 252,751 pensioners were paid, the amount required to pay their annual pensions and arrears being $51,525,236. In New York State there were 32,024 pensioners on the roll, the annual value of whose pensions was $4,426,468 and to whom $9,210,611 was given in annual payment and arrears. Pennsylvania comes next in importance to New York, with 28,292 pensioners; annual value of pensions, $3,028,292, and annual payments and arrears, $5,747,862. Ohio is a good third in order, with 24,668 pensioners, the annual value of whose pensions were $5,626,900, but to whom were paid in annual payment and arrears $2,941,550. Pensioners in Indiana, Iowa, Maine, Massachusetts and Michigan received upwards of $2,000,000 in annual payments and arrears, and in Kansas, Kentucky, Missouri, New Jersey and Wisconsin, they received upward of $1,000,000. Alaska has one pensioner, who received $175. The most populous Congressional district is the First of Kansas, which has 2,930 pensioners, and the district in which the largest amount was paid to pensioners was the Third of Maine, which has 2,645 pensioners, who were paid $641,359. The comparative gain subsequent to September, 1881, will be generally distributed among the Eastern, Middle and Western States, and in Tennessee and West Virginia, while in the remaining Southern States the losses by death of 1,812 pensioners will not vary matrially from additions to the rolls for these localities.

Farm and Workshop Notes.

The number of registered shorthorn bulls in England is over 45,000.

Too much water in a flower pot is injurious. Keep the earth moist only.

Cabbage will thrive on any soil that produces corn, but the stronger the soil the better.

Underground silos of 500 tons capacity, with proper ventilation, are now the rage in Germany.

Over 4,000 hams, specially cured for the purpose, were shipped from New York to Cuba last month.

The Herefords are gradually gaining on the shorthorns in favor, and are considered by some superior to them.

Never feed decayed roots to stock, especially sheep, as they have been known to seriously injure some flocks.

In highly bred and liberally fed animals the teeth are produced earlier than in those living under the reverse conditions.

To cement leather to metal: Wash the metal with hot gelatine; steep the leather in an infusion of nut galls (hot), and bring the two together.

Those who have spaded their gardens will find the action of the frost the few cold nights of this week beneficial in assisting to pulverize the soil.

An English horticulturist, who is a careful observer of insect life, has noticed that honey-bees rarely go near those flowers which bumble-bees like best.

A Minneapolis inventor is introducing a method of conveying grain in pipes, in which a current of air is produced by exhaustion pumps at intervals along the line.

Small yolkless eggs, sometimes observed in case of the fowls, denotes overfeeding, most likely an exclusive diet of indian corn, with little exercise and no green food.

To insure success in bee-keeping, it requires a vigilant eye and a proper amount of industry, together with a good location for bees, a good movable frame hive and plenty of bee pasture.

Hen manure carries less water than stable manure, but more nitrogen and organic matter. As to potash and phosphoric acid, there is a great similarity in the constituents of both materials.

Ex-secretary Evarts, who is increasing the size of his Vermont farm, is the man who, when asked by a friend for something from his pen, sent the gentleman a fine young porker.

A new slate frame is made from strips of pasteboard, hard felting or the like, molded and cemented together, and which is designed to obviate the disagreeable noise made by pupils in using the ordinary wooden frame.

The produce of young mares are apt to be the most healthy and vigorous. There can be no greater error than that of putting a mare to the stud when she is incapacitated for work, either from age or accident.

It is not desirable to breed animals that will eat but little, as it is not reasonable to expect such to give as large a proportionate return for feed consumed as those which have efficient digestive organs of greater capacity.

The exports of pork, meats and lard from all points in the United States and Canada, from November 1, 1881, to January 21, 1882, were 323,595,825 pounds, a decrease of 97,908,503 pounds for the same time the previous year.

Intelligent breeders make rigorous selections of breeding stock. The late Edwin Hammond was once asked what proportion of the rams bred by himself he would be willing to use in his own flock, and he answered promptly: "Not one in three hundred."

To get a gear wheel off a shaft upon which it has been shrunk, it is recommended to pour some melted iron around the hub, by which operation the latter will expand so quickly that there will be no time for the shaft to get hot, and the gear will come off easily.

Superphosphates are naturally more speedy in their effects than manures consisting of undissolved phosphate. A small quantity of phosphoric acid applied as superphosphate will have as great an effect as a considerable quantity applied as bones or ground phosphate.

Illegitimate tampering with exhibition animals is practiced at English live stock shows. A glaring instance of this offence was brought to notice at a recent show, at which a Clydesdale horse was disqualified for having had false hair ingeniously added to his heavy feet.

The following is recommended as a cure for colic or stretches in sheep: One-half pint of lard to which one-fourth of a teaspoonful of cayenne pepper has been added. The attack can always be prevented, however, by feeding of potatoes or turnips every day.

A new method of beet sugar manufacture consists of submitting the juice to some chemical (yet a secret), after which it is filtered. Evaporation and granulation follow, and this ends the process, which is said to be reduced to extreme simplicity. This is a German discovery.

The Dublin Detectives Endeavoring to Gain a Clew to the Murderers.

Dublin Murder.

Lord Frederick Cavendish recently appointed Secretary for Ireland to succeed Foster, and Burk, Under Secretary were murdered in a park at Dublin Saturday night, by four men, who drove off and were not apprehended.

COMMENTS OF THE PARIS PRESS.

Paris, May 8.—Gambett's organ says it will be difficult for Gladstone to maintain the policy of conciliation toward the party resorting to the dagger and revolver as an argument.

The Legitimist and other party organs dwell upon the blow to Gladstone's policy.

The Marseillaise, while pitying the victims, says the situation of the Irish policy forbids an expression of too much sympathy.

The National expresses sorrow and sympathy with Gladstone.

EXAMINING DRIVERS.

Dublin, May 8.—The detectives have a register of all the car-drivers here, and are examining the drivers individually in order to ascertain their whereabouts on Saturday.

A special messenger left London for Dublin this morning.

EMPEROR WILLIAM SHOCKED.

Berlin, May 8.—Emperor William, on hearing the news of the murder of Cavendish and Burke, was as much shocked as he was when the Czar was assassinated.

REWARD OFFERED.

Boston, Mass., May 8.—John Boyle O'Reilley and Patrick A. Collins have telegraphed Parnell authorizing a reward of $5,000, on behalf of the Irishmen of Boston, for the apprehension of the murderers of Cavendish and Burke.

DENOUNCING THE CRIME.

West Chester, Pa., May 8.—The Michael Davitt Land League of this place passed resolutions expressing abhorrence at the assassination of Cavendish and Burke, and calling upon all true leaguers to aid in bringing the murderers to justice.

Boston, Mass., May 8.—The Irishmen of this city will hold a meeting to-morrow evening in Faneuil Hall, to express their detestation of the assassinations.

Terre Haute, Ind., May 8.—The Land League organization of this city last night, denounced as cowardly and infamous the assassination of the Chief and Under Secretary of Ireland.

WHAT FORSTER SAYS.

London, May 8.—Forster says he believes the murders were accomplished in order to show that it is impossible to conciliate the Fenians.

"MISCHIEVIOUS ADVISORS."

The Times says: "Forster was the victim of intrigue worked from within the Cabinet. The cowardly machinations against him paralysed the forces of order. Gladstone must cut his Cabinet loose from mischievous advisers, whose imbecility, malignity and presumption led to this result."

DEPRECATES MARTIAL LAW.

Cork, May 8.—The Herald deprecates the idea of martial law, in view of the tremendous manifestations of public feeling in Ireland, showing that there is absolutely no sympathy for the assassins.

THE CHIEF SECRETARYSHIP.

London, May 8.—Johnson, the Attorney General for Ireland, temporarily takes the Chief Secretaryship.

AN OLD SPEECH REPRINTED.

The Conservative papers reprint the speech of Biggar, M. P., to the Cork Farmers' Club in March, 1880, extolling the example of the Nihilist Hartmann.

THE INQUEST.

At the resumed inquest in Dublin to-day, Johnson represented the Government, and spoke with considerable emotion.

IRISH BUSINESS IN PARLIAMENT.

The Pall Mall Gazette says: "It is understood the Ministry intends to postpone the procedure rules, and the whole of the rest of the session will be occupied with Irish business."

IN MOURNING.

Dublin, May. 8.—The Freeman's Journal appears in mourning.

CHARGED TO THE FENIANS.

London, May 8.—The Manchester Guardian says the crime is traceable to the Fenian party, recruited mainly from America, who again interfered when they saw conciliation probable. It says it is a desperate and malignant conspiracy limited to a small number of persons.

GLADSTONE TO THE MARQUIS OF RIPON.

Gladstone to-day, replying to the condolences of the Marquis of Ripon, Viceroy of India, telegraphs: "The object of this black act is plainly to arouse the indignant passions and embitter the relations between Great Britain and Ireland."

PETITION TO DISSOLVE PARLIAMENT.

The St. James Gazette says: A requisition has been made to the Lord Mayor of London to call a meeting in Guildhall to petition the Queen to dissolve Parliament on the ground of the belief that many Liberals and Conservatives desire to elect another Parliament to deal more successfully with the reign of murder in Ireland.

REWARD OFFERED.

New York, May 8.—The British Government will offer a large reward through the British Consul General of this city to any one in America furnishing a clew to the murders of Cavendish and Burke.

Dublin, May 9.

An important arrest has just been made at Tuam of a man believed to be the car-man who drove the assassins. He cannot account for himself. He gives the name Cloonan, and he closely resembles the description circulated by the police. An order has been issued to arrest all strangers and tramps unable to account for their movements during the last three days.

All the Dublin newspapers are in mourning.

It is stated that the police are hopeful of capturing the assassins. They have received evidence which will enable them to identify the murderers. It is also said that the car in which they escaped has been traced to Leixlip, ten miles northwest of Dublin, where the men alighted to procure liquor. Charles Moore, arrested at Maynooth, on suspicion of being one the assassins, has been brought to Dublin. The evidence against him is weak.

George Otto Trevelyn has been appointed Chief Secretary for Ireland. Immediately on his acceptance of the office, special policeman will be placed before his office.

San Francisco, Cal., May 9.—The Land League last night adopted resolutions that the executive of the league here telegraph to Parnell offering a special purse of $5.000 for the apprehension of the assassins.

FROM THE WIRES.

Keokuk, Iowa, dispatch:

The Constitution's Fort Madison special says: "The notorious Polk Wells and Cook were arrested this morning. They were found in Mr. Stinger's barn, about six miles from here, and surrendered at the muzzles of two double-barreled guns in the hands of Stinger and his son. They have just been brought in by Stinger and a posse of men in a wagon.

Louisville, Ky. dispatch:

L. H. Newton, an engineer on the Louisville and Nashville Railroad, residing at 1,022 Thirteenth street, returned home this morning from a trip on the road and found his wife in bed unconscious and at her side a 4-year-old adopted child dead. A note on the table written by Mrs. Newton was to the effect that she had given morphine to the child and taken a dose herself for the purpose of destroying the life of each. The father of the boy, a Mr. Stusser, husband of Mrs. Newton's deceased sister, was to have been married to-day and she was apprehensive that the father would take the child from her, and this prompted the act for the destruction of both lives. Mrs. Newton, it is thought, will recover.

Fall River, Mass., May 9.

Green, who perpetrated the swindle on the cotton men here, has probably left the country with $280,000. Some Mobile banks may be the losers. It is stated that five or six mills here l o sums varying from $5,000 to $15,000

A Cincinnati dispatch:

Charles B. Hildreth shot and killed Hiram R. Knapp at Beech Grove, near this city, this morning, in a quarrel about a trivial matter.

The Land-League of this city have called a meeting for to-morrow night to deplore the killing of Lord Cavendish and Under Secretary Burke.

New York dispatch says:

No gold was engaged for shipment yesterday, but foreign houses expect from $1,000,000 to $3,000,000 to go Saturday. One house says it is cheaper to buy sixty day bills than to ship gold, and thinks this fact will materially lessen shipments this week.

The Evening Post's Washington special says: "Alexander H. Stephens, upon entering the Capitol, slipped and fell this morning, and was considerably hurt. Owing to his feeble state, there are fears that the shock to his nervous system may prove serious."

Little Rock, Ark., dispatch:

Willis Pettit was hanged at Talaquah, Indian Territory, at noon today for the murder of Margaret Ford. The execution was private.

Dubuque, Iowa, dispatch:

The residents of East Dubuque, Ill., are excited over a horrible suicide, the facts of which are as follows: Several days ago a stranger put up at Sutter's hotel. His manner was cold and reserved, and his actions indicated a heavy weight upon his mind. At times he would be communicative, and stated that he was a circus man, and lost his wife on the ill-fated Golden City, that burned up at Memphis several weeks ago. He was a fine looking man, well dressed, and about 40 years of age. This morning at 6 o'clock he went into the railway tunnel for some distance, braced himself against the wall, drew out a revolver and sent a bullet crashing through his brain, the ball entering at the temple. His condition was soon discovered, and his body was taken to the hotel, where an inquest was held, disclosing his name to be H. T. Wensel, a resident of Fennimore, Wis. He lived six hours after receiving the wound.

A mob of 400 or more excited people assembled at the calaboose last night to wreak vengeance upon J. Peters, a scoundrel who was confined there on the charge of attempting to assault two little girls on Monday afternoon. The crowd wanted him to string him up and make an example of. By a strategic movement the officers and police ran him out of a rear window to the jail for more secure quarters. Peters' examination comes off to-day. Threats are made to wrench him from the officers while on the route to the court room.

St. Louis dispatch:

The Post-Dispatch's special from Warrenton, Mo., says a cyclone struck the Central Wesleyan College building at that place a little after 12 o'clock last night, tearing out the east wall, and parts of the roof, which were carried half a mile away. Seven persons sleeping in the building had a narrow escape. The loss is estimated from $10,000 to $15,000.

Brook Haven, Miss., May 8.

The county jail was destroyed by fire last night, burning to death three colored prisoners. It is believed they fired the building for the purpose of escape.

Madrid, May 9.

It is reported that the Government will introduce in the Cortes a bill providing for the public, instead of written and secret, procedure in law courts. The bill is intended as a preliminary step to the institution of trial by jury. The Democrats and influential Liberals advocate the latter.

Cruelties of the Priesthood.

Salt Lake Brigunn.

Among the batch of missionaries sent out by the Mormon church to make proselytes in Europe, was a young man who has only been married a little over a year. All Mormons look forward with dread to the semi-annual conference meeting when they expect to hear their names read off in the tabernacle, and receive the solemn summons to leave home and friends to wander in strange lands where they expect to be maltreated and imprisoned. There is no appeal from their appointment, and when a man's name is read off, he has nothing to do but to pack up his things and set out. It is generally understood that the men sent abroad are in some way specially fitted to spread the bogus gospel to the world, but the Mormons know well enough that a man who is a bishop's rival in love affairs is more likely than any other to be ordered to go. At the last conference a young man was ordered to England who had not been married much over a year. He was horror-stricken when he was appointed, and, going to the council, he begged to be excused on the ground that his wife would be heart-broken if he left her. The only reply he got was that there were plenty more wives to be had, and that he ought to take another wife to keep her company. He went home and told his wife the worst, and the poor woman became almost frantic with grief and apprehension. On Saturday last he bade her good by, kissed his child, but a few moths old, and started out on a two years' trip to help enslave others as he was enslaved. Since his departure his wife has been almost crazed and is inconsolable with grief. These are miseries which a cold and heartless priesthood are continually inflicting upon their benighted followers. The man who thus left a young wife at the bidding of the priests deserves no sympathy. Had he been possessed of the right sort of a heart and a little backbone, he would have cut loose from the rotten church, and when a priest came to expostulate kicked him down the steps.

Too Much Osculation.

New York Sun.

At an evening party in Kelkheim, in Germany, a few weeks ago, the question arose how many kisses could be exchanged between two lovers within a certain space of time. A youth offered to bet anybody present $50 that he and his betrothed would kiss one another 10,000 times within ten hours, provided they were permitted to partake of some slight refreshments at intervals of half an hour during the performance. His wager having been accepted, the affianced couple addressed themselves to the achievement of the task. At the expiration of the first hour their account stood accredited with 2,000 kisses. During the second they added another 1,000, and during the third 750 to that number. Then they both broke down. The youth's lips were stricken with cramp and the maiden fainted away. Later in the evening she was compelled to take to her bed with a sharp attack of neuralgia. An even more distressing result ensued, for it led too the breaking off of the matrimonial engagement.

THE LONE FISHERMAN.

The Traits of the Sportful Angler Narrated by One Who Evidently Knows Them.

R. J. Burdette.

Patient is the man who fishes, long suffering, addicted to malaria, lonely in his habits; he smelleth of the swamps; the odor of the alders clings to his raiment, and the truth is not in him. The patience of his life is its great charm. The sun that beats upon his unmurmuring head at noontide moves him not; the long afternoon only makes him sleepy; the threatening bank of clouds in the distant West has no terrors for him; the breath of the passing cyclone could not move him if it should happen to strike him just as he felt a bite. He is patient beyond all appreciation. From early morn till the dewy eve he fishes for something that he cannot see, and if he ever gives way to the slightest expression of impatience it is when the shadows of night fall upon him, and compel him to return home and leave the brook or pond or creek "just when they begin to bite."

He knows the habits and haunts of fish. He is a connoisseur in nibbles and a judge of bites. He knows there are rock bass close under the dam and sunfish among the tangled roots of the fallen cottonwood that lies bleached and naked, like a dead giant, looking as though it had swam ashore and then died before it could pull its roots out of the water. In the quiet pools under the high bank there are big suckers, and in the middle of the creek he can fish on the bottom for bull pout. And there are "punkin seeds" and "goggle eyes" in the dark holes just below the shallows, and there is a tradition about a "croppy," five inches long, that was caught down near the stone quarry; for the fish of the Western waters are not measured by weight as the liars of the Middle and New England States exaggerate their tiny trout, but by inches and feet, even as the seaserpent of the Jersey coast.

Moreover, the man who fishes knows how to allure the wily inhabitants of the deep. He spitteth upon his bait and refraineth from accustomed profanity. He knoweth that the "snake-feeders" circle in many colored lines above the place where abided the most fish. He knoweth that you cannot drown a "skeeter" or water spider, and that it is in vain that any man trieth to splash water on the back of the gregarious "stink-bug." When the worms are all used up, or by some heartbreaking mischance spilled into the creek, he baiteth with the mussel which passeth under the alias of clam, or he ensnareth, with many outspread fingers, much grass and few grasshoppers, or the after legs of the active frog supply him with the needful bait.

But he never catches any fish, no any to speak of. He has nibbles unnumbered, but not untold; he has big bites that thrill the blood of the man to whom he describes them; he pulls up three splendid fellows "clear out of the water!" he sees a dozen or more jump up in the middle of the creek; he could have caught two dozen if he could have got over on the other side of the creek, and fifty if he had had a boat. But for the wind being in the south, he would have eaten fish for the ensuing week; the sun was too hot or the day was too dark, or something or other. With a score of possibilities, and with numberless narrow escapes, he catches no fish.

But somehow, while he comes home fishless, he smells like a fish market. He has fallen into the creek twice or thrice, and has caught frogs or carried clams, and comes home wet to the neck, with weariness in his frame, aches in his joints, a smell of fish all about him, and not a fish near him. And thus year after year he fishes, and considers that he has had a holiday. He enjoys it, and it requires only a very few fish to satisfy his wild ambitions. If he can't fish he can lie, and the most successful fisher can tell no larger stories than the greatest failure.

No man has come to true greatness who has not felt in some degree that his life belongs to his race, and what God gives him He gives him for mankind.

Behind the snowy loaf is the mill wheel, behind the mill is the wheat-field, on the wheat-field falls the sunlight, above the sun is God.

Back Ache

POSITIVELY CURED

BY

Benson's Capcine Porous Plasters.

Reasons Why they are Preferred to All Other Porous Plasters or External Remedies:

First.

Because they possess all the merit of the strengthening porous plaster, and contain in addition thereto the newly discovered powerful and active vegetable combination which acts with increased rubefacient, stimulating, sedative and counter irritant effects.

Second.

Because they are a genuine pharmaceutical preparation, and so recognized by the profession.

Third.

Because they are the only plasters that relieve pain at once.

Fourth.

Because they will positively cure diseases which other remedies will not even relieve.

Fifth.

Because over 5000 physicians and druggists have voluntarily testified that they are superior to all other plasters or medicines for external use.

Sixth.

Because the manufacturers have received the only medals ever given for porous plasters.

BY YEARS OF USE!

A valuable Discovery and New Departure in Medical Science. A positively effective Remedy for the speedy and permanent Cure for organic weakness—the deplorable disease resulting from indiscreet practices or excesses in youth or at any time of life—by the only true way, viz: Direct Application acting by Absorption, and exerting its specific influence on the Vesicles, Ducts, and Gland, that are unable to perform their natural functions while this disease pervades the human organism. The use of the Pastille is attended with no pain or inconvenience, and does not interfere with the ordinary pursuits of life; it is quickly dissolved and soon absorbed, producing an immediate soothing and restorative effect upon the nervous organizations wrecked from vicious habits or excesses, stopping the drain from the system, restoring the mind to health and sound memory, removing the Dimness of Sight, Confusion of Ideas, Aversion to Society, etc., etc., and the appearance of premature old age usually accompanying this trouble, and restoring the vital forces, where they have been dormant for years. This mode of treatment has stood the test in very severe cases, and is now a pronounced success. Drugs are too much prescribed in this trouble, and, as many can bear witness to, with but little if any permanent good. There is no nonsense about this Preparation. Practical observation enables us to positively guarantee that it will give satisfaction. It has been in general use for several years and we have thousands of testimonials from patients, as to its value, and it is now conceded to be the most rational means yet discovered for reaching and curing this very prevalent trouble, that is well known to be the cause of untold misery to so many, and upon whom quacks prey with their useless nostrums and big fees. The Remedy is put up in neat boxes, of three sizes. No. 1, (enough to last a month,) $3; No. 2, (sufficient to effect a permanent cure, unless in severe cases,) $5; No. 3, (lasting over three months, will restore those in the worst condition,) $7. Sent by mail, in plain wrappers. Full DIRECTIONS for using will accompany EACH BOX.

Send for Sealed Descriptive Pamphlets giving Anatomical Illustrations and Testimony, which will convince the most skeptical that they can be restored to perfect health, and the vital forces thoro'ly re-established same as if never affected. Sold ONLY by

Market and 8th Sts. St. Louis, Mo.

Unsolicited testimony to the Efficacy of Prof. Harris' Pastilles, taken from Letters received from Patrons:

Indiana, April 11, '79.—The Remedy is working perfectly. Had epilepsy from weakness for 8 years past.

Iowa, Oct. 18th, '79.—I am almost surprised at your Pastilles. They have worked like a charm on me. I am just twice as much of a man as I was before taking. I was on the verge of the grave, I thought, and there was no cure for me, but now I am in good hopes for a cure.

West Virginia, Aug. 2, 1879.—I received your medicine and I believe it has cured me, for which I am very thankful. Inclosed find $5. Please send me another box (No. 2) for a friend. You have done a great thing for me. I will send you all the orders I can.

From a Physician and Surgeon.

Missouri, June 25.—Please forward me another box of the Pastilles. The patient on whom I have used most of one box, in addition to a sample box, is fast recovering, and I think another will set him all right.

From a Druggist.

Maryland, Sept. 2, '79.—Last January we got a box of your Remedy for one of our customers, and it has made a perfect cure of him. We have another customer now suffering in the same way, and wish one No. 2 box.

If you feel drowsy, debilitated, have frequent headache, mouth tastes badly, poor appetite and tongue coated, you are suffering from torpid liver, or "biliousness," and nothing will cure you so speedily and permanently as to take SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR OR MEDICINE.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

The cheapest, Purest and Best Family Medicine in the World.

An EFFECTUAL SPECIFIC for all diseases of the Liver Stomach and Spleen.

Regulate the Liver and prevent Chills and Fever, Malarious Fevers, Bowel Complaints, Restlessness, Jaundice and Nausea.

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common as bad breath, and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons' Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your Appetite, Complexion, and General Health.

PILES!

How many suffer torture day after day, making life a burden and robbing existence of pleasure, owing to the secret suffering from Piles. Yet relief is ready to the hand of almost any one who will use systematically the remedy that has permanently cured thousands. SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR, is no drastic violent purge; but a gentle assistant to nature.

CONSTIPATION!

Should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache.

SAMARITAN

NERVINE

SAMARITAN NERVINE

Cures Epileptic Fits, Spasms, Convulsions, St. Vitus Dance, Vertigo, Hysteria, Insanity, Apoplexy, Paralysis, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, and all Nervous Diseases. This infallible remedy will positively eradicate every species of Nervous Derangement, and drive them away from whence they came, never to return again. It utterly destroys the germs of disease by neutralizing the hereditary taint or poison in the system, and thoroughly eradicates the disease and utterly destroys the cause.

SAMARITAN NERVINE

Cures Female Weakness, General Debility, Leucorrhoea or Whites, Painful Menstruations, Ulceration, of the Uterus, Internal Heat, Gravel, Inflammation of the Bladder, Irritability of the Bladder. For Wakefulness at Night, there is no better remedy. During the change of life no Female should be without it. It quiets the Nervous System and gives rest, comfort and nature's sweet sleep.

SAMARITAN NERVINE

Cures Alcoholism, Drunkness and the habit of Opium Eating. These degrading habits are by far the worst evils that have ever befallen suffering humanity. Thousands die annually from these noxious drugs. The drunkard drinks liquor not because he likes it, but for the pleasure of drinking and treating his friends, little thinking that he is on the road to ruin. Like the Opium Eater, he first uses the drug in small quantities as a harmless antidote. The soothing influence of the drug takes strong hold upon its victim leading him on to his own destruction. The habits of Opium Eating and Liquor Drinking are precisely what eating is to alimentiveness, as over-eating first inflames the stomach, which redoubles its craving until it paralyzes both the stomach and appetite. So every drink of liquor or dose of opium, instead of satisfying, only adds to its fierce fires, until it consumes the vital force and then itself. Like the glutinous tape-worm, it cries "Give, give, give!" but never enough until its own rapacity devours itself. Samaritan Nervine gives instant relief in all such cases. It produces sleep, quiets the nerve, builds up the nervous system, and restores body and mind to a healthy condition.

SAMARITAN NERVINE

Cures Nervous Dyspepsia, Palpitation of the Heart, Asthma, Bronchitis, Scrofula, Syphilis, diseases of the Kidneys and all diseases of the urinary organs. Nervous debility, caused by the indiscretions of youth, permanently cured by the use of this invaluable remedy. To you, young, middle-aged and old men, who are covering your sufferings as with a mantle by silence, look up, you can be saved by timely efforts, and make ornaments to society, and jewels in the crown of your Maker, if you will. Do not keep the secret longer, until it saps your vitals, and destroys both body and soul. If you are thus afflicted, take Dr. Richmond's Samaritan Nervine. It will restore your shattered nerves, arrest premature decay, impart tone and energy to the whole system.

SAMARITAN NERVINE

is for sale by druggists everywhere, or may be had direct from us. Those who wish to obtain further evidence of the curative properties of Samaritan Nervine will enclose a 3-cent postage stamp for a copy of our Illustrated Journal of Health, giving hundreds of testimonials of cure from persons who have used the medicine, and also their pictures photographed after their restoration to perfect health. AUBURN, INDIANA, MAY 18, 1882

Democratic Convention.

Delegates from the several townships in DeKalb county will meet at the court house in Auburn,

SATURDAY, JUNE 10, 1882,

at 10 o'clock a. m. for the purpose of nominating candidates for the following offices:

Representative in the legislature.
County Clerk, County Auditor
County Treasurer, County Sheriff,
County Recorder, County Surveyor,
County Coroner.
Commissioner southwest district.
County Commissioner southeast district,
County Commissioner north district.

SELECTION OF DELEGATES:

All Democrats and others who intend to support the ticket nominated by the convention above named, are requested to meet at the usual voting places as they existed in their respective townships prior to the late division of townships and precincts, Saturday, June 3, 1882, at [illegible] o'clock p. m., for the purpose of selecting delegates to the county convention, in accordance with the following apportionment based upon the number of Democratic votes cast for secretary of state at the last state election.

Butler Township	12	delegates,
Jackson "	19	"
Concord "	23	"
Newville "	7	"
Stafford "	7	"
Wilmington	29	"
Auburn prec't	35	"
Waterloo prec't	18	"
Richland	16	"
Fairfield	[illegible]	"
Smithfield	18	"
Franklin	15	"
Troy	8	"
Keyser	30	"
Total,	255

The convention will transact such other business as may come before it.

By order of the Committee
M. BOLAND, Chairman.
J. A. BARNS, Sec'y.

THE Postoffice department will show over a million excess of receipts over expenditures this year, so it is said.

THERE is a rumor afloat, that a company has been formed to improve and utilize the vast water power now going to waste at Niagara Falls.

A BILL is before congress to reduce postage on letters to two cents, instead of three. It is confidently believed the bill will pass though it may not be reached this season.

THE people of this country, pay nearly double prices for their cups and saucers, plates and bowls, to help private corporations put more profits into their pockets. They do it with their little tariff.

JUDGE CARPENTER, of Garrett, died last Thursday morning at his home in that place. Mr. Carpenter had been a prominent citizen of Warsaw for many years and since his removal to his late home in Garrett, he has been so intimately connected with the business interests of that place, that his death will be severely felt.

OUR list of announcements is increasing in volume. Those who feared a dearth of candidates will be likely to be disappointed. Fortunately they are all good men, and such as can command the entire strength of the party. It is also to be noticed, that there is the best of feeling among the rival candidates, no bickering, no clashing, and no matter who are the lucky ones, those who get "downed" at the convention will do no whining.

THERE is another trouble about these constitutional amendments. You never can tell when they are adopted. If all the voters would come out and vote on the questions submitted to them it might do. But to have about one half of the voters turn out, and of these, about two-thirds vote for, and one-third against, and then to have this one-third of the voters of the state, declared a constitutional majority, that's what don't take so well. But that is the way it is done.

THERE has been a little complaint in regard to the appointing of delegates at the recent meeting of the central committee. We have talked with a great many of the committee, and they all regret that any trouble has arisen, as the appointment of these delegates was made in good faith and no intention of doing a thing that could be improperly construed. The records of the committee show that the same thing was done two years ago. And further, to show that no wrong intention was entertained, many of these same committeemen are now calling caucuses in their townships, so that if dissatisfaction exists, new delegates may be chosen. Richland, Fairfield and Concord have their caucuses for this purpose on Saturday of next week. See the call in another column.

THE outlook for the congressional convention which meets June 6, is very satisfactory, and people are quietly discussing the chances of their favorite candidates. As far as this county is concerned, Judge Lowry is undoubtedly the choice of a great majority of the democrats, and they are quietly and good naturedly working to keep their favorite in the lead. Mr. Colerick, also, has many warm friends, in fact is very popular every where, for all feel that he has been a most excellent representative in congress. Mr. Hamilton and Mr. McDonald have also the good will of our people, but all concede that the chances are with the the two first named. But no matter on whom the choice of the convention falls, our people will be satisfied and give him a united support. There is no harm in discussing the merits of men as good as those who will be before the convention, and the district may well feel proud that it can bring to the front four such men for us to choose from.

Additional Local.

—It's all convention now.

—New announcements this week.

—"Put 'er there" ☞.—[Candidate.

Mr. Chaffey is in town buying cattle.

—Table linens at 25, 35, 75 and $1.00, at Schaab & Beugnot's. 20-3w.

—Dried Peaches, English Currants and choice prunes, 3lb for 25c at Mac & Mike's.

The old Eckenberger property, on Cedar street, has been touched off with a new fence.

—The best assorted stock of spring clothing ever brought to this market at Schaab & Beugnot's. 20-3w.

—Our friend Joseph Kelham was in town Monday in company with Mrs. Anna Simon, to attend to business connected with the estate of the late Solomon Simon.

—Henry Shull lost a fine cow this week by milk fever. The disease does not seem to be well understood, and we shall endeavor to have some competent person explain it in some future number.

MARRIED.—At the residence of the bride's grandfather, Henry Fails, Spencerville, Indiana, May 7, 1882, by Rev. E. K. Baker, Mr. Daniel Herrick, of St. Joe, and Miss Ida Spitler, of Spencerville.

—The ladies' social of the M. E. church will be entertained at the lecture room, next Wednesday afternoon and evening. Refreshments at the usual hour. All are cordially invited.

M. J. DAWSON, Secretary.

—Miss Maggie Sibert made her annual call on the COURIER and renewed her two subscriptions, always in advance. That's business. She is now making Spencerville her home and likes the place very much.

—It's hard to buy cigars or chewing tobacco in Auburn on Sunday. The barbers won't shave, the saloon men close the back doors at 9 o'clock a. m. and indeed, we are enjoying a quiet, peaceable time from the once wicked transactions in these affairs.

—Fred. Forshey, an old Auburn shoemaker, passed through town last Saturday. Fred. looked like the breaking up of a hard winter, but we are glad to learn there are better days coming for the old b'hoy. He is expecting a back pension of about $1,200.

—Horse trading is becoming quite a feature in the Auburn market of late. Several years ago this place was noted for a swapping point, but for some time back the "art" has been neglected. Buck Allen claims to be the boss trader when he deals with Pleasant Lake people.

—Theo. Reed was at home this week for a few days getting things in order for his western journey. He moved his family to his present home at Brainard, Minnesota, this week. During Mr. Reed's residence here, he made many warm friends who greatly regret the departure from our place of so worthy a citizen.

—Notice is hereby given that a meeting for the election of officers of the DeKalb county, Farmers Mutual insurance company, will be held at Ensley's Hall in Auburn, on Saturday May 27th. A full attendance of the members is requested. By order of the board of directors. S. KUTZNER, Sec'y.

MR. EDITOR.—One night last week I noticed a man of medium height, stooped shoulders, dark complexion and with both ears pinned to the back of his neck crawling out of Ed. Baker's barn with a bundle of tin on his back. I don't think he was stealing it as he had the appearance of an upright, honest fellow—in fact I would feel more like saying that he was a Good-man, yet the surroundings caused the query of this item. And yet we wonder.

Renew Your Lease.

There are times in every one's life when energy fails and a miserable feeling comes over them, mistaken for laziness. Danger lurks in these symtoms, as they arise from diseased organs. Parker's Ginger Tonic will restore perfect activity to the stomach, liver and kidneys, purify the blood, and renew your lease of health and comfort.—Advocate. 20-4t.

KINDERGARTEN.

I will open a Kindergarten school in the upper room of the Ward building, commencing on the 12th day of June, 1882, to cotinue eight weeks. I would be pleased to see all of my class and as many new scholars as wish to come. Terms will be one dollar per month to be paid in advance. MRS. W. P. MYERS.

DRESS MAKING.—Mrs. Dr. Sebring and her niece have located in the rooms over Mrs. Clock's millinery store where they expect to carry on the business of dressmaking. They expect to do first-class work and a share of public patronage is solicited.

HOUSE FOR SALE.—A good house and lot on south VanBuren street. For terms, address, Alvin Wayer, Orland, Indiana. 20-4t.

—We are closing out our stock of carpets. Come and secure a bargain.
20-3w. S. & B.

—See those hose at 5c, 10c, and 12c a pair at Mac & Mike's before you buy.

—We have just received our spring and summer stock of cottonades, which will be sold away down.
20-3w. SCHAAB & BEUGNOT.

—Don't buy your brocade satin and black dress silks until you see those at Mc & Mike's.

—The best line of gents' ties, cheap, at Schaab & Beugnot's. 20-3w.

Announcements.

EDITOR COURIER: Please announce the name of Samuel M. High as a candidate for the nomination for recorder, subject to the decision of the democratic county convention.

EDITOR COURIER: Please announce the name of A. D. Moore, of Wilmington township, as a candidate for commissioner from the southeast district.

EDITOR COURIER: Please announce the name of Charles Comesky, of Jackson township, as the democratic candidate for county commissioner from the southwest district, subject to the decision of the county convention.

EDITOR COURIER: Please announce the name of John Butt, of Waterloo, as candidate before the democratic county convention for the office of recorder, and greatly oblige his many friends.

EDITOR COURIER: Please announce Thomas Murray as a candidate for recorder of DeKalb county, subject to the decision of the democratic convention.

EDITOR COURIER: Please announce the name of John C. Henry as a candidate for the nomination for sheriff of DeKalb county, subject to the action of the democratic county convention.

J. J. Van Auken will be a candidate for the office of sheriff. If the convention nominates him he will prove a true official, if they decide to the contrary he can be counted on as a firm worker for the "other fellow."

EDITOR COURIER,—Please say that A. W. Allen will be a candidate for the nomination for sheriff. before the democratic convention subject to the decision of that body.

IT begins to look as if the whole prohibition business was only a dodge to get votes, and people are becoming disgusted with it, as this becomes more apparent.

To a os a af a da $2.00; a fechin of im om agin 50.

This must be the sad effects of slavery, or the slave trade, which the ancient pilgrim indulged in during the early days of the Republic. These little peculiarities will crop out for two or three generations, so the philosophers tell us.—Sentinel.

DURING the recent rise in pork, some dealers in New York had a cargo of American bacon in the port of Havre, France, awaiting the pleasure of government officials to permit it to be sold, as they feared it contained trichinæ. The New York dealers, tired of the useless delay, ordered it shipped back to this country, which was done, and they sold it at a profit of 1½ cents a pound, after this long journey over the sea and back again.

FROM the twenty-ninth annual report of the superintendent of public instruction, just received, we learn that the total enumeration of children of school age in this state in 1881 was 714,343, being an increase over the previous year of 10,785. The number of children in the schools in 1881, was 509,855. By the way, can any one tell why a report of this kind should not be published until more than a year after the data are all in the hands of the state superintendent? We presume he could to-day give us the entire enumeration for 1882.

New Photograph Gallery.

Call on J. M. Rice & Son, second door east of the postoffice, and see their new instruments and pleasant location. They are prepared to do all kinds of work in the picture line. Enlarging done to order to any size desired. They have a ground floor gallery and it is very easy to get to. They solicit your patronage. Remember the place, second door east of the postoffice. tf.

Society Belles.

On account of its remarkably delicate and lasting fragrance society belles are loud in the praises of Floreston Cologne. 20-4t.

—To the following, which appeared last week: A fellow craftsman refers B. F. Goodman to a tin shop at Fort Wayne, and if he does not care to act wrongfully to his "working chums" he will certainly "cheese the racket." B. Goodman answers:" Come ye out of that fort or I will take it by storm, I am alone in the field you are many, I carry no flag of truce about me and never had, but have seen one hoisted the other day and thought the civil war was over, but being threatened with a general outbreak, I will find out, if it is only boys' talk, (Business before pleasure.) I will return. If not, you will hear from me in my next.

Well, well, now see here, Mr. I am only having a business racket, and not a personal affair, nor miles away, but right here at our own place of business. Please give your signature as I have done, and I will answer in my next.

MR. EDITOR: Please insert for the benefit of the patrons of the Auburn postoffice that additional mail facilities have been established by pouching for N. Y. & C. R. P. O. east of Waterloo to be forwarded on train No. 3 Ft. W. & J. R. R. going north at 6:20 p. m. N. Y. & C. R. P. O. train No. 4 will pouch for Auburn at Waterloo Junction on train going south arriving at Auburn at 3:23 p. m. G. W. GORDON.

—The American express company has made an arrangement with the drayman to have all goods delivered as soon as they arrive. The company is also prepared to issue money orders, at from 5 to 10 cents, for sums under ten dollars. This will be a very desirable and cheap way to transmit money.

19-3w. Clerk.

Liquor License.

Notice is hereby given to the citizens of the town of Auburn, DeKalb county, Indiana, that the undersigned will make application to the board of commissioners of said county, at their next regular session, to be held at the court-house in said county, commencing on Monday, the 5th day of June, 1882, for a license to sell spiritous, vinous and malt liquors in less quantities than a quart at a time, with the privilege of having the same drank on the premises where sold. The premises on which I desire to sell are located as follows: Commencing at the northeast corner of lot number [illegible], in the original plat of the town of Auburn, DeKalb county, Indiana, running thence west [illegible] feet, thence north to Sixth street, thence east [illegible] feet, thence south along the line of said lot number [illegible], to the place of beginning. THOMAS [illegible].

Attachment Notice.

State of Indiana, DeKalb county—Before John Simon, a justice of the peace, for Richland township.—[illegible] vs. Humphrey E. Chilcoat.

Now comes the plaintiff and files his complaint herein together with an affidavit that defendant is not a resident of the state of Indiana. Notice is hereby given to said defendant that unless he be and appear at my office on the 26th day of June 1882 at nine o'clock a. m. in Richland township in said county and state and answer or demur to said complaint, the same will be heard and determined in his absence.

Witness, My hand and seal this the second day of May 1882.

JOHN SIMON,
Justice of the Peace.

Town Ordinance.

An ordinance to compel the owners of lots and parts of lots in the incorporated town of Auburn, in DeKalb county, state of Indiana, therein named to construct certain sidewalks, whereas it is the opinion of the board of trustees of the incorporated town of Auburn, in DeKalb county, state of Indiana, that public convenience requires the construction of sidewalks along the streets and adjoining the lots and parts of lots hereinafter mentioned; therefore,

SECTION 1.—Be it ordained by the board of trustees of the incorporated town of Auburn, in DeKalb county, state of Indiana, that the owners and persons in possession of and claiming to own as hereinafter named, the hereinafter described lots and parts of lots in said town, shall, within thirty days from the taking effect of this ordinance, build and construct along and adjoining the lots and parts of lots they may own or are in possession of and claiming to own where the said lots or parts of lots front upon and adjoin the street named, a sidewalk of good and sound pine plank one and one-half inches thick and twelve inches wide, to be laid lengthwise and to be placed upon sleepers of sound white oak timber not less than three by five inches in width and thickness, and placed not more than three feet apart; said walks to be four feet wide and built on a grade with the street and alley crossings; said walks to be built along the street and in front of and adjoining the following named lots and parts of lots, to-wit:

The west end of lot No. one (1) in Kuhlman's second addition, on VanBuren street, owned by Alex M. Richards.

The west end of lot No. two (2) in Kuhlman's second addition, on VanBuren street, owned by Alfred Kelley and Julia A. Sherlock.

The west side of the west one-half of lot No. five (5) in Kuhlman's second addition, on VanBuren street, owned by Winfield S. Runge and Charles Groscop.

The west end of lot No. ten (10) in Kuhlman's first addition, on VanBuren street, owned by Caleb Neal.

The west end of lot No. twelve (12) in Kuhlman's first addition, on VanBuren street, owned by James Moore.

The west end of lot No. thirteen (13) in Kuhlman's first addition, on VanBuren street, owned by John Hartman.

The west end of lot No. fourteen (14) in Kuhlman's first addition, on VanBuren street, owned by John N. Meyers.

The west end of lot No. fifteen (15) in Kuhlman's first addition, on VanBuren street, owned by Mary Seward.

The west end of lot No. sixteen (16) in Kuhlman's first addition, on VanBuren street, owned by Henrietta Shultz.

The west end of lots No. seventeen (17) and and eighteen (18) in Kuhlman's first addition, on VanBuren street, owned by Mary A. Smith.

SECTION 2.—This ordinance shall be in force ten days from and after its publication in the Auburn Courier.

W. H. McQUISTON, Pres. Town Board.
Attest: GEO. L. LANNING, Town Clerk.

—Our democratic friends all over the county will read with interest the call for the county convention in this issue of the Courier.

—Charley Klotz is a hightoned sewing machine agent. He has three or four machines sold but will not deliver them on account of the bad roads.

—Rev. and Mrs. H. J. Norris went to Auburn yesterday and will return this evening or to-morrow. Mr. N. officiated there at the wedding of some friends. —[Goshen Times.

—Mrs. Villie Mills, of Otisville, Mich., in company with her neice, Miss Jennie McClellan, made us a brief call on Tuesday. They both took the noon train for Ann Arbor.

—Wm. Ensley, came near losing two of his fingers in the jointer at McNabb's stave factory at the Junction last week. As it was, the ends only were slicked off. It was a "close shave."

—In another part of the paper will be seen an ordinance for the construction of new sidewalks. We hope the law will be strictly enforced in this particular, as good side walks speak well for a town.

—We now only have two bakeries, Gibson pulling off. Two is all that our town will support and a third one only divides the trade up so that there is no money in the business for any of them.

—Frank Culbertson has sold his hack line to Casebeer & Matheny, who now have control. He still holds the contract for carrying the mails which he lugs on his back to and from the trains daily.

—Eugene Trout, of Waterloo, has purchased an interest in the Ninth street livery stable. Gene is a nice fellow and has had some experience in the business. We hope he will meet with success.

—We notice that Mrs. Jones has put up a sign showing that she will furnish boarding. Her residence is nicely located on north Van Buren street and we bespeak for her a share of the patronage.

—Its too bad that they can't get a full republican band. This is campaign year, you know, and the "honest party" is well aware of the fact that it will require considerable music to get them through.

—The Fairfield and Richland township caucuses will be held the last Saturday in this month. The latter will convene at the school house one mile south of Corunna, and the former at the usual place, at 2 o'clock

—We pity the man who has no sense of the ludicrous. We like the man who laughs. The former goes through life like the chief mourner at a funeral; the latter is continually finding and dispensing enjoyment.

—Old Mr. Canon died Monday night He was well along in years and one of the early settlers. He has been a member of the Methodist church a for number of years, was a good citizen and had many warm friends and acquaintances.

—Washington Teeters, administrator, is busy at work settling up the affairs of the George Clark estate. The property involved is quite large, embracing a great variety of interests, but Mr. Teeters will no doubt bring everything into shape, in a business like way.

—Two bear cubs, passed through this place on their way to Newark, O. Tuesday. They came from some place in Wisconsin, and during their stay in this place, won the affections of a host of our boys, who watched their departure with great sorrow.

—Our stores have some garden stuff, but we havn't noticed any peas, beans or cabbage. These articles are being shipped from the south in large quantities to neighboring towns around us. They bring high prices, but fill "a long felt want," all the same.

—Billy Forsney has at last got there, and is now what we all term a married man; or in other words, he furnishes provisions for two, does not dare to go to the club Saturday nights, gets his recreation with a buck-saw, etc. He found the idol of his heart at Ligonier, Indiana.

—The new band is making slow progress in getting thoroughly organized. It seems strange that while we have the horns and men who have played them for years that we cannot have an organization. A town without a brass band now-a-days displays considerable fogyism.

—J. A. Boozer, the lively general agent of the Buckey machines was in town this week. He says business in agricultural machinery is good, in all parts of the country except in the lower and clayey parts where wheat is poor. In sandy ground wheat is looking well, and has been helped by the recent rains.

D. S. Irish, formerly of this county, but now of Lake Park, Minnesota, is rejoicing over the arrival of a bran new boy. He says it is the standard Minnesota weight of nine pounds, and he thinks he had better call it "Minnesota Chief." His friends in this county, will be pleased to learn his good fortune.

Brains, intelligence and a name
All make up an honest fame;
But fame without the name or brains
Scarcely a bit of honor gains.

Religious Notes.

A FEW ITEMS GATHERED DURING OUR SUNDAY ROUNDS.

Sunday morning opened gloomy with a slow drizzly rain giving every indication of a long, lonely day; but about ten o'clock the sun came out warm and bright, and throngs of people could be seen making their way to the several places of worship. In the afternoon pedestrians were wandering to and fro seeking some interesting sights to attract the eye and please the heart. This is the first opportunity for several weeks that our people have been favored with a pleasant Sunday and one all seem to be thankful and enjoy the day very much, indeed.

The M. E. Sunday-school is held in the afternoon, and enjoys a very large attendance.

Our reporter visited the Methodist church in the evening and listened to a well illustrated and well delivered sermon by Rev. Daniels. The gentleman is a good speaker and has chosen his legitimate business; Rev. Kelso delivered the closing prayer and the services ended very satisfactorily.

A meeting of the M. E. social was held at the residence of Dr. Casebeer Monday evening, at which time officers were elected and other business attended to.

The Presbyterian Sunday-school is in a splendid working condition, and both teachers and scholars manifest a deep interest in its success.

Next Sunday evening Rev. Daniels will deliver a lecture especially to young men. We hope to see a large attendance and will vouch for the sermon as being instructive and entertaining.

There were no services at the Lutheran church sabbath evening.

Any matters pertaining to church affairs will be published in the Courier gratis.

The Presbyterian church was crowded last sabbath forenoon (to see the bride) and our mothers who forgot their "specks" missed a good sermon.

The Sunday evening lectures by Rev. Matthews at the Presbyterian church are not only very able but highly interesting and instructive. It will pay to turn out and hear them. No man who values useful knowledge can afford to stay away.

According to Law.

THE MINOR COURTS "ROPED THEM IN" LIVELY LAST WEEK.

The "justice mill" got some extraordinary streak on last week, and made matters lively for a few days.

Byron Rainier and Billy Little engaged in a little "bumb-bell" practice, and were made to put up $9.50 each for their amusement. Tom. Gross and Bob Donalson were interested in the sport but they couldn't get enough men together at one time to "pull" them—Bob is a terror.

Mike Galagher was looking up a company to engage themselves for the season in the play of Ten Nights in a Bar Room, but he gave up the job and paid sheriff Leas for fourteen days in advance. He has boarded it about half out.

Mrs. Hi. Palmer and her son were arrested. The boy for striking a lad of Charley Smith's and the woman for slander (we didn't think that Mrs. Palmer ever talked much). The warrant was placed in John McClellan's hands but Mrs. P. made him "climb" out of the yard lively—and there wasn't a cabbage head within a mile.

A dog fight on "Arsenic Avenue" created quite a stir Monday. Is it not lawful to arrest men for fighting dogs as well as for fighting among themselves? There is but little difference between the two. A dog fight creates the same sensation, collects the same crowd, the same kind of oaths are indulged in and as far as the disturbance and racket is concerned the dog fight takes the lead, because it lasts the longest. Perhaps our marshal had better look into all sides before he "goes off" so fluently.

Lucky Fellow.

A YOUNG MAN'S INGENUITY SECURES HIM A GOOD POSITION.

Many of our readers are familiar with the name Ike Grogg, a young man whom Jacob Grogg adopted and raised from childhood. Ike is a peculiar genius, being quiet, attentive and industrious, with about as graceful a motion as a portable road engine. Everyone looked upon Ike as a promising plow hand and that is about all. But has he come out of the kinks. He made a pattern of a railroad engine out of an ordinary oyster can so that it would run at his command. While having it on exhibition one day it attracted the attention of a railroad man who was in search of a man to perform the duty of car repairing on the Wabash line. He says to Ike, "You are just the fellow I've been looking for," and made him an offer of 20 cents per hour, wet or dry which was accepted and thus far he has proven satisfactory to the company.

In the spring a livelier iris changes on the burnished dove;
In the spring a young man's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of love.—Tennyson.

Gala Days Ahead.

THE AMUSEMENT PART OF THE YEAR NOW DAWNING.

The season for large crowds, shows and lemonade stands is fast coming, when the rural lassie can adorn her white dress and shake the fantastic toe to bower dance music, and the town dandy give the livery men the "big finger" for the best rig in the stable and ride with some fellow's sister over the picnic grounds.

First on the programme is decoration day, which takes place the 30th inst. We have heard of no arrangements being made as yet, but as it has been the custom in the past to have ceremonies and strew flowers over the graves of deceased soldiers, we take it for granted that a repetition of the same will be indulged in this year. Honor the dead, and let every friend of the boys in blue lend a helping hand to make the occasion a worthy one.

Next comes the democratic convention. (Auburn band will not be out) the biggest occasion of the season. The different candidates are working zealously for their nomination and the party in general is wide-a-wake to their interests. The time is set for June 10th.

Then comes the republican convention. but time, space and so forth—

The old settlers have their day June 15, when "short" speeches will be made and long stories told about the tricky red men, the old cabins, the fight with the grizzly bear, etc. We hope to see the old settlers have a big crowd and a pleasant meeting.

And soon after the glorious fourth will greet us, when we can all put on "spread eagle" style and fasten a bunch fire-crackers to the untagged dog's tail. Oh, there'll be lots o' fun. Henry Wolf will play the bass-drum and Hank Altenberg touch off the anvil, and we will have fire-works in the evening. Some great man will get on a platform, backed by a church choir, and lie for two hours and a half about George Washington and his hatchet. But it will be the 4th of July, and nothing counts on the fourth except plain drunks.

On the last quarter we wind up with the fair, buy a little balloon and "go up" for the season.

In the Cogs.

AN AUBURN MERCHANT IN A DANGEROUS POSITION.

John Getrost, a Main street merchant was investigating the different departments at the machine shop, the other day, and in stooping forward to get a good view of his object his coat-tail got tangled up in the "jaws" of two cog-wheels. He felt something tugging and pull harder and more of it, but he was so infatuated in the working of a piece of machinery that he just carelessly slapped his hand backward and cried out: "Let up, back there." But the wheels wouldn't have it that way, and kept drawing John a little closer as rapidly as they could devour the cloth in his coat-tail. Presently it got nonotonous and John took time to turn around and look into the matter. "Horror" he yelled, "shut off steam," and after some movements that would put to shame a jumping-jack on a Christmas morning, he succeeded in saving himself, but the coat-tail was terribly mangled.

Divorce Granted.

ALL THE FUN AMONG THE JACKSON BOYS.

Dennis Dove and his wife, living in Jackson township, couldn't pull even in double harness and Mrs. Dove applied for a divorce. The first trial was called but Dennis' boy was "sick" and he could not appear. During the time between the first and second trials a very essential and prominent witness was found whose testimony could be used in the lady's behalf. Dennis is said to be a "fly old man" and as tricky as a hand-organ monkey. Upon hearing of this new testimony Dennis wilted like a morning-glory at night fall, and immediately wended his way to the residence of Rev. Elson, and there upon bended knees confessed all his sins and prayed for directions of a brighter and better road to travel. Mrs. Dove received a divorce, however, and Dennis put up $500.00 alimony "just as hard."

Burglary.

THIEVES ENTER A DWELLING ON JACKSON STREET.

It has been a number of months since our town has been disturbed by burglars, either professional or amateur, yet during this time of safety and peace the Courier has constantly warned its readers to be on the watch and use every possible means to protect themselves against these light-fingered sinners. Last Sunday night thieves entered the residence of Rev. Matthews, the Presbyterian minister, and took his "Sunday-go-to-meetin'-suit" and a five dollar gold coin. It was more than likely the work of tramps as first-class burglars don't deal much in second-hand clothing.

◆

—A. R. Marvin, editor of the Reading Telephone, was among our callers this week. We are pleased to learn that he is flourishing.

When falls the soulful moonbeam
  Upon the back yard fence,
    And tuneful feline choristers
  Their serenade commence,
    The suffering aesthete,
  His utterness forgot,
    Hurls madly through the midnight air
  His tea-too sunflower pot. [Puck]

Railroad Accident.

AN ACCIDENT ON THE AIR LINE ROAD NEAR BUTLER.

A deaf and dumb man leisurely walking on the Air Line railroad track a short distance east of Butler was instantly killed by the engine striking him last Thursday afternoon. The engineer gave the usual signal of danger but, of course, the poor fellow could not hear the whistle. The mute's name was John McDannells, and we are informed that he has been in the habit of walking on the track for sometime past. The train was stopped and the remains taken to Butler, to which place he was undoubtedly making his way.

Tea Party.

It appears that evening feasts have taken the place of the former style of noon entertainments among elite society of this place. An enjoyable time was had at the residence of F. D. Ryan, esq., last Saturday evening, and the following good looking lads and lassies were seated around the table in the refectory of that mansion: A. J. Little jr. and wife, Misses Jennie and Anice Cowan, C. A. Dugan and M. W. Harrison. Of course the supper, under the supervision of Mrs. Ryan, was excellent as she knows thoroughly how to cater to the tastes of young palates—practice "they say" makes one perfect.

◆

—Jack Little and wife will return to Toledo to-day. After boarding a short time they will begin housekeeping, and it will be worth a V to see Jack lay in first supply of articles. He enters the largest grocery in the city and says—"Say boss, wrap me up a ton of prunes, a barrel of rice and a cake of Labor-saving soap." "Anything else?" asks the clerk with a grin. "Well, lets see. Yes, pard; just send your entire grocery store up to my house!" after which he will quiet down and never forget the day that

A Pitcher at the fountain high
  Stood waiting to be filled,
A Little thirsty man came by,
  At once his heart was thrilled.

He took the Pitcher in his hand
  And quenched his raging thirst;
The happiest man in all the land,
  He thought his heart would burst.

—The Buckland Brothers, at South Bend, Indiana, did not find the printing business very lucrative and turned their material over to the foundry from which it was purchased. Whenever a printing office cuts down the prices of job work to a basis where there is no profit to speak of, it is time to go over the dam. The job department of a printing office is the main stay of the institution, and when this part of the business is weakened by no profit and inferior work, there is but little chance for a very long existence.

—Mr. Vennor isn't nowhere. Michael Kline now takes the cranberry tart as a weather prophet. Last Saturday his sign gave us a continuous, cold rain for Monday, and he was so certain of his prediction that he contracted with recorder Boland for some inside work. Well, Michael got beautifully left as Old Sol woke up Monday morning at his usual time and during the entire day spread his bright rays over the face of the earth. It's now in order for him and Jacob Grogg to call an extra meeting.

—We had a large lot of English sparrows making their home along the cornice of the Courier office, until Sharp Hollister purchased a target gun for Frank Benedict to play with, and he banged away at the little birds until he drove them all away. There are lots of untagged dogs that would make good targets and also some beech trees in the creek bottom.

—Willis Brown, of Spencerville, and Miss Jessie Rush, of this place were united in marriage at her home last week. Rev. Mr. Norris, of Goshen, performed the ceremony and we are told Rush(ed) the matter through and did it up Brown. We congratulate the couple and hope their life will be pleasant and profitable, and also return thanks for samples of wedding cake.

—Frank Hoff and Alonzo Lockwood made a trade the other day. Frank swapped a pair of horses for span of mules. These mules have the two characteristics of the race that make things lively and interesting—eating and kicking. They are warranted to work well, after the harness is on them, and live in the interest of whip manufactories.

—Among the lookers-on this week was a boy named Albert Smith, living in Jackson township. Albert is 12 years old and tells us that he put out 20 acres of wheat last fall without any assistance. He has a set of carpenter tools with which he keeps the machinery, wagons, etc., in repair. Quite a lad, indeed.

—The farmer has been in low spirits for several weeks past, caused from the cold, wet weather. But few oats have been put into the ground and no preparations whatever have been made for planting corn. Steady, industrious labor, however, will accomplish much, and all will come about satisfactory in the end.

Lord Cavendish has been the Financial Secretary of the Treasury in Mr. Gladstone's Cabinet, and his appointment to Ireland, while not liked by the Home Rulers, is deemed to a concession to the Whigs.

THE recent conflagration at Racine, Wis., swept over seven and a half acres, including seven blocks. Forty-four buildings of various sizes and descriptions were destroyed, many of them of little value. One of the chief items of loss was in lumber, 10,000,000 feet being consumed. The total loss by the conflagration is computed at $578,000. The stocks and contents of many of the buildings were saved. The total insurance is about $250,000.

A CURRENT editorial comment says the besetting sin of clergymen appears to be plagiarism. There have been some notable transgressions in Chicago, and the punishment has been invariably light. In Louisville the suspicion grew that the Rev. Mr. Adams wasn't giving his congregation his own compositions, though they passed as such. Wherefore the grave elders had stenographic reports made of the pastor's deliverances, and their worst suspicions were confirmed. The reverend gentleman resigned. The deception is reprehensible, but the sermons, perhaps, were much better than the clergyman could compose.

A WASHINGTON special to the St. Louis Globe-Democrat explains the counterfeit bond sensation as follows: "As near as can be ascertained, the facts are that 5-20 and 7-30 $1,000 bonds, produced, in part, and possibly wholly, from the engraving stock in the bureau of engraving and printing, were put in circulation and passed as genuine first about seventeen years ago, and again about fifteen years ago; that some of these spurious bonds, probably several hundred thousand dollars' worth of them, were taken as genuine by banks and bankers throughout the country, and that $80,000 of these bonds were redeemed by the United States treasurer's assistants and the main office here. The original stock has been captured in the hands of persons heretofore suspected, and the proof is that some, if not all, of the stock was taken by them from the bureau of engraving and printing. Arrests will be made when the grand jury has concluded the examination of witnesses."

Illustrious Women.

Harper's Bazar.

Have there been, in government, more illustrious rulers, among all the men of the world, than Semiramis. Zenobia, Elizabeth, Maria Therisa, Catherine of Russia, Isabella of Castile? Who has led forces to victory better than Jeanne d'Arc? Have there, in science, been more renowned names than those of Mary Sommerville, Caroline Herschel, Maria Mitchell, to cite but a few? In poetry, will not Sappho rival any of the Greeks? Will not Elizabeth Browning sing in the great choir where the first lift up their voices? Is there a novelist of whom Marian Evans is not the peer? Did any other novel ever move heaven and earth with its mighty engine as Harriet Beecher Stowe's "Uncle Tom did? Did not Sarah Siddons sway all emotions as much as Charles Kemble did? Have not the male sculptors of to-day their equals in the female ones? And do we need to recount the orators, physicians, and the bright host among the writers in belles-lettres, mounting quite to the level of their brothers.

From some experiments made by Felix Masure it appears that when arable soil is very wet it throws off more watery vapor than a sheet of free water. If the land is only moderately moist the quantities are about equal, and if the soil is dry its evaporation is less.

FROM WASHINGTON.

It is announced here that the Chesapeake and Ohio will begin running trains on its new road to Newport News in a few days, and put on through trains from that point to Western cities, giving Chicago another direct line to the seaboard.

The work of a few Mexican troops in killing and capturing the Indian band that our army could not catch, causes much ill-concealed mortification in army circles.

Shufeldt's statements regarding alleged lobby demands on the whisky bill confirms the general impression here that there is very little in the story of attempted blackmail. It is probable, however, that Voorhees' resolution to investigate will be adopted.

Ex-Public Printer Defrees is very ill here, and probably will not recover.

Little hope is entertained in the Navy Department of Chipp and DeLong or their parties being found alive. Particularly is this the case regarding the first mentioned. This impression, which has existed some time, is confirmed by the Herald's publication of Danenhower's story.

The first shipment of seeds to the overflowed districts was made yesterday, and will be continued as rapidly as possible.

The work of the erection of a monument at Jefferson's grave at Monticello, Va., under the recent appropriation, will begin soon. The monument will probably be a square granite shaft, surrounded by an iron fence.

The carriage-makers of the country are somewhat excited over the effort being made by certain parties to obtain admission of steel axles as "unfinished goods," and at very low rates of tariff. A large number of these manufacturers are here, among them one or more from Chicago urging Secretary Folger to refuse the request.

The reports of trouble in Wyoming Territory by the Snake and Bannock Indians are considered here as much more serious than the Arizona troubles. The Snakes and Bannocks are about 2,000 strong, and very shrewd, hard fighters, and if the reports of their determined outbreak are not exaggerated, may take considerable force to put them down. The dispatches from Arizona indicate that the Indian trouble there is about ended by the killing and capture of the band by the Mexican troops.

Guiteau seems to be realizing his condition more fully than before. He wept freely yesterday when visited by a party of people from the church here, who sang and prayed with him.

It is understood Randall, of Pennsylvania, will make a speech in the House in support of the Tariff Commission bill as the quickest way to settle the question, and favoring a middle course in revision.

It is reported here that the resignation of Senator Hill, of Georgia, has been sent to the Governor of that State, and that Senator Brown contemplates resigning. Bad health is given as the reason for this action on the part of both Senators. It is also said that ex-Senator Gordon will be appointed to the Senate to fill one of the vacancies.

In the Senate, speeches were made against Voorhees' resolution for the appointment of a committee of investigation, and the resolution was indefinitely postponed. Mr. Windom made a speech saying he believed there is a big whisky ring in existence formed for the purpose of controlling legislation. Other Senators said if that was true he ought to offer a resolution to investigate. He then said he would offer such a resolution to-morrow. He said he considered the ring the most gigantic ever known in connection with the Government. His remarks created much excitement.

Much interest is felt here in the developments regarding "sugar meal," in view of the fact that a Congressional committee is now investigating the glucose question, with the view of placing a tax of $1 per gallon on glucose. The bill was introduced by General Young, of Ohio, who believes the use of glucose to be very injurious.

A fine portrait of Blaine has been painted by order of the Venezuelan Government, and will soon be forwarded there, to be placed in the State Department.

Yesterday's developments regarding John W. Dorsey confirm the predictions of these dispatches that he would not appear. Nothing can be learned as to his whereabouts, and it is by no means certain that he will be found by the 16th, the date set for trial.

Figures recently received here show Illinois to be the leading wheat-producing State.

Some Democratic Congressmen are inclined to rebel against a committee's assessment of $50 apiece for carrying on the campaign. One Mississippi member refused to pay the assessment, and said that he didn't want any documents sent to the district by the committee.

Johnny Davenport claims that the Morey letter originated in a Hancock club in New York; that it was palmed off by H. H. Hadley, and that Barnum knew it was a forgery, and that he will succeed in bringing the parties to justice yet.

Senator Logan is expected here next week, when the Military Committee will take up the compulsory retirement bill. General Sherman is said to have changed his views since he left for the west, and is now opposing the bill.

The Iowa delegation is receiving many letters from the State regarding the prohibitory question. Most of them fight shy of an expression of their views, and all efforts to get them to commit themselves meet with little success. The general belief is that the vote will be very close, and that the amendment will hardly be adopted.

The Republicans of Maine are circulating a petition asking Blaine to run for Membership of the House, but it is not probable he will do so, as his Presidential prospects will require all of his time after the coming summer.

It is generally believed now that a bill extending the bonded period on whisky cannot pass the Senate as it stands, though it may with material modifications.

The Navy Department now frankly admits that there is little hope of finding Chipp and his comrades of the Jeannette expedition.

Captain Eads, who has been in bad health for some time, has gone to Fortress Monroe to rest.

It is believed the Pennsylvania stalwarts will succeed in getting Wolf entirely out of their way by running him for Congress.

The bill for the extension of bank charters comes up in the House Tuesday, and will occasian much discussion, but will pass both branches of Congress.

The posting of a dispatch in the leading hotels last evening from Chief Engineer Melville to the Secretary of the Navy, dated at Irkutsk, March 24th, caused a profound feeling of regret and sorrow at the fate of the brave party of explorers, although their sad fate had been somewhat anticipated by previous news. Engineer Melville's exploit was spoken of in the warmest terms and admiration, and his courage and bravery highly praised. His wife and children were informed of the contents of the following telegram:

"Lena Delta, March 24, 1882.—Found DeLong and party dead. Found all papers and books. Will continue the search for Chipp. "MELVILLE."

The following composed the party who manned the first cutter of the lost Jeannette, and who were separated from the other two boats in the storm of September 12, 1881: George W. De Long, Lieutenant U. S. Navy, commanding the expedition; Passed Assistant Surgeon J. Ambler; Jerome J. Collins, correspondent New York Herald; A. Gartz; H. H. Kooh, seaman; C. W. Boyd, seaman; H. P. Erickson, seaman; Walter Lee, machinist; N. Iversen, seaman; Adolph Dressler, seaman; Ah Sam, Chinaman; Alexy, Esquimaux.

The New York Herald has received the following by cable:

Forty Miles Beyond Kenubach, April 12, 1882.—A Cossack estafette (special express) has just arrived here with dispatches bringing the news that the bodies of Captain DeLong and ten men have been found all in one spot. He takes sealed dispatches, which you will receive with this.

JACKSON.

NOTE.—The above dispatch was received at Irkutsk by a special courier from Jackson. The Herald correspondent is on his way north to the mouth of the Lena. MARTIN.

A corrected dispatch from Hoffman, St. Petersburg, says no lives were lost by the burning of the United States steamer Rodgers at St. Lawrence bay.

Much interest centers in the Guiteau case, which begins before the court in banc to-morrow. Charles H. Reed, counsel for the assassin, says he thinks his case very strong, and Guiteau expresses confidence, though it is easy to see that neither has much hope. Guiteau seems nervous, and, at times, depressed, evidently realising that little hope remains.

The President signed the Chinese bill to-day.

Edward O'Meagher Coodin, of Cincinnati, the Fenian so long imprisoned in England, says that he thinks the murder of Cavendish and Burke to be the work of "Emergency Men," a low class of Irishmen who do the work of landlords, even to oppressing the Irish who refuse to pay rent.

There seems to be some doubt now whether the Chinese bill will be an effective law—whether, notwithstanding its prohibition, Chinese may not land in the British Possessions or in Mexico, and come in by land with little difficulty, and little prospect of being sent back.

Very warm expressions of kindly feeling toward Secretary Lincoln, for his kindness during the floods of the Mississippi valley, come from the South; also similar expressions touching the President's Mississippi river message. The course of these two men in the past sixty days has done much to conciliate the South.

Senator Hoar has apologized to Senator Rollins for his discourteous personal remarks addressed to him in the Senate Chamber about the Boston Collectorship recently. "No blood."

The news that Scoville, the brother-in-law of the assassin, has served a writ of habeas corpus upon John W. Guiteau, in New York, requiring him to produce Mrs. Scoville, creates much comment here. The statement that Scoville believes that his wife's mind is affected since the trial, corresponds with the belief of many here, especially the correspondents who had an opportunity to observe her course while here. John Guiteau says he believes that Schoville wants to take away her child and send her to an asylum. Scoville says John Guiteau and others have a scheme to trot her round the country and make money by her lecturing.

Cincinnati distillers have written to Secretary Folger, urging him to withdraw his objections to the whisky bill.

Nothing has been heard of John Dorsey yet. Warrants are out in the hands of officers in Texas, New York, Vermont and the District of Columbia.

It is understood an attempt will be made to pass the river and harbor bill under suspension of the rules Monday, and this will probably be successful, as nearly every member is bound to vote for it, by reason of the fact that there is some appropriation in it for his section. It is understood the section relating to the Mississippi will permit the use of a portion of the $6,000,000 given the river for building levees to protect the lands from overflow.

It is pretty evident from the course of the officers of the court in banc that there is little probability of Guiteau getting a new trial, and that his career will end seven weeks from next Friday.

A final dividend will be paid the depositors of the Freedmen's Bank soon, and will make the total dividens 60 per cent. on the deposts, barely what the interests would have been to the present time, had the bank contined to exist.

Secretary Chandler does not favor the proposed new Arctic expedition.

The House passed, by a vote of 172 to 7, without amendment, the bill creating an executive Department of Agriculture, which provides that the department shall be under the control of a Secretary who is an experienced and practical agriculturist, and establishes Bureaus of Agricultural Products, of Animal Industry, of Lands, and of Statistics.

Distillers here, who are looking after the prospects of the bill extending the bonded period, say that they believe the bill will pass when the real facts are understood. The suspicion against the distillers' association grews out of the fact that large assessments have been made on members, which some supposed were to be used as a corruption fund. The real facts are that this fund is used to reimburse members of the association whose products were shipped abroad at a loss. By the rules of the association, the amount of spirits manufactured is reported to headquarters, and whenever this exceeds the consumptive demand in the United States, the remainder is shipped abroad to prevent its being put on the markets here and reducing the prices.

It is impossible for the association to reduce the quantity being made because the distillers are feeding stock, and must continue running to do so, and the only plan to prevent a reduction of prices is to ship the product out of the country. Usually there is a profit on this, but just now, owing to the large crop of potatoes and beets abroad, from which spirits are made, alcohol is exported at a loss. It is to pay this loss to the distillers, whose products are sent abroad, that the fund is collected, and not for current purposes. The distillers say when this is understood they believe the strongest objection to the bill will be overcome.

Never Recovered.

M. Quad.

"You see," he explained, as we sat on the steps at Sharpsburg and looked around, "this town has never recovered from the war."

"What did you have here before the war?"

"Everything, almost. It was the liveliest little town you ever saw. Why sir, I sat on these very steps before the war, and counted six fights going on at once. Then we had a cooper shop, three saloons, a tannery and four shoe shops."

"All are gone now, I observe."

"Every one of 'em, and what's wuss, you can't start a fight to save your life. If you should jump out there and crow and crack your heels, and offer to fight the best man in Sharpsburg, no one would raise a hand."

"They wouldn't, eh?"

"Not a one. We are a humble people. Here it is, sixteen years after the close of the war, and we are still so downcast that a tin peddler comes in here and bluffs the Mayor, licks the Clerk, sasses the Postmaster, and runs away with the only good-looking woman we ever had, and not a man threw a brickbat!"

Pullman Cars in Europe.

Cincinnati Enquirer

I met George M. Pullman a few minutes, who has just returned from Europe. He told me that he took a Pullman car, which has been running on the India mail route from Bologna to Brindisi, at the southeastren extremity of Italy, and is running it over the railroad to Naples and to Pompeii. This car, I believe, was put on at Susa, near the termination of the French tunnel under the Alps, and made the run as the railroads are continued down the west coast of Italy. Mr. Pullman said he had made contracts to run these cars, not only as far as the Straits of Messina, opposite Sicily, but also on the Island of Sicily. The Italians, he said, had become alive to the idea that foreign tourists were necessary to life and trade in the winter time, and they wanted the improvements to bring them there. The Pullman cars are also to run on the Western railroad of France, from Paris to Dieppe, Havre, Brest and other points.

Fate of the Gang.

Sometimes it has seemed as if there was no retribution for those train and bank robbers, who shook their bloody hands in defiance of justice while they shouted over their work. A recapitulation of the manner in which they have, one by one, met a terrible fate, will go very far toward establishing the correctness of the idea that, every now and then justice takes charge of matters himself, and, in his own way, gets even.

Dick Little, who was one of the saddle gang, tired out, killed Hite, his most intimate companion, and then turned over the whereabouts of Jeff Hite, a brother, to the authorities. This Hite was sentenced to a term of twenty-five years in the Missouri penitentiary. Little has come off lucky by resorting to the process known as "squealing."

John Younger was shot to death by Capt. Lull.

Bud McDaniel, who was in the Winston robbery, was handed over to the Kansas authorities and escaped from jail. He was secreted in a swamp by an old negro, who gave him away, and he was shot down like a mad dog. He fought until he fell. His Brother, Tom McDaniel, was tracked by two Kentucky farmers and killed for a part he took in a bank robbery.

Bill Berry was killed in Mexico, Mo., by a sheriff's posse and one of Pinkerton's men.

A squad of soldiers and a deputy United States marshal overtook Joe Collins and Bill Heffren near Buffalo, Kansas. A fight ensued and the two outlaws were left dead on the grass.

Arkansas Johnson was snapped up by a bullet fired by a citizen of Denton, Texas.

Sam Bass had a shot that cut off his existence in Round Rock, Texas.

Henry Collins was overtaken in Sherman, Texas, and killed on the street by the sheriff.

On the northern boundary of the United States Billie Collins came face to face with Deputy Marshal Anderson. The two fired and fell simultaneously.

In the raid into Minnesota, where the Youngers were captured, and where Frank James received a wound from which he never recovered, Bill Chadwell, Charlie Pitts and Chel Miller were killed.

Ed. Miller, as stated, was left for the coffin by Jesse James, and now the leader of the most fearless banditti of modern times is plucked by one of his own company, to whom he administered the bandit's oath; to whom he presented the weapon that did the work; to whom he proffered the hospitalities of his home, and dies in the arms of his wife.

There are in the penitentiary Pipes and Herndon, for ninety-nine years, in Albany, for robbing the mails in Texas; Jack Keene is serving out a fourteen years' sentence for a bank robbery in West Virginia; Jeff Hite, twenty-five years in Missouri for a train robbery, and Tucker Bashan and Billy Ryan, twenty-five years each, for the same offense.

Four are on trial in Independence, Mo., for train robberies, and two are awaiting trial in the same place: Arthur McCoy is the only one of this band who has died a natural death, thus far.

Frank James, it is believed, is not in Kentucky, but in the pan-handle section of Texas, where he and Jesse invested in a ranch some years ago.

One of the most vivid pictures which some writer will have to portray one of these days, is the ride of Frank James from the borders of Minnesota to Kentucky, tied to spirited horses, of which there were relays, his life-blood staining the grass of the prairies and the leaves of the woods, as he dashed for life for his old haunts. From the effects of this wound and ride he has never recovered.

The bank and train robberies committed by this gang are as follows:

Columbus, Ky.	$ 15,000
Elizabethtown	20,000
Huntingtyn, W. Va.	19,000
Liberty, Mo.	12,000
Corydon, Iowa	9,000
St. Genevieve, Mo	17,000
Corinth, Miss	9,000
Jewelry at Corinth	5,000
Gad's Hill	20,000
Muncie	20,000
Big Spring, gold	60,000
Total	$206,000

This does not include stage and other robberies, which are estimated at over $50,000. There is on file in Chicago, an anonymous letter from a person in Jefferson City, which predicted the death of Jesse James in the manner described. There is a dark hint in it which has never been printed, and which may form an interesting chapter in the career of the outlaw some day. It is to the effect that Jesse James seduced the wife of a friend of his, and that the outraged husband took an oath that he would live to go to Jesse James' funeral. It is believed that the writer of this letter has had some part in a deed which has removed a cowardly heart from this world.

No Sooner Said Than Done.

Jeremy White, one of the Oliver Cromwell's domestic chaplains, paid his addresses to the Lady Frances, the Protector's youngest daughter.

Oliver was told of it by a spy, who followed the matter so closely, that he hunted Jerry to the lady's chamber, and ran immediately to the Protector with the news. Oliver, in a rage, hastened thither himself, and going in hastily, found Jerry on his knees, kissing the lady's hand. In a fury, he asked what was the meaning of that posture before his daughter.

"May it please your highness," said White, "I have a long time courted that young gentlewoman there, my lady's woman, and cannot prevail. I was, therefore, humbly praying her ladyship to intercede for me."

The protector, turning to the young woman, cried:

"What is the meaning of this, hussey? Why do you refuse the honor Mr. White would do you? He is my friend, and I expect you shall treat him as such."

My lady's woman, who desired nothing more, with a very low courtsey, replied:

"If Mr. White intends me that honor, I shall not be against him."

"Say you so, my lass? cried Cromwell; "call Godwyn; this business shall be done presently; before I go out of the room."

Mr. White had gone too far to retreat, the parson came, and Jerry and my lady's woman were married in the presence of the protector.

An Extraordinary Offer.

There are a large number of persons out of employment in every county who could be making from $160 to $300 a month working for us. There are many who have employment who could make a much larger amount by obtaining the agency of their county of an article of great merit that will sell well in all well-to-do families, and pay a profit of over 100 per cent. One agent in Pennsylvania sold 32 in two days and made over $60 clear. Any man with energy enough to call and show our invention can make $1,500 to $3,000 a year. We only want one good man in each county, to whom we will give the exclusive sale. The business is pleasant, permanent and profitable. We wish to hear at once from those who are out of employment, or desire to get better. Send stamp and address and receive our large descriptive circular, giving full information.

THREE THOROUGHBRED

IMPORTED STALLIONS

The horses so well known throughout the county, owned by George Clark, will stand for mares this season as follows;

Mondays and Tuesdays at Corunna; Wednesdays and Thursdays at Waterloo; Fridays and Saturdays at Auburn.

It is not necessary to give a pedigree of these stallions, as their record is established. Those desiring colts from these horses will call in rear of A. W. Allen's livery barn on the days named. JEFFERSON CLARK, Manager.

By order of the judge of the DeKalb circuit court, the stallions belonging to the estate of George Clark, deceased, will continue at the same stands and on the same terms and conditions as directed by said Clark in his life-time.

W. TEETERS, Administrator.

IN THE WORLD FOR

REMOVING STUMPS AND STONES!

It is unnecessary to tell a farmer his land is more valuable without the stump than with them. He knows that now. What he wants to know is the Best Quickest and Cheapest method of removing them, and that question we answer by saying, BLAST THEM OUT WITH ÆTNA POWDER. Any stump, large or small, green or decayed, can be thrown entirely out of the ground and broken into pieces small enough to handle.

If you have any stumps, send us your address and we will send you a man to do your work, or will sell you the powder and tools so you can do it yourself Don't delay, but attend to it at once.

MUSIC MONEY

$5.00 FOR ONLY $1.00

THE GREATEST OFFER EVER MADE.

Foster's Illustrated Musical Journal contains the latest vocal and instrumental music every month, Musical News, Literature, Romance, Instruction, etc. The amount of music therein during the year would amount to over TWENTY DOLLARS in sheet form. The music is selected with the aim to supply, alike, the beginner and the practiced musician with the best music. The JOURNAL is printed on heavy, calendered, tinted paper with illustrations from eminent artists. Another essential is "Answers to Correspondents;" while one of the prominent features is the prize department, whereby EVERY SUBSCRIBER RECEIVES CASH PRIZES. Again the MUSICAL LIBRARY, a bound book containing about $15 worth of the latest and choicest music, will be given as a premium. Of these there are several volumes, vocal and instrumental, easy and difficult. State which you wish or send for contents. Lastly, to prove the superiority of our music, one of our latest 50c. pieces, with illustrated title page, will be included in above offer. This is truly the greatest offer ever made considering the excellency of the JOURNAL and the value of premiums. Subscribe at once and learn particulars of prize department and if desirous of getting up a club, send for our unequalled terms. If not satisfied after subscribing money will be refunded. Send 2 3-cent stamps to pay postage on premiums, to the STANDARD MUSIC PUBLISHING HOUSE, GENEVA, OHIO.

Girl in hammock
  Makes a mash.
Mash is mutual,
  Day is set,
Man and maiden
  Wed, you bet.

Red hot stove,
  Breakfast frying,
Girl got married,
  Cooking trying,
Cheeks all burning,
  Eyes look red;
Girl got married,
  Nearly dead.
Biscuit burnt up,
  Breakfast charry.
Girl got married,
  Awful sorry.
Man comes home,
  Tears moustache,
Mad as blazes;
  Got no hash,
Thinks of hammock
  In the lane,
Wishes maiden
  Back again.
Maiden also Thinks of swing,
Wants to go back,
  Too, poor thing!

Good Advice.

SOMETHING THAT SHOULD BE HEEDED BY EVERY YOUNG MAN.

H. G. Eastman, superintendent of the Business College at Poukeepsie, New York, delivered the following address to his students which we think would be a good "pointer" for a number of our young men to follow:

"My students, you are the architects of your own fortunes. Rely on your own strength of body and soul. Select some specialty for your life's work, and adhere to Paul's precept: 'This one thing I do.' Let your star be industry, self-reliance, faith and honesty, and inscribe on your banner, 'Luck is a fool, Pluck is a hero.' Earnest effort in one direction is the surest road to wealth and high position. Don't take too much advice. Keep at the helm, steer your own ship, and remember that the great art of commanding is to take upon yourself the largest share of the work. Don't practice too much humility. Think well of yourself. Strike out. Assume your position. It is the jostling and joltings of life that bring great men to the surface Put potatoes in a cart over a rough road, and the small potatoes go to the bottom. Turn a raft of logs down a mill-race, and the large logs come on top. Rise above the envious and jealous. Fire above the mark you intend to hit. Energy, invincible determination, with a right motive, are the levers that move the world. Don't drink. Don't chew. Don't smoke. Don't swear. Don't deceive. Don't read injurious novels. Be in earnest. Be self-reliant. Be generous. There are two sides to every balance, and favors thrown on one side of the scales are sure to be reciprocated in the other. Be civil. Be a gentleman. It is a foolish man that does not understand that molasses will catch more flies than vinegar. Read the papers; they are the great educators of the people. Advertise your business. Keep your own counsels, and superintend your own business. Make money and do good with it. Love God and your fellow-men. Love truth and virtue. Love your country and obey its laws."

"Calico Gals."

THEY ARE BOUND TO VOTE WHETHER THERE IS ANY PIE IN THE HOUSE OR NOT.

The women of the great state of Indiana are pushing forward in the advocacy of the amendment to the constitution that will enable them to deposit a freeman's ballot. In a circular issued before the convention reads:

"Our opponents must be driven from their last fortresses, namely: 'Women do not want to vote,' and we call upon our friends all over the state to help us make this meeting a conclusive answer to this last objection standing between the women of Indiana and their right to say how and by whom they shall be governed."

The Colorado Desert.

Mr. Joseph F. James, who spent some four weeks in traveling over the Colorado desert, in California, gives rather an unpromising account of it in an article communicated by him to the Popular Science Monthly.

The desert occupies almost the whole of the large county of San Diego. It is some 150 miles long and fifty miles wide, and the Southern Pacific railroad runs through its center. At about sixty miles from Los Angeles the railroad encounters a very heavy grade 100 to 110 feet to the mile, and it continues for twenty two miles. At the summit, known as San Gorgonia Pass, begins the descent into the desert, and every mile brings you to a more desolate country. At Whitewater Station, twenty miles from the summit, the desert begins in earnest. First a few flowers enliven the scene. Large Ænothera, three or four inches in diameter, grow on small stalks five or six inches in height. Large plants of Albronia maritma, with clusters of brilliant purple flowers, spread over the ground. A little Gilia (G. lemmoni), with white corolla and yellow center, adds its beauty to the scene; and the shrub, Larrea Mexicana, or "creosote plant," with yellow flowers and sticky leaves and branches, reminds you of the forests you have left behind.

During the seven miles to the next station, Seven Palms, the vegetation gradually thins out. Progressing beyond this the flowers disappear, and the Cacti predominate; and further on these are replaced by the stunted "grease wood." Finally, even the latter vanishes, and when Dos Palmas is reached we come to a country where there is absolutely nothing in the shape of vegetation. Every one knows how a well-kept field looks when it has been plowed and harrowed and cultivated until not a stick nor stone nor weed shows itself above ground. In order to form a picture of this part of the Colorado desert, imagine a field such as this extending for miles and miles, level as a floor, with no signs of life visible, and no indications of man's presence save the railroad track and the telegraph poles. Imagine the ground covered with an incrustation of alkali, which, when stepped on, breaks and lets one sink ankle deep into soil as soft and fine as powder. Picture a gale of wind blowing over the waste, the air filled with fine particles of sand, the sun obscured, and no objects visible 100 feet away, and you will have formed a faint idea of the worst aspect of the desert. It is hard to imagine anything so fearful as the reality; and, unless one can see the ground, and feel the sand, and experience a heat of 120 degrees in the sun, we can have only a poor conception of the desert.

Pleasant Birthday Greeting.

On the morning of May 8th, 1882, the neighbors and friends of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Cahill began to gather in, and by eleven o'clock the house was filled to overflow, numbering about fifty-five. The affair was a secret to Mrs. Cahill; the object of the surprise being the fifty-first birthday of Mrs. Cahill. The surprise was a complete success and all who were present seemed to enjoy a good social and pleasant time. About twelve o'clock the baskets which were well filled and contained roasted chicken, cakes, pies, biscuits, and many other good things were brought out, and to which all did justice. After this the presents were given and which consisted of a set of glass dishes, dress pattern, glass water pitcher, canned fruit, a nice chromo, and many other articles which time and space will not permit mentioning. Those present were Mr. John Nicols and lady, Mr. John Nelson and lady, Mr. Samuel Nelson and lady, Mr. Isaiah Davis and lady, Mr. James W. Platter and lady, Mr. Winfield Nelson and lady, Mr. Man Hart and lady, Mr. B. F. Nelson and lady, Mr. C. H. Husselman and lady, Mr. Mullenix and lady, Mrs. F. Nelson, Mr. Wm. Nelson, Mrs. M. C. Moody, Mrs. M. Baird, Mr. M. M. Baird, Mrs. J. Evans, Mrs. Martha Davis, Mrs. Rosana Ginther, Mother Franks, Miss Effie Davis, Mr. Walter Hart, Miss Nora Presler, Miss Rosa Mullenix, Mis Bertha Moody, Miss Rebecca Cahill, Mr. Isaiah Cahill, Mr. Ulysee Platter, Miss Cornelia Davis, Mr. Earl Nelson, Miss Nannie Crom, Miss Lyda Baird, Miss Emma Baird, Miss Ophie Cahill, Miss Mullenix, Miss Cora Presler, Mrs. E. Presler, Mrs. Metret, Mr. James Mullenix, Miss Ines Nelson, Minnie Davis, and others which time and space will not permit mentioning. The time passed away pleasantly until five o'clock, when we all returned to their homes feeling that we had enjoyed a pleasant time.

ONE WHO WAS THERE.

The Yarmouth Bloater.

The glory of Yarmouth and its bloater, but the highest qualities of the bloater are so fleeting that only those who live in or near town can know how deserved the glory is. Take one of the primest of these herrings, "spit" it, and smoke it for between eighteen and twenty-four hours; thus the common herring is transmuted into the delicate and incomparable bloater. The arsenal-like red brick buildings seen in many parts of the town are used for this purpose. The choicest of the herrings, technically "bloated stuff," are selected, threaded through the gills on sticks or "spits" about a yard long, and placed in racks, one above the other, to a height of thirty feet or more, in a building called the smoke-house. One man stands in the racks with his legs astraddle, and puts "spit" after "spit" in position, about twenty-five herrings being on each "spit," until thousands of the fish are hanging like stalactites under the high roof. "We call these loves," an old man told us as he climbed up the racks: "I'm up among the loves."

"Loves?" we repeated incredulously.

"Yes, l-o-v-e with a hes," he replied, positively, though we afterward found out that he was mistaken, and that the proper but inexplicable name of the racks is louvres. When they are filled a log of oak is lighted and left to smoulder, and in about eighteen hours the herring have absorbed a certain proportion of the smoke, and become perfect bloters with an unmatched delicacy of flavor. They have so little salt in them and are so finely cured that they are too perishable to be sent any distance, and thus it is that in this condition the bloter is only known to those who are in or near Yarmouth. Smoked for longer period, and salted, they are prepared for the foreign markets, and an exposure of twelve or thirteen days to the fumes of the oak produces the vulgar red herring. The stale fish, and those which have lost their heads or are in any way disfigured, are packed in barrels and compressed by a machine like a cheese-press, in which form they are sent to Italy, where they may often be seen in the shop windows adding a shining disk to the glitter of a Venetian day.—W. The Highest Building in Europe.

[Builder.]

Hitherto the Hospice of the Great St. Bernard, which stands 8,200 feet above the level of the sea, has enjoyed the distinction of being the most elevated inhabitable building in Europe. This honor it can now no longer claim. During the past year the city authorities of Cantania, in Sicily, have caused to be erected near the summit of the great volcano, Mt. Etna, an astronomical observatory which stands 2,954 meters above the sea level, or fully 1,000 feet higher than the Hospice of St. Bernard. The structure is nine meters in height, and covers an area of 200 square meters. It consists of an upper and lower story, and is built in a circular form. In the lower story there rises a massive pillar upon which is placed the great refracting telescope. The lower story is divided into a dinning-room and kitchen and store-rooms. In the upper story there are three bedrooms, intended for the accommodation of astronomers and tourists visiting the establishment. The roof consists of a movable cupola or dome. From the balconies of the upper story a prospect of vast extent and grandeur is presented. The spectator is able to see over half the island of Sicily, and island of Malta, the Libari Isles, and the province of Claboria on the mainland of Italy. The observatory is erected upon a small cone, which will, in the case of eruption, protect it completely from the lava stream which always flows down the side of the volcano.

Tilden and Hayes.

[Buffalo Courier.

The experience of Hayes ought to teach us all how little there is in mere official station and how much in strength of character. He has been president of the United States, the successor of Washington, Jefferson and Lincoln and yet there is not a country school mistress from Maine to California that doesn't possess as much influence as the ex-president. He is seldom mentioned without a sneer. His opinions are laughed at. Nobody believes a word he utters to the public. The man whom he supplanted, though old and worn, perplexed by the hatreds of those who wronged him, and apparently intent only on spending the remainder of his days in retirement, is still a power in the land. Parties watch his movements, study his words, speculate on his designs. Friends lean on his council and foes dread his possible activity. In a word, Samuel J Tilden is a great citizen, though he failed to reach the presidency. Rutherford B. Hayes has sunk into the condition of a nonentity, which nature intended him to fill. It may be a greater misfortune to attain to an office for which we are unfit than to miss an honor which we have fairly won.

Senatorial Shirks.

[Courier-Journal.]

Mahone, of Virginia, has been in his seat about forty-eight hours all told during the session; Cameron has been out of his seat nearly all the time; Lamar is at home with a sick wife; Logan is at the Hot Springs with his lame back; Edmunds has been away with a sick daughter, and Garland has been much in his own state. Hill is said not to be so near death as reported. The doctor says that if he had abstained from too free use of his mouth in eating and talking, and so given his wounds a chance to heal, he would not have been sent back to bed. He is now under treatment to keep him quiet, with some hope of recovery. His colleague, Mr. Brown, is reported very ill, but it is thought not dangerously so. Speaking of him in the room of the sergeant-at-arms to-day, [illegible] said: "He is the sort of man who will get sick and drop out of public life, and when everybody has forgotten him, there will appear a notice of his death at ninety-two years, with the explanation that he was once governor of his state and a senator."

VOICES OF THE SEA.

Wakeful I lay at night and heard
The pulsings of the restless sea,
The mourning surges
Sounded like dirges
From some far-back eternity,
Whose spirits from the deep are stirred.

Awaking with the morning light,
Again I listened to the sea;
But with its surges
We hear no dirges,
But only life's activity,
Morning dispelled the gloom of night.

At noon I sauntered forth to view
The throbbing of the living sea;
Still it was surging,
But only urging
All men to be both strong and free—
Strong in soul with conscience true.

At closing day once more I stood,
Gazing across the mighty sea;
Far ships were sailing;
The night was falling;
Time lost in immortality,
Was the reflection of my mood.

It is the mind, and not the place,
Our moods, and not a varying voice,
That fills with sadness,
Or thrills with gladness,
A soul whose one great ruling choice
Reflects in all things its own face.
—Little's Living Age.

ROMA.

From Tinsley's Magazine.

It was certainly a veritable antique, not absolutely perfect, still more valuable. Professor Buchanan contemplated it with all the satisfaction of an antiquary confirmed in an original opinion.

It was, after all, a poor thing, at first sight—only a dilapidated-looking ornament, an old bracelet spoiled by sea-sand and sea-water.

But in the eye of an antiquarian the disfigurements of age are so many signs of beauty. That the bracelet was bent, that its gold was tarnished and the mosaics with which it was inlaid were partly wanting, was nothing; its antique shape, with the magic word "Roma," with which its ancient maker had cunningly engraved it, were quite enough for the Professor.

Moreover, had he not always maintained that the remains on that part of the coast were Roman? His brother professor, Mr. Naughton, had constantly endeavored to prove that that mighty nation had never penetrated so far north.

The ocean itself was to witness for the truth, and only ten days ago this precious relic had been offered to him by a fisherman who had brought it to shore in his net.

It was with some difficulty that the Professor could conceal his sense of the value of the bracelet sufficiently to drive a reasonable bargain; but his Scotch prudence prevailed, and in his heart he congratulated himself.

For some years he had spent part of his holiday on this coast, where a far-famed river widened to the sea, and the passing to and fro of the little steamer across its mouth was one of the great events of the day. To-day was stormy, and the waves ran high, and even the Professor had been watching the somewhat rough passage of the boat.

"Overdue," he had said, and then he had turned again to inspect his treasure. "I only regret"—so ran his professional thoughts—"that that paragraph got into the Modern Athenian of yesterday; that booby Andrew was just premature in sending it. It will anticipate what I was writing to the Antiquary."

"Here's a gentleman speering for ye," said his rough Scotch domestic at this moment, recalling him rudely to every-day life.

The Professor instinctively replaced the bracelet in an open drawer, and closed the latter quickly before he turned to receive his guest, who proved to be a young man about 20, short, fair and frank-looking.

"Professor Buchanan, I think?" said this young man, with a bow. "I must apologize, Sir, for intruding on you. I have called upon you in consequence of a paragraph in the Modern Athenian."

"Deed," said the Professor, "I am glad to hear it, sir. At your age lads are not always so much interested as all that in antiquities. And what will your name be?"

"My name?"—there was, perhaps, a moment's hesitation on the part of the visitor; his color deepened—"Oh, my name is Henderson, and I—"

"Well, I am very glad it was put in," was the reply, "for it has led to a discovery—"

"A discovery you may well call it, Mr. Henderson," said the Professor, rising, and holding the lappels of his coat with both hands. "A discovery confirming that which I have for years maintained, and that is that the remains hereabout are Roman, and that if we could get leave to excavate we should find—"

"Nay, sir," interrupted Mr. Henderson, with a smile intended to disarm and propitiate; "I am afraid I am not here to confirm your antiquarian theories. I am here—in fact, I am come to tell you that the bracelet described in the Modern Athenian belonged to a lady who wishes to claim it."

"To a leddy!" ejaculated the Professor, becoming more Scotch in his surprise "To a leddy! Na, na, Mr. Henderson. The leddy that wore that bracelet is a way to her grave, and will na claim it."

"But, Sir," was the rejoinder. "I assure you I have often seen this lady wear the bracelet described in the paragraph, and she herself has no doubt it is hers. It was brought to her some years ago from Rome. You know they make them on the antique model still. The lady is very anxious to have the bracelet restored to her; and Professor Buchanan is so well known in the antiquarian world that we felt sure he would wish to be undeceived as to the value of an ornament which has no claim to antiquity."

This last sentiment was certainly a delicate piece of flattery. The Professor accepted it as a literal statement of the truth.

"'Deed, Mr. Henderson," said he, "and that's a fact. But how will I know," continued the cautious Scotchman, "that the leddy have sent you after it? And how will she have dropped it into the sea?"

"Well, sir," said Mr. Henderson, "I have brought my credentials with me. Here is my card, and here is an exact description of the bracelet."

He handed a card and a piece of paper to the Professor, whose last hopes faded away as he read the minute description of his treasures. He knitted his brows to gain time.

"Of course," said the young man, "it must have become injured by being in the sea."

Though a man of theories, the Professor was candid.

"I am satisfied young sir; I was mistaken," said he resuming his ordinary manner. "And now, may I ask who was the lady who lost it?"

"The lady—Oh, well, sir, the lady who sent me here, I will tell you between ourselves, is my sister." Mr. Henderson reddened again. "And, sir, you will not, I hope, mind my asking you to keep this to yourself. There are reasons—"

"Say no more, Mr. Henderson; say no more; you may be sure I will not be ready to tell my mistake. Pretorian here, Pretorian there. There's no lack of Edie Ochiltrees, though the King's bedesmen are extinct."

He opened the drawer, and taking out the bracelet surveyed it rather ruefully.

"Yes, that is it," said Mr. Henderson; "but it is a good deal the worse for water. I don't wonder, sir, you were misled. It looks as old as the hills."

The Professor slowly wrapped it in paper, and said as he handed it to the young man—

"And will the lady have dropped it into the sea, young sir?"

"Well, she knew it was here; directly she read the paragraph, and—"

"Well, I'm no asking to know more," said the elder man.

"And now I must be off, sir, with many thanks from my sister and myself for your kindness; but first, you must be good enough to let me know what I owe you. I know what these fishing fellows are, and how they swindle one."

The Professor, however, obdurately refused to satisfy Mr. Henderson's curiosity on this point, and he found it impossible to urge the matter further. It might have been that he now blushed to own to having given a sum which at the time seemed moderate, but anyway, the Professor would only restore the bracelet as a gift to Miss Henderson.

It pleased him evidently to have his way on this point. And if he was left alone with a shattered theory, he was not without a compensating gleam of modern interest.

"I like the laddie well," thought he, as he again watched the tossing boat, "and if his sister had been as wise-like she would not have lost her jewels in the sea."

II.

Our friend, the Professor, did not always take his holiday in Scotland. There are other parts of the world in which the remains are undoubtedly Roman, and in which, if there is nothing for an antiquarian to prove, there is everything for him to enjoy. Such a place the good Professor found in the land of Provence, where he was disposed to linger about sixteen months after the date of his interview with Mr. Henderson. He arrived at Nimes one day, having, with great difficulty, torn himself away from Arles—Arles, where the pagan relics confirm, as it were, the Christian traditions, being of necessity so much older.

He had been—low be it spoken—to a course de taureaux on Sunday in the amphitheater; he had inspected St. Tropheme, and done justice to the Forum. He had lingered yet longer for the sake of the library of Mont Majeur; but on the evening of a hot day in May he found himself at Nimes, too late for anything in the way of sight-seeing, but in time for the table d'hote. The places on his right hand were empty; that on his left was occupied by a French gentleman, who spoke such good English that he and the Professor were soon engaged in a discussion on the language of Provence. Between discussing this topic and discussing his dinner, he was for some time so deeply engaged that he hardly noticed that the seats next to him had become filled, and that his immediate neighbor was a lady, until his friend, finding one of his assertions disputed by a spectacled savant opposite, burst into a stream of French so fluent, rapid, imperative and idiomatic that the Professor lost the thread. Not till then, I say, did our friend become conscious of a memory—not altogether pleasant—the memory of a mistake. Even as he sat down his glass of vin ordinaire, what was it that made him recall what he had so long forgotten—Mr. Henderson, Edie Ochiltree, Pregorian here, Pregorian there?

It was only a bracelet. What was it that immediately convinced the Professor that it was the bracelet? I hardly know, unless it was the sensitiveness of his antiquarian conscience. From whatever cause it arose, it is certain that he at once jumped to a conclusion, and glanced behind the lady, who was so composedly taking her soup to her companion.

Not Mr. Henderson. It is a question whether the Professor was more puzzled or relieved. Not Mr. Henderson; a man older, darker, handsomer. Well, the "laddie" had said it was from her sister he came, and, after all, was not this lady like him? A bride, no doubt. He had the curiosity to look at her third finger, as well as her wrist. There was a magic circle, and young, too, and pretty, with an air of composed happiness which it did him good to see.

He made a little advance in handing her the salt. She turned and looked at him with the sweetest eyes he had ever seen, and a few minutes after they had entered into conversation. She and her husband had spent the winter in Italy, she told him, and were soon going into the Pyrenees. That day they had been to the Roman baths and to the amphitheater, and she grew merry over the recital of the way she had teased the cicerone of the latter.

"I told him," she said, "that the amphitheatre at Verona was far more perfect, and hurt his feelings dreadfully. You must really take pity on him to-morrow, and restore his self-esteem, for he is quite a part of the show."

As she spoke her eyes sparkled, and the Professor began to think it would be interesting to have his conjecture confirmed.

He led the conversation further and further into the realm of the past, and the young husband and wife followed him with intelligence. He was deep in his favorite tropic, when he was both amused and nonplussed by the gentleman's referring to a paper on Roman antiquities, read before the Society of Antquaries, and asking him if he agreed with one of the theories put forward.

"Deed," said the Professor, "I more than agree. I originated it."

"Indeed!" replied the gentleman, with an interested air. "I fancied it has been organized on the Professor's part."

"That it was," said our friend, with dry humor. "I was the originator."

"Oh, then I am speaking to Professor Buchanan," said the young man. "I beg your pardon, sir."

"No, indeed, sir," replied the Professor, with a polite bow.

Instinctively at this moment his eyes fell on the bracelet. Was it the same association of ideas which caused it to be nervously turned by its wearer, and which called so becoming a blush to her cheek? She glanced at her husband, and he, too, seemed to have some consciousness connected with the Professor's name, shown, however, only by a moment's pause before he said:

"We are, indeed, fortunate to meet such a distinguished countryman. Do you remain here any time?"

"I am not limited to time," said the Professor, "that is not my idea of enjoyment."

The lad had somehow become silent; she was engaged with her poulet. The French gentleman again opened fire, and the Professor's attention was distracted from his righthand neighbors. He noticed their departure, for they bowed with pointed politeness, and he shortly after passed into the salon de lecture to look at Galignani.

It was, perhaps, an hour later, that the young husband returned, and, again entering into conversation, asked him if he would like to come into their salon and look at some photographs, as he and his wife were leaving Nimes next morning they would both like to see him again.

"My name is Montrevor," said he, as he led the way to their room; "and we are at the end of a long wedding tour."

Mrs. Montrevor greeted the Professor with a smile. She ordered coffee, and as the three sat near the open window the Professor could not but admire the sweet face and fresh grace of the young wife.

He looked over the photographs, and might have become too discursive on their merits had not Mrs. Montrevor, with a glance at her husband said:

"I have whished to thank you myself, Professor Buchanan, for restoring to me what I so much value."

As she spoke she handed to him the ornament to which I have so often referred, and her husband said:

"I do not wonder you took it for a true antique, it was so much injured Now you see it has a more modern air."

"'Deed," said the Professor, who was handling the trinket, "we will, if you please, say no more of my mistake. Then, Madame," with his old-fashioned courteous bow, "I had a theory which I was too glad to have confirmed, and I must confess that the word 'Roma' was too much for me. Now I see it a fresh light, and I assure you it pleases me more than any discovery to find I have been of slight service to you."

Mrs. Montrevor smiled. She certainly had a wonderful smile, and there was an indescribable air of quiet content in the way in which she said, as she reclasped her bracelet:

"Yes, I was very glad to have it again."

"And how did you lose it in the sea?" asked the Professor, who had always felt a great curiosity on this point.

The lady did not answer; she was arranging the lace at her wrist.

"She did not lose it," said her husband. "I threw it into the sea myself. Well, my dear," in answer to a glance from her, "you would thank the Professor yourself, so he may as well hear the whole story, and that is, sir," said Mr. Montrevor, "that I pitched it in myself—I did indeed. I had parted from this lady, who is now my wife; I was in wretched spirits, and I was determined that at least no one else should ever wear the present she had returned to me. And then she saw the paragraph in the paper, and guessed what I had done; and so, by your means, it came back to her."

"It was an omen," said a bright voice.

The husband's eyes brightened; he gave a short laugh.

"The omen is fulfilled, you see, or we should not have met you here."

"Thanks to the word 'Roma,'" said the Professor.

Scene at a Wedding.

Richmond Whig

A singular spectacle took place in an adjoining county about ten days ago during a marriage ceremony. In the very midst of the service the preacher stopped short. His agitation had been noticed from the first. His voice, which had been shaky, now gave way entirely. He tried to speak, but could not; his face was deadly pale. He trembled visibly, and finally swooned, and would have fallen to the floor but for the supporting arms of those around him. The marriage being of a strictly private character, there were but few who witnessed the scene.

This took place at 6 o'clock. The ceremony was deferred until the minister recovered, which happened about 9 o'clock, when the anxious pair were united.

The singular circumstance attending the marriage has been much talked of. The minister's agitation, his swoon and failure to complete the ceremony, are variously accounted for. There are not wanting some who trace a relation between between this impressive scene and the fact that the bride was a former sweetheart (and fiancee, it is thought) of the minister, who had been called upon to unite her to another man. The minister is still a bachelor.

Just the Same.

There was a crowd of carriages in front of a church when a man came along, discovered that something was going on, and, leaning against a hitching post, he asked of a pedestrian:

"Was it very sudden?"

"I don't know."

"Presume it was. Well, we've all got to go that way. Do you know, sir, that—that—"

Here his voice broke down and he reached for his handkerchief.

"What is the matter?" inquired the other.

"Young woman's funeral in there."

"That's no funeral; that's a marriage!"

"Marriage! ah—yes—marriage—I see. Well, it's all the same to me. Give me the young man's name and I'll weep over him!"

INGERSOLL AND TALMAGE.

A Proper and Scathing Characterization of the Blatant Infidel.

Dramatic Times.

We class Mr. Ingersoll and Dr. Talmage in the same category. They can both talk more incisive flapdoodle than any two men who have secured a mortgage on public attention.

We are not religionists, and never meddle with the subject in this paper, but we do try to criticise all public entertainments that are offered, and if any reputable theater should fail as utterly to do what it promised as these men do in their shows, we should not hesitate to condemn it as fraudulent.

The injury which an indiscreet and voluble man like Talmage does to the religion he tries to defend is only equaled by the odium which Mr. Ingersoll throws upon what is called liberal thought.

One of these champions undertakes to explain in a literal manner all the old myths and poetic licenses of the Hebrew scriptures—things that intelligent Christians ceased contending for fifty years ago.

The other champion turns into ridicule all the sacred things which, from association and tradition, are treated with respect if not with reverence by most men—Christian or infidel—and after telling funny stories about God for two hours, and heaping hilarious contumely upon everybody who pretends to have any belief at all, winds up by telling his listeners that he does not know whether there is any God or not—that we are all on the same craft together, without being on speaking terms with the captain, without knowing what harbor we sailed out of or what port we are sailing into, and the only thing we can do is to have as good a time as possible on the voyage.

Why rational, sensible human beings should pay a dollar and half to hear this old epicurean say that, we cannot for the life of us understand.

Men may doubt that they have such a thing about them as an immortal soul. Very many intelligent men do doubt it. But they do not go to the edge of the grave to howl it in the ears of mourners.

Many may doubt the existance of a personal God—many gifted and honored men do doubt it. But they do not get up public exhibitions of their doubts, and turn somersaults in the face of heaven.

Honest doubt is entitled to respect. But a noisy, catchpenny conscience is very apt to create ennui and contempt.

Mr. Ingersoll is in the habit of referring to science in a vague but laudatory manner. Why does he not trot out a little science occasionally? He has an overpowering respect for reason. Why not stimulate our respect for it by an occasional exhibition of a little of it?

If he is going to overturn religion and emancipate the priest-ridden sons of earth from the thraldom of creeds, he'd better let that ark story and snake story rest and get on to some new jokes.

If Christianity is going to be uprooted with humor, the humor has to be freshened once in seven years, at least.

If mankind is bleeding under the yoke of the church, it is high time that this high priest of hilarity got down to some solid work, and provide himself with some new weapons of emancipation.

His large visceral system moves with an antiquated horror at the thumbscrew and the rack. He believes that Cardinal McCloskey keeps the tools in the house handy, waiting for an opportunity to have an auto-da-fe in Union Square, and to lay the cornerstone of an inquisition in the Central Park.

We don't believe that he can strike a single chain from the limbs of religious slavery with the sledge-hammer of Illinois fun. We don't believe that the talk about science is worth two cents to the bleeding sons of toil, unless you know something about it. We don't believe that even an infidel wants an end-man to play a tambourine in his service.

It is as an irreverent ribald that he makes his hit. Let him break into the sanctuary, where he can tumble on the mercy seat, shawl his humor on the alter-rail and hang his cartoons on the cross—and bring down the house. And, good God! what a house! The sensation seekers of Sunday night, the moral debauchees and moralists of the cafes, whom you will see, on less secular occasions, standing up in the rear on first nights of the theater, whose moral sensibilities are so outraged at the obscenity of the old comedy that they retire in disgust at the end of the second act and go up to the lecherous dives of the Sixth-avenue; long-haired cranks winking and blinking in the gaslight and blaze of Ingersoll combined; scraggy women who have free love instead of comeliness wrought in the wrinkles of their alabaster brows; Communists, Socialists, agritators, youngsters not yet out of the shell of egotism and audacity; manufacturers of patent gods and new systems and fresh religions, with a crowd of belly worshipers and sensualists, chiefly anxious to welcome any new apostle who will furnish a new defense for their own appetites.

All these elements linked in a Sunday-night brotherhood, by the flaming doctrine of nohow and nowhere, and roused to insane unity of approval by the creed that virtue consits in not having anything to believe, and making as much game as possible of the poor wretch who desires to have something.

Andersonville

Corr, Portland Press,

A few private stones have been erected by friends of the departed, and stand in long white lines like mounted officers among the infantry, and it takes but little stretch of imagination to make reality out of the picture set forth in the beginning. Many have come hither to remove the bodies of relatives but the grounds are so well kept and cared for that few removals have taken place. The marble slabs are some of them beautiful, being mottled and variegated, and among so many thousand some exquisite specimens occur. Here and there appears a square stone shorter than the rest, with a simple number, marking an unknown grave. It strikes one with mournful interest to see the frequency of ages nineteen, twenty, which appear to be the average of ages.

But little is now left of the stockade; the line of red clay breastworks is, however, yet intact, and worn smooth by the tramp of the sentinels in gray, who a score of years ago trod the weary beat, scarcely better fed or clothed than the poor wretches within. A field of oats has been planted in the enclosure, which is full of old wells, sunk by the prisoners, who tried to tunnel the breast works and escape. Few succeeded, and if the outer works were reached, the rifles of sentinels or baying of bloodhounds gave the alarm, and recapture was almost a certainty.

"What about Wirs, the keeper?" I inquired of a soldierly looking man in butternut.

"He ought to have been burned," was the reply.

"Were the atrocities perpetrated here by him at all exagerated?"

"No, d—n him! and the half was never told."

"Yes, and was a guard at the prison for three years during the war."

"Have you any objections to giving me your name for publication?"

"No; my name is J. F. Wood, and I was a corporal in the Second Georgia infantry, regular army of the confederacy."

Bill Nye Talks to Young Men.

Young man, what are you living for? Have you an object dear to you as life, and without the attainment of which you feel that your life will have been a wide, shoreless waste, peopled by the spectres of dead ambitions? You can take your choice in the great battle of life, whether you will bristle up and win a deathless name and owe almost everybody, or be satisfied with scabs and mediocrity. Many of those who now stand at the head of the nation as statesmen and logicians were once unknown, unhonored and unsung. Now they saw the air in the halls of Congress, and their names are plastered on the temple of fame.

You can win some laurels, too, if you will brace up and secure them when they are ripe. Daniel Webster and President Garfield and Dr. Tanner and George Eliot were all, at one time, poor boys. They struggled against poverty and public opinion bravely on till they won a name in the annals of history, and secured to their loved ones palatial homes, with lightning rods and mortgages on them. So may you if you make the effort.

All these things are within your reach. Live temperately on $9 per month. That's the way we got our start. Burn the midnight oil if necessary. Get some true, noble-minded young lady of your acquaintance to assist you. Tell her of your troubles and she will tell you what to do. She will gladly advise you. Then you can marry her, and she will advise you some more. After that she will lay aside her work any time to advise you. You needn't be out of advice at all unless you want to. She, too, will tell you when you have made a mistake. She will come to you frankly and acknowledge that you have made a jackass of yourself.

As she gets more acquainted with you she will be more candid with you, and in her unstudied, girlish way, she will point out your errors, and gradually convince you, with an old chair-leg and other arguments, that you were wrong, and your past life will come up before you like a panorama, and you will tell her so, and she will let you up again. Life is indeed a mighty struggle. It is business. We can't all be editors and lounge around all the time, and wear good clothes, and have our names in the papers, and draw a princely salary. Some one must do the work and drudgery of life, or it won't be done.

Fate of a Female Nihilist.

St. Petersburg Letter.

A prominent preacher in one of the orthodox churches at Samera, a town in the Volga government, gave umbrage to the revolutionary committee of that city by vehemently inveighing against the murderers of the late Czar. A few hours later the committee held a meeting for the purpose of deciding what punishment should be inflicted upon the priest. The committee resolved that he should be put to death, and their members drew lots for the office of executioner, which fell to a girl of nineteen, affiliated to the organization only a few days previously. Upon drawing the fatal lot she exhibited some agitation, but accepted her murderous mission with these words: "The committee will have reason to be satisfied with the manner in which its decree will be carried out." Next morning the doomed priest was awakened shortly after daybreak by the report of a firearm, discharged in a room contiguous to his own bedchamber. Upon entering the room in question, he beheld his only daughter stretched out at full length upon the floor near the foot of the bed and weltering in her blood. She had just strength enough left before expiring to confess to him that she had pledged herself to take his life, but preferred killing herself to fulfilling her oath. Exhorted to reveal the names of her fellow conspirators, she refused to do so, and died without having afforded any clue that could lead to their detection.

Edison's Railway.

New York Special.

Several miles of Mr. Edison's electric railway, at Menlo park, are now completed and a few days ago the pupils of Prof. A. E. Sloan's school, of Bergen Point, N. J., about thirty in number, were carried over this road by electricity at the rate of twenty miles per hour. At the experiments in Berlin last year, on nine miles of the Siemen's road, the speed attained was only ten miles per hour. Mr. Edison's track is like that of any ordinary railway, involving curves, grades (one over thirty feet to the mile), with the various obstacles of ravines, streams and rocks. The car resembles our modern horse-car. The electricity is communicated from the generators, some 300 yards away, by two heavy wires, one connecting with each track. The tracks are insulated by covering the ends of the ties with a non-conducting compound. The wheels take up the electricity from the tracks and communicate with the dynamo-electric machine and gearing in the locomotive. Thus is given to the train a noiseless, rapid, pleasant motion, unattended with smoke, cinders and clatter.

A theological student from New Brunswick, New Jersey, was journeying by rail in the western part of the State. While the train was waiting at one of the stations he took advantage of the delay to make some inquiries of a native on the platform as to the moral condition of the population of that section. "We're a doin' purty well," said the man; "there was a religious revolution in our village only last week." "And may I ask more particularly as to the nature of it?" continued the candidate for holy orders, his face exhibiting no little satisfaction at the news. "You may," answered the native. "It was a fight at the Methodist prayer meeting."

A Poor Man to Follow.

When a man can stand up in public and say that life will be a burden too grievous to be borne, if he cannot live in a saloon seven days in the week; when a man is willing to admit that the closing of a saloon four times a month is going to destroy his moral happiness and peace of mind; when he confesses that every day he lives he must spend a certain number hours in the inspired atmosphere and elevating society of a gin-mill; that man ceases to be a correct moral guide, and society should not listen to his siren voice, pleading for free whisky, lots of it, and all the time.

FROM THE WIRES.

New Albany, Ind., dispatch:

The heavy and continuous rains of the past few days have wrought great destruction along the valleys of the White and Moscattan rivers. The entire country in the valleys of these rivers is inundated, and farmers in Jackson, Lawrence and Martin counties are heavy losers. Fifteen miles of track of the Bedford Narrow Gauge Railroad was washed out, and the fencing carried away, and in some places the crops are destroyed.

Clinton, Ill., dispatch:

Patsey Devine was hanged in the jail here shorty before noon, for the murder of Aaron Goodfellow, in 1879. The gallows was in the old debtor's cell, and a stone was taken up in the floor, and at 11 o'clock Devine's body dropped through five feet to the corridor beneath. At 11:45 o'clock he was pronounced dead, and seven minutes afterward was cut down. His body was then put into a coffin and taken from the jail to the Court House, where it was exhibited for a short time. Early this morning he said he was ready to die. He marched boldly to the scaffold and died game. None were admitted to the execution but officials and reporters. All was quiet.

Ex-Governor Cadwallader C. Washburn died at Eureka Springs, Ark., at half-past 5 o'clock Sunday afternoon. The remains in charge of relatives, left this morning for La Crosse, where the funeral will occur on Thursday. Flags are at half-mast. Demonstrations of profound sorrow are abundant. Arrangements are being made for appropriate obsequies.

Valuable New Citizens.

New York Tribune.

Over 70,000 immigrants arrived at this port during the month of April, and nearly all of them were sturdy, well to-do people, who, almost from the moment they land, begin to work and thus augment the productive capacity of the country. About 40 per cent. of all arrivals were Germans, and the character of this most valuable of all nationalities represented in the newcomers steadily improves. The women among them are excellent domestics and mill operatives, and the men are either skilled mechanics or farmers who have sufficient money with them to take them West and purchase unoccupied lands upon which to build new homes. In a shipload of 622 Germans which arrived on Saturday, each had a good supply of household furniture and money, varying in amount from $60 to $2,500. Another valuable class are the Scandanavians who, while bringing smaller sums of money, are no less fitted for useful and productive work. They are a thrifty, rugged people who make sober and valuable citizens.

Quick Steps from A to Izzard.

Roses bloom in Sacramento at Christmas. In March, ninety-six miles from Sacramento and 7,000 feet above it, messengers on snow shoes, carry the mail across Summit Valley over the tops of the telegraph poles, and in two-story houses the windows are shut tight by snow, and they burn lights up stairs and down, night and day, for two weeks. When this great body of stow melts, and the short rivers, varying from seventy to 200 hundred miles, are overfilled, there are great freshets. Yet, perhaps, 100 miles the other way a drouth will be prevailing. In Sacramento the thermometer stands in July at 95 degrees. In San Francisco, seventy miles away, ladies will be out in their sealskins, and the fuchsias and passion flowers and camellias will swing and thrash in a wind that seems to come from Alaska.

AN ECHO OF BYGONE YEARS.

FOSTER COATES.

A song comes back from the bygone years
Whose melody never grows old,
And I listen again, through my smiles and tears,
Though the singer lay dead and cold.
'Tis a song so sweet, by a voice so rare,
Far purer than any other,
And I hear it again, though troubled by care,
The lullaby sung me by mother.

There are times, it seems when all alone,
The singer is by my side,
And I hear her voice in a monotone,
Like the rise and fall of the tide.
While the days go by, till the end of time
And the struggle of life is ended,
May the singer never forget her rhyme
Till her bliss and mine are blended.

ARCTIC EXPLORATION.

Views of Captain Hooper, of the Cutter Corwin—The Open Polar Sea a Myth, Summer Voyages Not Uncomfortable.

Washington Special Chicago Times

Captain Hooper, of the Corwin, who is here waiting orders, has filed with the treasury department a report embracing the particulars of his recent explorations of the Arctic regions in search of the Jeannette. Captain Hooper is one of the most practical of the northern explorers, as he is one of the most careful. He has a better record, so far as bringing his vessel and crew safely is concerned, than any of the men who have visited the north. Capt. Hooper, on his last visit north, settled quite a number of interesting questions. It has been the theory upon the part of some that Wrangell land possibly extended to the pole. Scientific men in Washington have contemplated an expediton overland from the coast of Siberia to Wrangell land, and thence onward as far north as that explored section would permit. The Siberian coast was to be used as a base of supplies. Capt. Hooper settled the fact that Wrangell land, so-called, is an island. The captain says that the theory of an open polar sea will have to be given up. The records of expeditions show that when a certain point in the north is reached, ice is found in such quantities as to make navigation impossible. No matter how far north a vessel may be in midsummer, an ice-barrier always comes between it and further progress north, when a certain limit is reached. The Nares expedition reached the highest point. It made the last forty miles over ice of such character that it required an entire day to make one mile. Captain Hooper believes that any further attempt to reach these extreme northern regions is a needless waste of life and property. There is no object in any vessel going north and wintering in the ice. All that is practical can be accomplished by a swift vessel during the summer season. The moment a vessel is locked in the ice, exploration is at an end Captain Hooper strips off many of the illusions of Arctic exploration with his plain, common sense descriptions. It has been a favorite romance of northern explorers to picture terrific contests with the savage polar bear. Captain Hooper says that there is no more credit, so far as valor is concerned, in killing a polar bear than there is in assassinating a cow in a pasture. The polar bear runs at the approach of man, and under no circumstances fights unless wounded so badley that it can not get away. All that the Arctic sportsmans has to do is to blaze away until the bear gives up the ghost. He says he has seen the natives kill them with the ordinary bow and arrow and spear. He has rowed through droves of them in the water with an ordinary boat's crew, with the same safety one would experience in moving through a flock of sheep, the bear scattering to the left and right at the approach of the boat. Capt. Hooper gives up De Long and his associates. He says that too long a time has elapsed without word from him to reasonably expect news of their safety. He says that after what they have endured it seems almost incredible that they should not have reached, finally, a port of safety. Their failure to reach some point where help could be administered must be attributed largely to their exhaustion in their preliminary fight for life before they reached land. He says that there are very few that can appreciate the terrible agony and suffering of the Jeanette crew for the twenty-two months they were locked in the floating ice, and during the twenty-two months there was no time when death through the crushing of the vessel was not to be apprehended. After this long period of agonized suspense there came the fight across the ice and through the water to land. That any escaped was one of the miracles of Arctic exploration. He says there is not much discomfort connected with a summer exploration of the Arctic region. Food and game are plenty, and with ordinary precautions there is no suffering from the cold, even in the vicinity of Wrangell land. The mosquitoes, in summer, swarm in great numbers, and are one of the most serious drawbacks.

A Vienna Sensation.

[Correspondent San Francisco Chronicle.]

"Society" among the noblesse would stagnate were it not for some scandal and piquant gossip. The last and best is triumph of a feminine decendant of a Paladin over a pretty actress. In one of the cities of this Austrian empire an actress of immense talent and acknowledged charms won the heart, and, what is better, the purse of a grand-titled personage. Her home was the abode of luxury and art, her jewels fit for a princess. Of course they belonged to a princess, but she did not know it. One thing alone failed her—a faithful maid, a trustworthy, reliable Abigail, who would unlock the private staircase door certain evenings and admit "nobility." The newspaper announcements brought her no proper person. At last her nobleman, in a fit of despair asked his wife's maid if she knew any one, saying his sister was looking for a "Kammerjungfer." It was a lie, of course, but as the sister in question lived in the mountains, he knew she could not speak for herself. But she did. She came to town unexpectedly, not to seek a maid, but to know if reports of her brother's devotion to the actress were true. A jealous wife, an angry sister, an accomplished "maid" can ferret out the most mysterious secret. These did, and when the wife found who it was who desrid the services of a discreet, matronly maid, she canceived the heroic design of taking the position.

The idea of a Paladin's decendan's becoming servant to her own husband's mistress never daunted her. She concealed her stately form with artificial deformities, wore a wig, and put wax moles on her aristocratic face, and went for the situation. She was accepted, and, more, she gave immense satisfaction. She was intrusted with sundry keys, and among them those of the jewel casket containing her own ancestral dimonds, which her noble husband had lavished upon the lovely actress. At last the appointed evening came. "After the play to-night," said the star of the stage, "be in the dark corridor; unlock the door at the end; a friend will come up the staircase; show him into the boudoir; then you can retire; I shall not need you." The actress departed to her role so did the Princess. The former entranced an audience, the latter entranced herself. She went home and dressed herself in her most beautiful reception toilet, drove back to the house of the actress, entered, covered with her usual lady's maid cloak, and ascended to the secret corridor.

She had not long to wait. The impatient nobleman rushed from the theatre as soon as his idol had left the boards, and, with his hands full of bonbons and more of his wife's jewelry, came up the staircase. The door was unlocked, the dark corridor was a blaze of light, and his wife stood before him, and beyond her, at the door of her boudoir, the actress just home from the theater. It was, has been, and is settled. The star restores the ancestral gems and leaves the city. Gossip says she refused to keep the latter agreement, but the aristocracy informed theater managers that if they engaged "that woman" they would desert his theater. Of course nothing can succeed without Paladin progeny smiles, and so the poor star fell from theatrical constellations in the imperial land, but she is going to do brilliant service in the clearer atmosphere of the Western hemisphere, and "one don't regret very-much-married princes and ancestral diamonds in the land of millionaires," she said as the western express bore her to Paris, en route for ——, the other side of the Atlantic. The Prince has taken to billiards and tarok, and the family gems repose in their ancestral caskets, of which the stoops-to-conquer Furstin keeps the key.

Going Him One Better.

Terre Haute Gazette.

This is a true story. An ingenious tramp thinking to wring tears and money assistance from the stoniest hearts with a new scheme, gave it an experimental trial in the north end. He has decided not to patent the invention. He told a north end lady of his unfortunate condition, and asked if he might eat some of the grass in the yard. The lady, no less amused than surprised, said:

"Certainly."

He went out, and getting down on all fours, commenced on the grass after the neglected and never popular fashion of Nebuchadnezzar, and apparently not enjoying the diet any more than that ancient sinner of olden time. Presently the tramp's anxious eye caught sight of the servant girl beckoning to him from the back yard. He thought a rich reward for his humility was in store, and instantly responded.

"Did you motion to me?" said he.

"Yes."

"What do you want?" He wore a look of most hopeful expectancy.

"You may go in the back yard if you want to. The grass is taller."

Second.

Because they are a genuine pharmaceutical preparation, and so recognized by the profession.

Third.

Because they are the only plasters that relieve pain at once.

Fourth.

Because they will positively cure diseases which other remedies will not even relieve.

Fifth.

Because over 5000 physicians and druggists have voluntarily testified that they are superior to all other plasters or medicines for external use.

Sixth.

Because the manufacturers have received the only medals ever given for porous plasters.

A SURE REMEDY AT LAST. Price 25cts. MEAD'S Medicated CORN and BUNION PLASTER.

If you feel drowsy, debilitated, have frequent headache, mouth tastes badly, poor appetite and tongue coated, you are suffering from torpid liver, or "biliousness," and nothing will cure you so speedily and permanently as to take SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR OR MEDICINE.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

The cheapest, Purest and Best Family Medicine in the World.

An EFFECTUAL SPECIFIC for all diseases of the Liver Stomach and Spleen.

Regulate the Liver and prevent Chills and Fever, Malarious Fevers, Bowel Complaints, Restlessness, Jaundice and Nausea.

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common as bad breath, and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons' Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your Appetite, Complexion, and General Health.

PILES!

How many suffer torture day after day, making life a burden and robbing existence of pleasure, owing to the secret suffering from Piles. Yet relief is ready to the hand of almost any one who will use systematically the remedy that has permanently cured thousands. SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR, is no drastic violent purge; but a gentle assistant to nature.

CONSTIPATION!

Should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache.

PROVED A SUCCESS
THE PASTILLE
Prof. Harris' Radical Cure
Trade Mark
FOR NERVOUS DEBILITY
BY YEARS OF USE!

A valuable Discovery and New Departure in Medical Science. A positively effective Remedy for the speedy and permanent Cure for organic weakness—the deplorable disease resulting from indiscreet practices or excesses in youth or at any time of life—by the only true way, viz: Direct Application acting by Absorption, and exerting its specific influence on the Vesicles, Ducts, and Gland, that are unable to perform their natural functions while this disease pervades the human organism. The use of the Pastille is attended with no pain or inconvenience, and does not interfere with the ordinary pursuits of life; it is quickly dissolved and soon absorbed, producing an immediate soothing and restorative effect upon the nervous organizations wrecked from vicious habits or excesses, stopping the drain from the system, restoring the mind to health and sound memory, removing the Dimness of Sight, Confusion of Ideas, Aversion to Society, etc., etc., and the appearance of premature old age usually accompanying this trouble, and restoring the vital forces, where they have been dormant for years. This mode of treatment has stood the test in very severe cases, and is now a pronounced success. Drugs are too much prescribed in this trouble, and, as many can bear witness to, with but little if any permanent good. There is no nonsense about this Preparation. Practical observation enables us to positively guarantee that it will give satisfaction. It has been in general use for several years and we have thousands of testimonials from patients, as to its value, and it is now conceded to be the most rational means yet discovered for reaching and curing this very prevalent trouble, that is well known to be the cause of untold misery to so many, and upon whom quacks prey with their useless nostrums and big fees. The Remedy is put up in neat boxes, of three sizes. No. 1, (enough to last a month,) $3; No. 2, (sufficient to effect a permanent cure, unless in severe cases,) $5; No. 3, (lasting over three months, will restore those in the worst condition,) $7. Sent by mail, in plain wrappers. Full DIRECTIONS for using will accompany EACH BOX.

Send for Sealed Descriptive Pamphlets giving Anatomical Illustrations and Testimony, which will convince the most skeptical that they can be restored to perfect health, and the vital forces thoroughly re-established same as if never affected. Sold ONLY by

Unsolicited testimony to the Efficacy of Prof. Harris' Pastilles, taken from Letters received from Patrons!

Indiana, April 11, '79.—The Remedy is working perfectly. Had suffered from weakness for 9 years past.

Iowa, Oct. 10th, '79.—I am almost surprised at your Pastilles. They have worked like a charm on me. I am just twice as much of a man as I was before taking. I was on the verge of the grave, I thought, and there was no cure for me, but now I am in good hopes for a cure.

West Virginia, Aug. 28, 1879.—I received your medicine and I believe it has cured me, for which I am very thankful. Inclosed find $5. Please send me another box (No. 2) for a friend. You have done a great thing for me. I will send you all the orders I can.

From a Physician and Surgeon.

Missouri, June 21.—Please forward me another box of the Pastilles. The patient on whom I have used most of one box, in addition to a sample box, is fast recovering, and I think another will set him all right.

From a Druggist.

Maryland, Sept. 3, '79.—Last January we got a box of your Remedy for one of our customers, and it has made a perfect cure of him. We have another one [illegible] suffering in the same way, and will one No. 2 box.

THE tariff is a nice thing. We have been trying the other side of it. The potatoes, cabbage, and beans imported into the United States from the old country during the winter and spring cost the consumers in this country over three hundred thousand dollars extra in the duty collected on them. Yet according to the theory of high tariff men, this would make them so much cheaper.

CORRESPONDENCE.

FRANKLIN.

Ezra Lautzenheizer has a new wind-mill.

M. J. Waterman has been embellishing his residence with a tasty front porch.

Jeff Beard has been putting on style by erecting a picket fence in front of his residence.

Simeon Hamman is to do the carpenter and joiner work on Alfred Kepler's new brick house.

Frank Shultz is about to remove his sawmill west, and he is going with it to grow up with the country.

Miss Olive Jackman is still poorly, but believed to be convalescing slowly, The same may be said of Jay B. Boyer.

I believe it has been understood for several years that one term of a four year county office was all one man could have. How is it to be this time?

It is surmised—and the indications are quite strong—that a pair of weddings will shortly take place in this township, the fair ones living not a thousand miles north of the Center school-house.

I think that action of the county committee should be sanctioned by the people of this township. This action might keep peace in the family, which would be an important thing in a close contest. I give this advice gratis, not claiming any right to do so.

I see that candidates are coming forward thick and fast, but don't you think, Mr. Editor, that a "leetle" too large a proportion are from the little towns? Give the country boys their proportion, taking the population as a criterion to go by. The country boys should demand this and take nothing less. This would aid very much in solving the question so often asked, "How can we keep the boys on the farm?" If they—the boys—see that the farmers get their full share of the positions of honor and profit, it will be a strong inducement for them to stay on the farm, but when they see all of the places of honor and trust conferred on the sleek fellows that stalk about town, it will operate otherwise. The Headlight to the contrary.

The farm have had a most discouraging time. It has rained about two weeks and kept the ground so wet that no plowing for corn could be done, and the weather does not appear to be settled yet; still, there is no great loss without some gain. The slack time has given that portion of us farmers who are in favor of protective tariff time to consider plans to aid our brother farmers in England in furthering their schemes for protecting themselves against our produce being entered free of duty into their country. Although that would reduce the price of our wheat, corn, pork, beef, etc., still we must not complain. If we tax their products don't we invite retaliation? And it must, of course, be a good thing for us, for don't our protection journals rejoice when protectionists are elected to the parliament of England? We are having such a good time, for don't the protectionists' papers say that we were never so prosperous as now, that we can afford to have prices reduced?

SEDAN.

Dr. Mathews was in town last week.

Sedan seems to be infested with egg buyers.

Melville Gonser spent last week at Fairfield.

Farmers are improving the weather by planting their corn.

Miss Jones and Miss McIntyre attended the institute at Corunna last Saturday.

Wm. Crane has taken the western fever. He started for Illinois last Wednesday.

We would like to see the road superintendent around this way. Our roads are in a terrible condition.

Sedan is not manifesting much anxiety over the candidates for congress. It is either Lowry or Colerick.

The prospects are flattering for building a new school-house here this fall. We need one, and hope the trustee will not forget us.

Mrs. Mike Treesh is quite sick. Dr. Sebring, of Auburn, is attending her. He pronounces her disease the first stage of quick consumption.

The temperance meeting last Saturday night was poorly attended. Is the interest dying out? If not, the temperance workers must wake up.

Josiah Chaney, of Ashland, Ohio, was looking up good cattle for shipping purposes. Mr. C. understands his business, and always pays the highest price.

Steckly Bros. have bought one of the celebrated Richmond threshers of Snyder & Culbertson. The boys understand the threshing business and deserve the patronage of all farmers.

ST. JOE.

Quite a goodly number were in attendance at the institute Saturday.

S. S. Shutt, T. H. and H. Murray, of Spencerville, were in town Saturday.

C. W. Widney is having his residence repainted, which adds greatly to its beauty.

J. A. Barns, of Corunna, was in town Saturday last attending township institute.

Mrs. F. Harding and Mrs. H. Mann, of Lagrange county, have been visiting friends in this city.

Quite a number of St. Joe people had a polite invitation from A. S. Leas to attend court Friday last.

Geo. Bell, who used to preside at the bridge shanty, has made himself scarce, and we yet live to tell the story.

Sol. Barney took in the capital of the state the fore part of last week attending the Grand Lodge of Oddfellows.

Mrs. A. F. Woodcox, who has been so long sick, is still confined to her room, with little prospects of recovery.

T. S. Saylor has Elkhart on his brain, and we fear that unless something serious happens, the place that now knows him so well will soon know him no more.

Mac. Leighty has a patient on the east side of the river whom he visits at least once in two weeks. We suspect the disease is curable from the fact of his going so seldom.

Sol. and Frank will make some additions to their store building this summer. Elce Donaldson is chief architect. Our merchants find that more room is needed as time progresses, and yet we are the little promontory on the St. Joe.

WATERLOO.

Nellie Barns spent Sunday with her friends in town.

O. T. Clark left Monday for Iowa on a business trip.

Miss Ella Young, of Angola, was the guest of Carrie Abby Tuesday.

Geo. Crane and family left yesterday for Michigan, to visit friends.

John Koons has moved into the Ab. Kelly house in the south part of town.

We noticed Messrs. Little and Bittner of the COURIER office in town Sunday.

Charles Voss and his daughter spent Sunday with his relatives in Auburn.

A. B. Richards and family left last Monday for Mishawaka their future home.

B. F. Kennedy, A. T. Smith and Mrs. Trout are painting their residences this week.

J. W. Peters, foreman in the office of the Ligonier Banner, was in town last Friday.

Miss Emma Segner, of Warsaw visited her grand father Thomas Segner last week.

Miss Lena Blair of Butler, visited a few days last week with her uncle L. J. Blair's family.

Mrs. A. B. Darby and the boys have returned from Oberlin to spend their summer vacation.

Miss Christia Blaker, of Butler, attended the commencement exercises here last Friday.

Rev. Waltz and wife and T. N. Beidler attended the district conference at Wolcottville this week.

James R. Freed and Parmelia Till, of Smithfield, were married at Reading, Michigan, last week.

Mr. Watson's wife has arrived and they have gone to house keeping in the Geo. Smith's property on Franklin St.

Mr. and Mrs. J. I. Best returned from Minneapolis Tuesday night. Measles in their family hastened their return.

Mrs. Baily, of Toledo Ohio a relative of the Ash family is with them having been called here by the death o, Mrs. Ash.

A. R. Stephens is so much improved that he walked out Tuesday. We hope he may soon be able to attend to business again.

Mr. Chillcote and family are with friends in town having been called here by the death of Mrs. C's. mother, Mrs. H. Lydecker.

J. A. Boozer was taken very suddenly sick Monday noon, and for a time his life was dispaired of, but he is some better at this writing.

Miss Lizzie Dickinson, of Angola, has been visiting her sister, Mrs. C. W. Gillett. She left Tuesday night for Kansas to visit for a couple of months.

Phillip Morell was at the meeting of the Grand Lodge of Oddfellows at Indianapolis last week. We are glad to see that his health is improving.

Mrs. Aaron Ash, who was taken to Indianapolis to the insane asylum, died at that institution last Sunday, and the remains were brought here Tuesday and interred in the cemetery. Funeral services were held at the U. B. church. Conducted by Rev. Klotz.

Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Penfield, of Auburn, were over here last Friday evening to attend the commencement exercises of the high school. Mr Penfield's address was in his usual good style, and was listened to with marked attention.

Died, at Marion Iowa May 20, Nina youngest child of J. W. and Nellie Patterson aged 9 months. This trouble seems greater for Mr. and Mrs. Patterson to bear as they lost their oldest child only four months ago. They have the sympathies of their friends here in this bereavement.

Mrs. H. Lydecker, died at her home in this place last Monday morning, of consumption, Mrs. Lydecker was a very great but patient sufferer, she had been an invalid for many years. She leaves a husband and four daughters to mourn her loss. The remains were interred Tuesday but the funeral services will be at the M. E. Church next Sunday at half past ten.

Commencement exercises last Friday evening were well attended and quite interesting. Dr. Chamberlain, president of the school board, presided, the other members being conspicuous by their absence. There were but two in the graduating class, Miss Lillie Spencer and Miss Mattie Maxson. Miss Maxson's subject for her graduating essay was "Small Causes, Great Results," and was a well composed and finely delivered production. She is very graceful and natural in her position, reading and manner, and her effort was well received. Miss Spencer's subject was "Waiting for the Tide." Upon this she had bestowed a great deal of thought and research, and all her points were well taken and ably handled. Her style is womanly and dignified, and impressed her hearers with the feeling that she had mastered her subject. Both ladies were applauded, and both received fine bouquets from admiring friends. The Alumni exercises consisted in essays by two members of the class of '79, Mr. M. W. Johnson and Mr. Adelbert Clutter. Mr. Johnson spoke on the subject of "The Advantages of Disadvantages." The effort was a manly and straightforward production, full of good thoughts well expressed. Mr. Clutter's subject was "Mind," and was a sensible production, though rather difficult for a person so young to handle successfully; still he made the most of it, and created a very good impression. Some parts of both of these essays were lost to the COURIER reporter by reason of the great crowd near the door and the confusion made there, and the usual small boy coming up and going down stairs. The order in the rest of the crowded audience was excellent. Mr. Penfield, of Auburn, delivered a short address on the subject, "Rome was not built in a day." It was given in his usual able and polished style. Supt. J. A. Barns responded to the sentiment, "Schools of DeKalb County." R. Wes. McBride responded to "The Supremacy of Mind." F. W. Willis spoke on the subject, "Our Graduates," and made several happy hits which were well received. The superintendent, Mr. Lamport, then presented the diplomas with a few well chosen and feeling remarks. He then bid adieu to his pupils and to the audience, as he was to leave for his new home, Mishwaka, the next day. His labors in our school have been in every way pleasant and successful, and he and his estimable wife go hence with the regrets and the best wishes of all.

The Governor, the Jack and the Docter.

Now you think you are a governor,
But I tell you I am doctor,
You will tell ye I'll cure Jack,
So the governor can ride on his back.
They go down to see Hoff's house,
And it happened Jack got roust,
Then you ought to see Jack's mouth,
As he came near swallowing the house.

Chorus:

Now see here my chum, chum, chum,
What can I do for my yum, yum, yum?
Give Jack oats to chew, chew, chew,
You eat toads, for I am a docter, docter, doctor.

And did he measure that ere roof?
Yes, Ben, and ye ought to see Jack's hoof,
For John Weaver crawled on top of main roof;
He was awful scared at Jack's great hoof.
Now, Jerry, did Jack work himself in?
Yes, Ben, he wanted to put on that ere tin,
Ye bet, John, we would have tinned him.
So governor, would need no more tin,
Chorus: Now, see here, chum, etc.
Now, Jack, you are sore on your hoof,
For Jerry tells you can't come on my roof,
Or Ben will knock the bottom of them hoofs,
That ye Jack can't put on any more roofs.
How is governor? Oh, he's got a new dress!
Where's the doctor? He is putting this to press.
You Jack, open your mouth and flop your ears,
For the doctor, Ben Goodman, can fight it out here.
Chorus: Now see here, chum, etc.

—I wish through your paper to thank Mr. A. J. Ralston and all the kind friends who have been so generous to me. I expect now to be well clothed for some time. W. F. Matthews.

—August Stutz has done away with all manner of games in his saloon. If other dealers in spirits would do likewise there would be little use for grand juries and a lean take for prosecuting attorneys.

—Charley Smith has put in his bond and is now acknowledged as the marshal of Auburn, DeKalb county, state of Indiana, etc. A little Rip Van Winkle snooze wouldn't hurt our darling Charley.

—We are indebted to the Ligonier school board for a finely illuminated programme of the commencement exercises of the school at that place. Prof. Luke is making the school there, one of the finest in the state.

—Mrs Alex Kinmont returned from Florida Saturday. She has had enough of the sunny south, where nothing can be grown but oranges, and where hogs have such attenuated snouts, that they can drink out of a jug.

—We listened to the sermon for the consideration of young men delivered by Rev. Daniels last Sabbath evening. It was paragraphed in fine style and should be heeded not only by young people but the old as well.

—S. G. Flint, of Newville, is in town serving on the jury. He has had the misfortune to have his shoulder dislocated by falling out of a wagon. But even that may be a sort of consolation when a man has to sit on a jury.

—The postoffice officials have started a new depot in the large room now occupied by this "government stamp" and have filled things up nicely. It may fill a "long felt want" and our wish for the gentlemen is success.

—The ladies of the Presbyterian church will give a strawberry and ice cream festival at Ensley's Hall on next Friday evening. Literary exercises and music will be furnished for the occasion, 25 cents pays the bill. Come everybody and have a good time.

—F. M. Leader associate editor of the Austin Daily Dispatch, who is visiting friends in Garrett, called on us last week, in company with W. M. McCarty, of the latter place. Mr. Leader is greatly pleased with Texas and its future prospects, and both are pleasant gentlemen.

—We are sorry to learn by a recent letter from our friend Leander Buchanan of Corunna, that his daughter, Vienna is lying quite ill of a most painful and strange disease known to physicians by the technical name of "necrosis." The afflicted family have our sincere sympathies.

—Mr. McNagny, of Columbia City, will go to Dakota soon, to make that growing country his future home. Mrs. M. has been here for a short time past, to spend a few days with her sister, Mrs. Theo. Reed, previous to Mrs. Reed's removal to her new home at Brainerd, Minn.

—Obe Cool has erected a large water tank in rear of his carriage works which will be used to furnish water for the street sprinkler. The engine which does the pumping wil also run machinery connected with the carriage factory, where different kinds of buz-saw work will be turned out—fingers not burned out.

—A recent letter from Charles Jackman, now attending the Normal school at Danville, Indiana, speaks highly of the school there, and of his own future prospects. His father, Wesley Jackman, has located there for the present in order to give his children the benefit of attending the normal school.

—It is not very often that we give "comps," to exchanges, but it certainly is our duty to acknowledge the Wabash Courier (our name sake) as the best local paper and political paper in northern Indiana. We hope Lee will not take this as a left-handed compliment as our pencil does its own work in accordance with our sentiments.

—We had a pleasant call from Charles E. McDonald, of the Columbia City Herald, last Saturday. He is a son, of Col. I. B. McDonald, a staunch democrat, and as pleasant a gentleman, as the press of Indiana numbers among its members. Of course he favors the nomination of his father for congress, but he will be no kicker in any event. His talk has the correct ring.

—This week Hagne & Rant bow to the citizens of the county through the colums of the Courier. We made a brief examination of their stock and cannot give them too much praise in their selections and general style. Both being practical workmen they control considerable advantage over most dealers, and being square, upright gentlemen they are pushing forward rapidly in the business.

—Farmers bring in the bones soon as I want to ship by the 15th of June,

S. U. Tarney.

—For Hansfield crackers go to A. J. Ralston's.

Obituary.

Alexander M. Canon was born in Fayette county, Pa., January 9th, 1809, died at his residence in Auburn, Ind., May 15th, 1882, aged seventy-three years, four months and six days.

From his home in Pennsylvania he removed to Richland county, Ohio, where, on August 6th, 1835, he was united in marriage to Elizabeth Littler, his now bereaved widow. This union was blessed with eleven children, four of whom have preceded the father to the silent city of the dead. On June 8th, 1851, Mr. Canon united with the Evangelical Lutheran church at his home in Ohio. In 1862, soon after coming to Auburn, he united with the Methodist Episcopal church, of which he remained a worthy member until death.

For about twenty years he had lived in this community. As a citizen, he was dutiful; as a husband, affectionate and provident; as a father, kind and exemplary; as a Christian, devout and consistent. During his illness he was a great sufferer, but he endured all without complaint. The Scriptures, of which he had been a devout student, and which he quoted much, and the Savior whom they present, were the source of his comfort and victory in the hours of death. He repeatedly declared his preparations for death and his perfect willingness to depart.

"As gently shuts the eye of day;
As dies a wave along the shore;
Did he sink away from the scenes of earth
To begin a life in heaven?

Its Settled.

Guiteau has nothing farther to hope from the court in banc, as that body has passed upon his case and rendered a decison sustaining the action of the court below. President Arthur is now the only living man who can legally save Julius from dancing between heaven and earth on June 30th, 1882. But what has that got to do with the enormous stock of boots and shoes, both fine and coarse, at Austin & Co's. Simply nothing. That lively Austin don't care for Guiteau nor his crazy sister-in-law, but puts his whole time and ambition in the interests of the men, women and children of DeKalb county. His aim is to sell them boots and shoes cheaper than they can "go barefooted" and when his ending comes he can stand before Gabriel with a smile. Everybody is welcome at the Boot up-side Down.

Select School.

I will open a select school in the lower room of the ward school building, commencing on the 12 day of June 1882, to continue eight weeks. Would solicit the patronage of all. Terms will be 75 cents per month in advance.

Miss Lucy M. Hatch.

—That fellow that signed his name as Jack in last weeks, and may also in to days paper, having reference to tinning or myself personally permit me to say that I always have considered it a disgrace to associate or correspond with that kind of stock, and I have never known him yet to tell the truth until he submitted and signed himself as Jack, which means Jackass and a mighty big one at that. I, say, governor, give ye dat ere Jack by my order a pint of neats foot oil for a moral physic or he will bust. B. G.

—G. C. Ralston, esq, one of the substantial and well-to-do citizens of our burg, has pulled out his wallet and purchased a ticket for Montana. While we know that he has a number of friends and relatives who regret his departure, there is at the same time a warm feeling for his future fortune wrapped up in the composing rooms of the Courier. We would like to have had him remained long enough to touch off a "canon fire-cracker" for the benefit of treasuer Miller, it being about the time of year for the occasion. Coop, here is our of friendship and may you return a Vanderbilt No. 2.

—Miss Laura Fair, whom our young people will remember well, has met with the final ending of giddy marriages. We hear that her husband has jumped the country line and left her a "widow by the sea." This was one of the "jines" that was made on sight and the result of such only has to be waited for a short time to make things mournful. We migh occupy the entire paper in dictating to young ladies, but nature teaches us that we might just as well waste our "wind" talking to an underhill lamp-post as to advise or instruct the average girl of to-day. We have a warm feeling in Laura's behalf and hope that the lesson now taught in experience will be a grand "pointer" for her in the future.

Renew Your Lease.

There are times in every one's life when energy fails and a miserable feeling comes over them, mistaken for laziness. Danger lurks in these symtoms, as they arise from diseased organs. Parker's Ginger Tonic will restore perfect activity to the stomach, liver and kidneys, purify the blood, and renew your lease of health and comfort.—Advocate. 20-4t.

—The best tobacco and cigars at Mac & Mike's.

—Green coffee from 10 to 18 cents at A. J. Ralstons.

—Lots for sale: On North Van Buren street. For terms, apply to Miss Maggie Sibert, Spencerville Indiana.

Old Settlers' Committee.

The committee of arrangements, consisting of Dr. Ford, E. D. Hartman, T. D. Gross, J. W. Baxter, O. C. Clark, J. A. Barnes, C. P. Houser, L. J. Miller and J. E. Rose are requested to meet at the secretary's office at 2 o'clock p. m. Saturday May 27. A prompt and full attendance is desired. By order of the chairman. W. H. Dills Secy.

Society Belles.

On account of its remarkably delicate and lasting fragrance society belles are loud in the praises of Floreston Cologne. 20-4t.

—See those hose at 5c, 10c, and 12c a pair at Mac & Mike's before you buy.

—We are closing out our stock of carpets. Come and secure a bargain.
20-3w. S. & B.

MR. GLADSTONE has introduced his new bill for the relief of the tenant farmers of Ireland. The tenants will be obliged to prove to the Land Commission that they are not able to pay their arrears of rent. The bill only deals with two years' arrears and requires the tenant to pay one years' arrears, from November, 1880, to November, 1881. When that is paid, the whole remaining arrears will be canceled. The Government will contribute the remaining rent from the residue of the Irish Church surplus fund, the estimated amount of which is £1,500,000.

A SPECIAL dispatch from Cumberland, Mayland, says that "Frank Brady, an important witness in the Morey letter case, has gone to New York, and will, it is understood, testify there to what he knows about the connection of certain Cumberland politicians with the famous letter. Brady is said to be the man who went before W. M. Price and offered to swear to affidavits that he was Robert Lindsey. Next day Brady backed out and refused to swear before a magistrate, when James O'Brien, of Washington, was induced to swear to a similar affidavit, which was forwarded to Barnum the day before the election. Davenport has obtained from W. H. Barnum the original affidavit of the fictitious Robert Lindsey, in the handwriting of Price; also, Price's receipts for money received from Barnum, and other original papers.

Parnell is accused of injuring the cause of Irish freedom.

The Horse on the Prairie.

R. J. Burdette, in Burlington Hawkeye.

A young farmer came galloping over the prairie to us while we trotted along. Now, if you have never seen the horse on the prairies, you have never seen him at all. He belongs there. Until you see him in his home, you can never realize how tame a picture he makes curveting in the streets of a city, or prancing through the thronged drives of a park. But out here—the day is full of sunshine, the air of December is bracing and pure, and on these plains it is exhilarating as champagne. As far out on the pale brown prairie as you can distinguish objects you can see the moving speck on the horizon, and watch it coming into clearer view as you see a ship sail in sight at sea. The figure of the man and horse seem one; the motion of the easy gallop is regular as music, rising and falling in perfect cadence. As they come nearer, the figure of the horse, perfect in outline and graceful in every movement, the long tossing mane, the easy seat of the rider, riding with straight knees and long stirrups, and by-and-by the muffled flutter, rather than clatter, of the hoofs on the turf, and back of and around all this the back-ground of a far-reaching prairie dimpling in all shades of brown, and the setting of a sky blue as turquoise, with the wide, wild sense of perfect freedom, a universe in sight, makes a picture that you never want to forget, and could not forget if you would. We all wanted to shout as the rider galloped up, and, with a cheery "Hello" to our driver, went swinging on. I have seen beautiful saddle horses in Fairmont park, and have watched riders in Central park pounding their saddles with the trip-hammer ease of the English riding-school; I have seen the "flyers" and their wonderful jockeys, throwing the miles away like so many seconds, in Jerome; I have seen armies of cavalry sweep across the battle-field, while the ground fairly rocked and trembled under their charging feet; I have watched, thrilled with excitement, a six-gun battery go wheeling and thundering into position in the very face of a charging column at a time when minutes meant hours—but I think I never saw the horse when he seemed so much a part of the landscape; when all the freedom and beauty of earth and air and sky seemed to be made to harmonize with him, his strength and beauty and grace, until I watched him sweeping over the great sky-encircled prairies of the west.

The other day a book agent took refuge under a hay mow during a severe thunder storm. The lightning played round his hiding place for half an hour and then struck a church a hundred paces off and set it on fire. This shows beyond a doubt that natural forces are blind, and that there is very little intelligence in the operations of nature.

Denver Tribune Primer: Is this a Corner Lot? No, it is a Towel. It has Been serving an Apprenticeship in a Printing Office for the Past four Years. The horses are dragging it away. A man will Take an Ax and Break the Towel into Pieces and Boil it for Soap Grease. Then he will boil the Towel for Tripe. If you Find a Piece of Tripe with a Monogram in one Corner you may Know Its the Towel.

An Old Swindle Revived.

The Indianapolis Times, describes an old swindle which has been revived and has been successfully worked in several parts of the State as follows:

"A new swindle, or an old one revived, has turned up among the farmers. It is worked by two men, who go to a County Auditor's office, look over the records of estray animals, get their points and select their game. One will go to a farmer who has taken up stray animals, examine them and offer to buy, but take good care not to bring the trade to a focus. His object is to get a correct description of the animals which he delivers to his partner, who at once goes and claims the animals as owner. He gives a minute description of the animals, which satisfies the farmer, and the estrays are surrendered after payment of expenses for taking up and keeping them. The farmer learns of his mistake when the real owner comes and he is called upon to pay for the estray.

And Will Remain So.

The patient pursuance of a high ideal is nature's crucial test; desperately to miss it may be the final discipline of character.

FROM WASHINGTON.

It is probable that ex-Senator Buckalew will be nominated for Governor by the Pennsylvania Democrats.

It is said the bill creating the Department of Agriculture will have a hard time in the Senate. Few Representatives felt willing to vote against it, as they are too near the farmers; but the Senators will not be afraid to criticise the bill, which many claim is purely in the interest of Commissioner Losing. It is believed the bill will finally pass, but probably much amended.

Mr. Crapo hopes to get up his bill for the extension of bank charters as soon as the Geneva Award bill is out of the way, which will be to-day or to-morrow.

The President is being pestered for the position of Tariff Commissioner. He will be in no hurry to make these very important appointments.

The condition of Congressman Black, of Georgia, continues serious. His illness seems to have taken the form of partial paralysis. He is unable to move himself in bed, or even to feed himself. His mind continues bright, and he reads books and newspapers placed on a little rack before him, and turned as he requires.

Senator Brown, of Georgia, is expected back soon. His health has improved.

Congressman Stockslager, of Indiana, has introduced a bill in the House, which, should the project which it suggests be carried successfully into operation, seems likely to be an initial step to a great improvement of the low water navigation of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers. His bill provides for the removal or cutting through of the "bars" or shoals of those rivers during the low water season, and appropriates $50,000 to try the experiment across some designated shoal in the Ohio river, between Cincinnati and Louisville.

The President has appointed Major Garret J. Lydecker, at present on duty in Chicago, as the engineer in charge of the harbor improvements, to be a Commissioner of the Distaict of Columbia, in place of the late Major Twining.

The House Committee on Elections, has voted, 9 to 2, to seat W. M. Lowe, contestant of the seat of Joseph Wheeler, from the Eighth Alabama District. Lowe is a Greenbacker.

The Fish Commission to-day is shipping 4,000,000 of young shad and herring to various points in the South. There is a great demand for these fish from all sections. The commission will distribute this season about 75,000,000 shad and 250,000,000 herring. The fish production in the Potomac has quadrupled under the Commission.

The President has expressed a desire to the War and Interior Departments that the Indians be very firmly dealt with, and the annual uprisings ended.

Mrs. Mason starts home much encouraged at the result of her interview with the President. Her receipts of donations amount to about $3,500. A petition of 3,000 employes of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad and others, was presented to the President to-day for the pardon of Mason.

Secretary Frelinghuysen's course in continuing the Spanish Claims Commission is keenly criticised. Blaine refused to permit it to consider the remaining claims, because of the decision of Count Lewenhaupt, in the Buz[illegible] case, that the commission had power to ignore the certificates of naturalization held by claimants, and thus nullify the action of United States courts. Now Frelinghuysen refuses to let the commission die a natural death, but continues its existence eight months, and turns over the remaining cases to it.

The Ohio brewers visited the jail to see Guiteau to-day, and saw him in his cell. He was very mad because the Warden did not permit him to hold a reception, and sell his photographs and autographs. He usually objects to seeing Ohio people, seeming to have an aversion for them.

The report that General Chalmers will be an independent candidate in the Second Mississippi District is confirmed. Mr. Manning, Democrat, who now represents the district, says that if the Independents, Greenbackers and Republicans unite, they can elect Mr. Chalmers. He went away quite mad, because he thought the Democrats did not do their duty by him in his case against Lynch, and seems to have "gone back" on the party.

Ben Hill is very low at Eureka Springs. His daughter has gone to join him.

The bill appropriating $25,000 to construct a road at Mound City to the National Cemetery has passed the House.

The pension bill agreed upon in the Appropriations Committee, appropriates $100,000,000.

The Senate Finance Committee took action on the Bonded Spirits bill by referring it to Messrs. Merrill and Bayard, as a sub-committee to prepare a substitute which will not permit the indefinite retention of spirits in bond. It will provide for a maximum bonded period of about five years. The substitute will also provide that bonds shall be given for the full amount of the tax, and will extend the proposed benefits to spirits made from proof, such as apple or grape brandies.

Senator Sherman has received the following:

My Dear Sir! I have received your note with inclosed notice of pension granted me, for my husband's sake. I am truly mindful of the generous kindness shown the family of General Garfield not only by friends, but by the national legislature, and may I ask that you make acknowlegement of this in whatever way and by whatever expression of my gratitude seems to you appropriate.

With sentiments of high regard, very truly yours,

LUCRETIA R. GARFIELD.

The Senate Select Committee on Woman Suffrage, by a vote of 3 to 2, agreed to recommend to the Senate for adoption, Senator Lapham's joint resolution proposing the following amendment to the constitution:

Article XVI. Section 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex.

Section 2. Congress shall have power by appropriate legislation to enforce the provisions of this article.

The vote was: Ayes—Lapham, Blair and Jackson—3; noes—George and Fair—2; absent, Anthony and Ferry.

The proposed changes in the bill extending the bonded period of whisky will probably be accepted by the Senate and the bill sent back to the House. It is probable quite a wrangle will occur over it there, as many members will consider it a square blow between the eyes from the Senate.

It is probable, however, by that time the talk of fraud will be found unfounded, which will greatly modify the present feelings on the subject.

J. Q. Smith, Republican contestant of the seat of Shelly, of Alabama, died late last night of pneumonia. It is said he had a good case, and it is probable the Republicans will declare the seat vacant, and order a new election.

The United States Consul at Cairo, Egypt, has arrived here. He says he doesn't think the situation there as grave as reported, but believes it will probably affect the finances.

Doctor Franklin Stewart, of Philadelphia, says: "Shipherd's claim in Peru is just one dollar. Stewart and others owned a claim, and Shipherd got his share in his hands with an agreement that he would get the others and organize a company. He never got the others; never returned his; never paid but one dollar; but organized a company, elected himself President, and that is the size of the wonderful Peruvian Company."

It is stated on good authority that the President has determined to appoint ex-Secretary Kirkwood a member of the Tariff Commission.

It is pretty well understood that the decision of the court in banc will be against Guiteau, and that he must hang. The assassin, however, professes great hope, and says that if the court refuses a new trial the President will come to the rescue.

It is learned positively that the Supreme Court of the District will, on Monday next, render a unanimous decision affirming the decision of the court below.

S. P. Rounds, the Government Printer, has arrived with his family from Chicago.

Mr. Defrees is very low. His recovery is considered impossible.

Bishop Miles, of the colored Methodist Church, preached yesterday in the Southern Methodist Church here. This is the church attended by most of the leading Southern Congressmen.

The State Department has advices from Brazil proposing the removal of 10 per cent. export tax on coffee to the United States.

Governor Colquitt, of Georgia, will probably succeed Senator Hill, who, it is feared, will not be seen in Washington again.

Judge Wylie has directed the Grand Jury to receive as evidence certain reports submitted by Woodard, the special agent in the star-route cases, and his statements concerning them.

The vote in the House to-day shows a determined opposition on the part of the Democrats to the proposition to strengthen the army. The bill up was to place the militia of all the States in the national organization, giving the President power to appoint officers.

The President is experiencing great difficulty in selecting the Tariff Commission. The majority will be moderate protectionists, and probably ex-Secretary Kirkwood will be Chairman.

Mr. Teller's course relating to the Indians is meeting with general approval, and it is believed that life in the Indian country will be rendered more nearly safe under his course than ever before.

It is said that Blaine is supporting Senator Mitchell in his revolt against the Stalwarts in Pennsylvania, and that he will be also heard from in the canvass in Ohio, New York and many other States, making things lively for the Stalwarts generally.

The House passed a bill to-day of great importance to farming communities in the West. The bill was introduced by Mr. Burrows, of Michigan, to protect persons who have innocently purchased patented articles. Mr. Burrows explained that parties of rascals have a way of travelling through the rural districts selling patented articles, after which the owner of the patent follows, threatening buyers with suits. The bill provides that no action for damages or proceeding in equity shall be sustained, nor shall a party be held liable under Section 4,919 or 4,921, Revised Statutes, for the use of any patented article or device, unless it shall appear on trial that the defendant in such action or proceeding purchased said article for a valuable consideration in open market.

There is a rumor that Queen Victoria has been assassinated, but the State Department here has received nothing in confirmation of the report.

The Guiteau defense is preparing to ask the Supreme Court for a writ of habeas corpus for Guiteau, on the grounds that the District Court has no jurisdiction, in case the decision is against them, as it now seems it will be. Guiteau is much depressed by the report that the decision of the court is against him. Guiteau's publishers say that not over 100 copies of his book have been sold.

The Postmaster General is preparing a schedule for fast mails, under the new appropriation. The plan is to have one fast train from New York to San Francisco, and another from Boston to New Orleans.

"Tom" Ochiltree announces himself as an independent candidate for Congress in the Galveston District, Texas.

J. Hale Sypher will probably be appointed on the Tariff Commission as a representative of the Sugar interests.

The reports from South Carolina show an excellent condition of the crops. Labor is plentiful, in spite of the alarm some months ago regarding the movement of laborers West.

Attorney General Brewster was in court this morning when the Star Route cases came up. The Deputy Marshal reported that he had been unable to arrest John W. Dorsey, and had no information of his whereabouts.

Judge Wylie suggested that perhaps Dorsey might be in court and directed that his name be called.

As the crier called his name, Mr. Carpenter rose, and, to the surprise of the spectators, said that John W. Dorsey was in court, and had been in the city ten days. He added that it had been Dorsey's intention from the first to attend when wanted. Mr. Dorsey was then arraigned, and pleaded not guilty.

Mr. Merrick said the Government was ready to proceed, but stated that the Grand Jury was now considering Berdell's case, and if Berdell was not tried with the other defendants it would necessitate another trial of his case.

The hearing was then adjourned until the 25th instant, Judge Wylie reminding the Marshal that he was responsible for the person of Dorsey until bail was furnished.

Ex-Postmaster General James was before the Grand Jury to-day in connection with the Star Route cases.

The events transpiring in the trial of the Star Route cases this morning cause a good deal of comment here, and they are looked upon as very unfortunate for the Government, to say the least. That numbers of Government officials should have been scouring the country everywhere for Dorsey, and then come into court and say he couldn't be found, and that he should then immediately present himself and demand trial, turns the Government methods into ridicule. It is remarked here that every step in the cases thus far has been a comparitive failure, and many fear the result will be very unsatisfactory.

The rumor afloat here this afternoon that the Queen of England has been assassinated, creates much excitement, and inquiries are heard in every direction as to the truth or falsity of the report. There is much feeling manifested, and the kind words of the Queen when our national calamity was upon us are spoken of in earnest terms.

Shipherd appeared before the Foreign Relations Committee this morning with a hand bag, said to contain numerous documents, and a prepared statement, covering fifty pages or more, and was addressed by the Chairman as follows:

The Committee on Foreign Affairs is directed by the House to demand from you copies of all correspondence between yourself and any persons whomsoever, and all papers and other evidences in your possession tending to show what you did or attempted to do, to enforce the claim of the Peruvian Company, or induce the United States to enforce this claim against Peru. Are you now prepared to furnish the documents here called for?

Shipherd—I am not.

Chairman—Are you prepared to furnish, and will you furnish, all papers and other evidences in your possesion, tending to show what you did or attempted to do to enforce the claim of the Peruvian Company, or to induce the United States to enforce this claim against Peru?

Shipherd—I will not. I positively decline to produce the papers and evidence called for.

The committee went into executive session. After about ten minutes, the doors reopened and it was learned that the committee had agreed to inform the Sergeant-at-Arms that it had no further need for the attendance of Shipherd, and he might be discharged until further notification. No time was fixed for any future meeting of the committee in regard to the Chilian-Peruvian matter.

The Elections Committee will report soon in the case of Wetherspoon, the colored contestant for the seat of Davidson from Florida, asking permission for him to withdraw the case and to send the committee to Florida to investigate.

Blaine says that the supposition that he will become a candidate for the House from Maine is unfounded. He has no such intention. It is believed, however, that he would not refuse if demanded by the people.

PRINCIPALLY PERSONAL.

Maggie Mitchell has made $40,000 during the season.

INVESTIGATIONS AS TO THE AGES OF THE PATRIARCHS.

[Popular Science.]

On a full examination of the question of patriarchal longevity, the disparity of their ages with those of latter times disappears. A very slight error in the translation of the Hebrew numbers was the cause of all this disparity. The age of the antediluvians was not to exceed 120 years. Genesis vi, 3: "And the Lord said: My spirit shall not always strive with man, for that he is also flesh, yet his days shall be one hundred and twenty." This was the regular good old age of man, with special variations, both before and for some time after the days of Abraham.

In reading concrete numbers the Hebrews gave the large numbers first, thus: Ninety and seven for 97, forty and seven for 47. The reversal of this rule in the translation of Genesis v., 3-5, as an illustration, will show the error in all similar cases. "Adam lived 130 years and begat a son," etc. This is correct, according to the rule. Seth was born when Adam was 130 years old and was his last child. But if the rule were not reversed as it is in the authorized version, it would read thus: Adam lived 3,000 years and begat a son! This shocked the conciousness of the christian translator, and he was driven to the true rule of the Hebrew uses in case of concrete numerals.

In the fifth verse we have the force of the violated rule, thus: "And all the days that Adam lived were 930 years, and he died!" A. V. The true reading of the rule would be," and all the days of Adam, which he lived were a hundred years and thirty and nine years, and he died," making the entire age of Adam 139 years instead of 930 years.

It will be seen on examination that concrete numeral adjectives in Hebrew, as in other languages, agree in number with their nouns. In the case cited in the A. V. the nine is made to agree with hundred in the singular, and not with years in the plural. The difference is seen at a glance, for the difference between "nine years" and "nine hundred years" is too great to be overlooked in any careful translation of a sacred book. The translation assumed that nine here agreed with the hundred, when it had no such agreement; hundred, in the text, is itself a concrete number and separately agrees with years, meaning a hundred of years; at the date of this waiting, "nine hundred," or any number of hundreds above one, without repetition or circumlocution. There were none of the masoretic points in use. In the case of the age of Terah, the father of Abraham, the translators have made the attempt to make two hundred out of one hundred in the word mathim, used in the plural as it might be to agree with years, thus making Terah 205 instead of 105 years old at his death; holding the theory that the word mae (or one hundred) would in the plural, mathim, make twenty. This is contrary to all rules. The Hebrews could, by pluralising a number less than ten, add tenfold to the unit, thus: hamesh, five; hamushim, fifty. This rule applied in the case of Terah would make him ten times 105 years old, or 1,050 years old. In the case of Terah the historic record conclusively contradicts the translation, and hence demonstrates the rule that pluralizing one hundred does not, in the Hebrew tongue, make two hundred, while as to the numerals between two and ten, the rule might apply thus: Shelosh, three; Sheloshim, thirty, and in like manner to ten. With these corrections, referring to the ages of the patriarchs before the Noachin deluge, the article of M. de Solaville would show a wonderful uniformity in the age of man since the dawn of history.

From Adam to the flood the ages would read as in the table below, subject to a few uncertainties in the numbers below one hundred, as the numerals are sometimes pluralized for purposes of agreement when they were not increased tenfold. The cases are not always certain; the table to the flood is substantially true. The table is added, giving the ages of each at the time of his death:

1. Adam, 139 years, and not 930 years.
2. Seth, 121 years, and not 910 years.
3. Enos, 1 years, and not 835 years.
4. Cain, 119 years, and not 910 years.
5. Mahalaleel, 123 years, and not 895 years.
6. Jared, 117 years, and not 962 years.
7. Enoch, 114 years, and not 365 years.
8. Methuselah, 124 years and not 966 years.
9. Lamech, 117 years, and not 777 years.
10. Noah, 158 years, and not 950 years. Average, 120 plus years.

How to Advertise.

A Hartford, Conn., man was denouncing newspaper advertising to a crowd of listeners.

"Last week," said he, "I had an umbrella stolen from the vestibule of the church. It was a gift, and, valuing it very highly, I spent double the worth in advertising, but I have not recovered it."

"How did you word the advertisement?" asked a merchant.

"Here it is," said the man, producing a slip cut from a newspaper.

The merchant took it and read:

"Lost from the vestibule of the church, last Sunday evening, a black silk umbrella. The gentleman who took it will be handsomely rewarded by leaving it at No. —San Fernando street."

"Now," said the merchant, "I am a liberal advertiser, and have always found it paid me well. A great deal depends upon the manner in which an advertisement is put. Let us try for your umbrella again, and if you do not then acknowledge that advertising pays, I will purchase you a new one."

The merchant then took a slip of paper from his pocket and wrote:

"If the man who was seen to take an umbrella from the vestibule of the— church, last Sunday, does not wish to get into trouble, and have a stain cast on the Christian character which he values so highly, he will return it at once to No.—San Fernando street. He is well known."

This duly appeared in the paper, and the following morning the man was astonished when he opened the front door of his residence. On the porch lay at least a dozen umbrellas, of all shades and sizes, that had been thrown in from the sidewalk, while the front yard was literally paved with umbrellas. Many of them had notes attached to them, saying that they had been taken by mistake, and begging the loser to keep the little affair quiet.

The Devil come up to Cool Off.

"One evening, above Lewisberg, on the Arkansas," said Capt. Paul Boyton, "I was on the lookout for some place where I could stop, or for some person from whom I could obtain information, when, near the bank of the river, I discovered smoke issuing from the chimney of a small cabin. I hauled to and blew my bugle. For some time the smoke issuing from the chimney was the only sign of life. Finally a man, an easy kind of individual, came walking down leisurely, regarding me curiously.

"How far is it to Lewisburg?" I asked.

"It is a putty good distance."

"But how far do you call it?"

"I don't call it."

"Confound it, man, is it two, three or four thousand miles?"

"I reckon it's one of the numbers."

"Then I realized that I had met a kinsman of the Arkansas Traveler. My irritation, which had at first been exhibited, subsided, and desiring to get as much information as possible, I asked, pointing to a bar:

"Which side of the channel shall I take?"

"Either side you please!"

"Which do you consider the better?"

"I am not attendin' to other people's business."

"Which side do the steamboats take?"

"It's owin' to what Captain is aboard."

"Well, bringing the thing down to a point, how long will it take me to get to Lewisburg?"

"It's owin' ter how fast you travel."

"My friend, I think you are the biggest fool in Arkansas."

"An', stranger, I think you are the divil! come up to cool off. Go home."

THE ÆTNA IS THE SAFEST, STRONGEST AND BEST POWDER IN THE WORLD FOR REMOVING STUMPS AND STONES!

It is unnecessary to tell a farmer his land is more valuable without the stump than with them. He knows that now. What he wants to know is the Best Quickest and Cheapest method of removing them, and that question we answer by saying, BLAST THEM OUT WITH ÆTNA POWDER. Any stump large or small, green or decayed, can be thrown entirely out of the ground and broken into pieces small enough to handle.

If you have any stumps, send us your address and we will send you a man to do your work, or will sell you the powder and tools so you can do it yourself. Don't delay, but attend to it at once.

The Uses of Paper.

HOW PAPER CAR WHEELS ARE MADE—SOME INTERESTING FACTS.

Paper car wheels are composed entirely of paper rings pressed together under a weight of six tons, and then fastened by means of bolts and steel tire put on them, when they are ready for use. Laid loosely, the rings stack as high as the shoulders of an ordinary man. Under treatment, they sink to the thickness required. If the tire should wear or fall off the wheel, or the train run from the track, there would be no danger of their breaking, as they are very flexible, and would spring. A paper ball can be rendered so solid that nothing but a diamond tool can cause an indentation in it. At the mill is a square block of compressed paper fastened on a turning lathe, and so hard that, if a fine steel chisel is held against it when moving, instead of cutting the paper it will break the chisel into a hundred pieces. The strength is astonishing. You can take a £5 note of the bank of England, twist it into a rope, suspend 339 pounds upon one end of it, and not injure it in the slightest degree. Bath tubs and pots are formed by compressing paper made out of linen fibers and annealed—that is, painted over with a composition which becomes a part thereof, and is fireproof. The tubs last indefinitely, never leak, and, put into the fire, will not burn up. You can beat on them with a hammer and not injure them. Plates compressed and annealed are very durable. You can not only wash them, but drop them upon the floor and stand upon them. The fork can be used for any practical purpose, and the knife can always be kept sharp. Paper can be substituted for wood, converted into picture frames and colored like walnut, cherry and the like. Bedsteads are fashioned the same as car wheels, only of long stripe instead of rings. They are very beautiful and lasting. Cooking or heating stoves are also annealed, and it is impossible to burn them out. They are less costly than iron. A house can be literally constructed of, and furnished with every convenience, in paper. The printing press, type and all the fixtures of the office could be concocted of this material, and more cheaply than of the ordinary kind. A complete steam engine can be thus manufactured and do all required duty. Clothes and shoes will come in the future. Twenty-nine hours are needed to transfer linen fiber into a car wheel.

Solid card-like paper was made as early as the fifth century, but it is stated on the authority of the Arabian historians, and largely conceded, that linen paper did not come into use until 1270, or, at most, but a short time before. The cotton card or paper known previously was of a thick, coarse, woolly texture, brittle and inferior.

July Encampment Matters.

The Military Encampment to be held at Indianapolis the first week in July is not a local affair. It is a gathering in which the whole state is interested, beyond the mere passing interest of a holiday parade. The very proposition of the idea of its holding, had origin in a desire to encourage and advance the interest of the militia organizations throughout the state, and inspire such a spirit of emulation as shall result in showing the law-makers that a respectable recognition of the national reserve police force is entirely worth their while and attention, until Indiana in this regard shall rank equal with her sister states. This Encampment is peculiarly a state affair, from the fact that upwards of seventeen companies of Indiana militia will be present, several of which will enter the lists with the companies from abroad to contend for the palm of victory and the consequent cash, as the reward of excellence in the execution of military maneuvers. Should one of these companies, no matter where the location of its armory, be so fortunate as to win either first or second place, it will be a subject in which every Indianian will have a right to feel a just pride. Upon that week the capital will welcome the world at large, not as the corporation of Indianapolis, but as the representative city of Hoosierdom, and the host of the state's guests.

Springfield Spirit-Writing.

PECULIAR POWERS AND REMARKABLE HIEROGLYPHICS.

A lady on South Yellow Spring street, in this city, is developing alleged spiritualistic powers in a remarkable degree, especially in spirit-writing. Your correspondent was favored with an interview with the lady—who, by the way, is extremely intelligent and a good talker—in which he was shown several slates and books full of writing dictated through the lady. The writing appears to be a system of hieroglyphics, with here and there a French word, and must be read by being reflected into a looking-glass so as to make it read in the right direction. Some of the writing is now being translated by two learned pupils of Wittenberg college, and a book of it has been sent to a distinguished Congregational minister in Philadelphia, who is translating it. He states that it is the language spoken by the French of 200 years ago, and has several interesting stories relating to the siege of Troy in it. This lady herself is a member of the Congregational church and discovered her spiritualistic powers by chance about two years ago. She states that her power is continually on the increase, and that things in the spirit world are gradually becoming more distinct. When the instinct to write comes to her, she says some power seems to seize her hand and dictate the words. At such times she can hardly see, and is entirely unconscious of the writing. She says she forsaw the death of Garfield a year before it happened, and often hears the spirits talk confusedly of Guiteau. She is also able to take spirit photographs by placing her hand on a sensative plate while in a spiritualistic cabinet.—[Springfield Cor. Times-Star.

* * *

Some persons are finding fault with Mr. John Sherman's incidental expense account against the United States government while he was secretary of the treasury. Some persons are always finding fault. To show how little reason there is for all this complaining, we select at random a few items from Mr. Sherman's expense book. It is found, first, that the government is charged $3,50 "for cleaning a driver's coat." If it happened that the driver's coat was considerably soiled—and that is no doubt just what did happen—$3 50 will be regarded by all good business men as bed-rock figures. There is really no ground for complaint here. The next item is 318 pounds of camphor, which foots up $105 10. Financiers know what Mr. Sherman did with the camphor. He used it to keep moths out of the bank notes. It is simply out of the question to run a United States treasury without camphor. The third item $750 for three photographs of the electoral commission. We have no doubt some person will say Mr. Sherman might have got along with two photographs of the electoral commission. Here and there may be found a creature who will say he might have got along with one. They forget that had there been no electoral commission there wold have been no Mr. Sherman in the treasury. Three gross of buttons are set down at $27, and "dye for same $35." Do we hear any objections to United States government dyeing its buttons? We do not, and it is well. This government can dye its buttons pea-green or a sky-blue and it is nobody's business, that we are aware of. Suppose the dye does cost more than the buttons? But we have no patience to discuss this matter. If there is any nation of people who desire to buy their buttons already dyed we presume it is their privilege to do so. American people come down stairs differently. We will pass over $34 25 for palm-leaf fans and $30 17 for Day & Martin's blacking, and go on to the item of 248 dozen monogram towels, aggregating $1,384,50 for monogram towels is pretty steep. They may even quibble about the monogram, and since there was a monogram, want to know whether it was U. S. A. or J. S. Two dozen cuspadors, decorated, cost $42; four and a half gallons deodorized alcohol cost $12; one hundred gross assorted toilet soaps cost $1,961,65, and so on and so forth, from fine-tooth combs to empty mackerel kits. Footing up a total of $25,000. And yet people murmur and complain. However, the platform of a man is what that man has done.

Excelsior Springs.

These valuable mineral waters were discovered but little over a year ago; yet they have already taken rank with noted springs which have been advertised and frequented for the last decade.

Where a few months since stood a solitary farm house, there is now found a beautiful little city of 2,000 inhabitants; and the delightful little valley of Fishing River is rapidly becoming known as one of the favorite summer resorts of the west. The medicinal qualities of the water, the charming country which surrounds the springs, the healthfulness of the region, and its accessibility, all contribute to make the place popular and prominent, and at once explain why Excelsior Springs has so suddenly acquired such notoriety. The mineral waters have been thoroughly tested by hundreds of invalids, and have effected many astonishing cures of dyspepsia, rheumatism, neuralgia, scrofula, liver complaints, sore eyes, chronic malaria, many forms of female diseases, diseases of the kidneys and bladder, and various skin diseases. The water is very useful as a tonic, on account of the large quantity of iron contained in it, and becomes especially useful in cases of general debility and nervous prostration.

Excelsior Springs are located in Clay county, Missouri, eight miles from Missouri City, on the main line, and five miles from Vibbard or Lawrence, on the St. Joseph branch of the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific Railway. First-class coaches connected at these stations, with all trains, making the Springs very easy by access and nearer by several hours than any other similar resort. A very handsome pamphlet, containing several views of the scenery, and much valuable information in regard to the Springs, will be sent free to any address by applying to J. E. Jones, Henrie & Fish, or V. B. Flack, D. D., Excelsior Springs [Viginti P. O.] Clay county, Mo., or to H. C. Townsend, G. P. & T. A., St. Louis, Mo.

Origin of the Merino Sheep.

As the ancient Greeks had no cotton nor silk, and very little linen, and as sheep's wool was the principal texture from which their clothes were made, they took peculiar care to cultivate with especial care such breeds of sheep as produce very fine wool. Such breeds were those of the Greek city of Tarentum, situated on the Tarentine gulf. In order to improve the fine quality of the wool still more, the sheep were covered with clothes in cold weather and it was found by experience that exposure to cold made the wool coarser. Thus clothing these sheep from generation to generation resulted in a very delicate breed with exceedingly fine wool, according to the law established by Darwin in regard to selections and adaption to exterior conditions.

This product of Greek industry was transmitted by them to the Romans, whose great agricultural author, Columella, states that his uncle in Spain crosed the fine Tarentine sheep with rams imported from Africa, and obtained a stronger, combining the whiteness of fleece of the father with the fineness of the fleece of the mother, and having obtained such results the race was perpetuated. The absence of other fine textures made these Spanish sheep so valuable that in the beginning of our era they were sold in Rome for $1,000 in gold a head, an enormous price for those times, when money had much more value than now.

When the barbarians invaded Italy these sheep were all exterminated, while the greater portions of the Roman possesson were laid waste. But in the less accessible mountains of Spain the Moors preserved the breed, and it is to them that modern Spain owes the merino sheep, which are the direct descendants of this cross breed of the Greek and African ancestors referred to. It is a valuable inheritance too, which that country owes to the combined Greek, Roman, and Moorish civilization, and of which our California wool-growers also earn the advantages, by the prosperity of this breed of sheep, which was there a few years ago.

This Happened in the Ark.

"Draw near thine ear, I pray thee," said Noah, as he sat smoking his good clay pipe by the fire, after having fed the animals their evening meal and shaken up their bedding. "What would my lord?" replied Mrs. N., drawing near her ear, as commanded. Noah smoked in silence for the space of a minute or two, and then opened his mouth and spake as follows: "I preceive by the indications, mother, that the storm which was central over the Euphrates will move westerly to the Nile Valley on the morrow, with areas of low barometer and northeasterly winds, and showery weather on the Arabian coast. I have been moved, therefore, to jettison a part of our cargo, fearing that our supplies should give out ere the floods shall subside. What animal thinkest thou can best be spared, love?" And Mrs. N. looked out at the window, listened a moment to the pattering drops on the roof, and replied sweetly: "The rain, dear." And at the sound of her voice Noah wept like a child, and the animals wailed in unison, and there was misery unspeakable where all had been so calm and tranquil.—[Boston Transcript.

LONDON, April 28.—Dr. Lamson was hanged at 9 o'clock this morning. He was calm and composed. Only three reporters were present at the hanging. The procession entered the yard of the prison at 8:55, when the prison bell was tolling the death-knell. The chaplain headed the procession. He was followed by two prison officials with their wands. The prisoner, who until the time of starting had been calm and composed, looked awfully pale and dejected, and was very nervous. He was supported by Wardens on either side and was with dificulty able to decend the steps to the yard. He was met by Marwood, the famous executioner, at the foot of the steps.

The prisoner was bareheaded, and the operation of pinioning him seemed [illegible]. He [illegible] without a word, and hardly seemed to appreciate what was going on.

From the steps there was a distance of about sixty yards to traverse to the gallows. Lamson was supported with dificulty from this point to the scaffold. He swayed backward and forward, and stared wildly around him when placed under the noose.

The chaplain who appeared much affected then began reading the burial service. Lamson in the meanwhile was supported by the gaolers. Just before the cap was adjusted he cast down his eyes with a look of extreme despair.

Death was instantaneous. The drop was nine feet. The chaplain remained by the gallows repeating the Lord's prayer. The body remained hanging one hour.

LAMSON'S CRIME

The crime for which Lamson was executed was the murder of his brother-in-law. Dr. Lamson was a man of good presence and social position. He was the son of the popular American pastor at Florence, and had himself served with distinction in the Franco-German and the Russo-Turkish wars. After the last war he married an English lady, and commenced practice at Bournemouth, a health resort not far from London. It appears that on the death of a brother who was at school at Wimbleton, and had for years been a cripple and otherwise a confirmed invalid, Dr. Lamson's wife would become entitled to a sum of about $20,000.

This, according to English law, would, in the absence of special settlements, belong equally to the husband and to the wife. It was the theory of the prosecution that Dr. Lamson in order to obtain this money, deliberately poisoned his brother-in-law. It was shown in the evidence that he called on him at school, ostensibly to say good-bye, prior to his departure for Paris. While at the table he offered him a capsule filled apparently with white sugar, giving one at the same time to the head master and taking one himself. He left hastily, and had not been gone ten minutes before his brother-in-law was taken violently ill, and he actually expired a few hours afterward. It transpired that Dr. Lamson purchased, just before the occurrence, two grains of aconitia, the medicinal dose of which of which is from 120th to one-sixtieth of a grain.

The stomach of the deceased was analyzed by Drs. Dupre and Stevenson, who demonstrated that death was due to aconite, and the evidence against Dr. Lamson was very damaging. The accused voluntarily gave himself up while still out of the reach of the law, and strongly protested his innocence.—Times-Star.

THE effort to establish the principle of trial by jury has proved a failure in Spain. The Spanish Chamber of Deputies, by a vote of 181 to 55, has rejected the amendment to the judicial procedure proposing trial by jury. The Government opposed the amendment.

A LARGE number of evicted Irish tenants are arriving in this country, landing in a famish condition, and without a cent of money to support themselves upon. Here is one of the best subjects of a "fund" that could be presented.

THE people of the burnt district of Michigan have not been idle since the fires. Thousands of neat, comfortable houses are being built, and hundreds of acres which were covered with thick underbrush before the fire are now green with wheat and other crops.

THE Presbyterian General Assembly met at Springfield, Ill., Thursday, and after the usual opening services, was organized by the election of Dr. Herrick Johnson, of Chicago, as Moderator, on the first ballot. Dr. Johnson represents the former New School branch of the church.

THE North American Silk Exchange, recently incorporated in New York, is negotiating for 350 acres on Long Island for a nursery of mulberry trees, and for 2,000 acres in Kentucky on which to raise silk worms. The principal supply of eggs has been obtained at Corinth, Mississippi.

AT the recent meeting of the national board of fire underwriters, President Heald said that if the average rate of fire insurance premiums for the last twenty-two years had been twenty cents less on each $100 insured, the entire capital and assets of the 293 companies embraced in the tables of the board would long ago have been swept out of existence.

A WELL-INFORMED correspondent estimates that Mr. Gladstone's Arrears bill will relieve the Irish tenant farmers of a large sum. The most trustworthy calculation makes the aggregate of arrears of rent due to the landlords from tenants who profess to be unable to pay their debts about $30,000,000. On this basis the tenants would pay, under the Arrears bill, $10,000,000, the Government would expend $10,000,000, and the landlords would lose $10,000,000. The loss to the landlords is not so great as it seems, when it is considered that without the intervention of some such bill as this they would receive very little, after the failure of the crops for three successive years.

THE condition of the United States navy is known to be dangerously disgraceful. Secretary Chandler states, in an elaborate report, that no one of the sixty-seven serviceable vessels in the American navy is in condition to engage in battle with an enemy of the general classification. Two of them can be put in that condition, except as to ordnance, in one month each. Others will require, except as to ordnance, one and two years. To manufacture the guns, ammunition, and equipments required for re-arming the sixty-seven vessels, would require from five to seven years, the first light gun and carriage being delivered in about one year, and the first heavy gun in about three years. It would require an expenditure of $22,514,141 to put these vessels in the desired condition. The Secretary further states that forty-five vessels, storeships, tugs, etc., are utterly unserviceable for war purposes.

AS WAS foreshadowed several days ago, the court in banc refuses a new trial to Guiteau. According to a Washington authority he will now be taken to a solitary cell in the jail, where he is now confined, and placed under continued guard, better known as the death watch. Every action will be observed up to the fatal moment, and not a word will be permitted to be spoken to him except by his spiritual adviser, or by persons specially authorized by the warden, General Crocker, who has entire charge of and responsibility for the assassin from this time on until his dead body is ready to be consigned to the doctors for post mortem examination. District Attorney Corkhill has determined upon an examination of the brain of the assassin by a board of the most eminent medical experts in the United States, to put at rest, as he believes forever, the question of his sanity. After the autopsy the body will be delivered to the relatives of the doomed man, if any of them call for it.

Disagreeable Weather.

Washington, Iowa, May 23.—A few days of disagreeable weather, in which overcoats and furs felt comfortable, terminated this morning in three inches of snow. Everything is white with snow, and birds singing in the early morning from underneath the snow-weighted forest trees and blooming rosebushes is something unusual in this part of the country.

Marshalltown, Iowa, May 23.—The second snow-storm of the spring occurred last night between 12 and 1 o'clock. The snow fell heavily for some time, and then the weather grew clear and clod, and there was another heavy frost, doing a great deal of damage. Small fruit are mostly ruined, and other damage is feared.

Des Moines, Iowa, May 23.—There were rain, snow and a heavy frost here last night.

Davenport, Iowa, May 23.—At 2 o'clock this morning a heavy snow storm set in and continued for four and a half hours. Fully three inches of snow fell, but at daylight only about an inch was on the ground because of the melting. No such storm is remembered as having occurred here before. The frost of yesterday morning damaged vegetables and small fruits in this region.

Des Moines, Iowa, May 24.

The State Register of this morning gives a report of Monday night's polar wave from nearly every county in the State. In some localities there was a cold rain, and in others ice formed, and snow fell to the depth of two inches. The result is discouraging to the farmers. Small fruits are cut off entirely.

Mr. Lincoln's Death-Bed

Report of Lecture in Chicago.

Judge Usher described the death-bed scene graphically. Mrs. Lincoln was in the front room with some lady friends, and every few moments she would come to the bedside and give vent to the most fearful screams, that were painful and even appalling to hear. Thus it continued through the night, and just as the dawn of the coming day was breaking, the soul of the great martyr passed to its final rest.

FROM WASHINGTON.

Congressman Davis has received telegrams from Chicago parties urging the defeat of the bill creating an abattoir and rendering company, and prohibiting the sending of fresh meat into this district, which, it was thought, would come up to-day. Mr. Davis says that the bill is still in the District Committee, and cannot probably be reached for some time.

The President and Secretary of the Treasurer went to Harper's Ferry to-day to examine the government property there formerly occupied by the arsenal which John Brown captured, and which was burned by the rebels during the war. Parties in Baltimore have offered to buy or lease the property, which is valuable for the water power, and it will probably be sold to them. It is raid the power will be used to generate electricity for Washington and Baltimore.

The President has been asking about Robert P. Porter, with a view of placing him on the Tariff Commission. It is believed ex-Secretary Kirkwood and ex-Vice President Wheeler have been determined upon.

General Raum has returned, and is very cheerful regarding his Senatorial prospects.

The report of the House Committee on White's resolution touching the Whisky Bond bill will state that the bill was drafted by the committee after much labor and with the recommendation of the Internal Revenue Department, and, in the opinion of the committee it shouldn't be meddled with.

The House Committee on Patents, by a vote of 7 against 2, decided to report adversely the pending bill which proposes to grant an extension of patent for a steam grain shovel to Milsom, Spendelow & Watson.

The Ways and Means Committee this morning heard the report of the sub-committee appointed to investigate the charges made by Representative John D. White, of Kentucky, in connection with the Bonded Period Whisky bill. The report is unanimous, and exonerates General Raum, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, from the imputations made against him.

The principal topic outside of Congressional proceedings to-day is the story that Congressman Blackburn and Senator Williams are to fight a duel. Blackburn and Williams refuse to say anything about it, but friends say that, as the offensive correspondence has been withdrawn, there will be no further trouble. The whole matter grows out of the claim of each that he is the author and finisher of the bill for the erection of a public building at Frankfort, the capital of the State. Williams, in a letter published in Kentucky, criticises Blackburn for claiming too much credit, and Blackburn, in a letter to Williams, calls him a "liar." Friends have persuaded each to withdraw the offensive correspondence, and it is generally believed there will be no blood, though it is rumored to-day that Williams is still determined to challenge Blackburn.

A story is afloat that the item of $23,000 in the Yorktown celebration was half of it for a steamer which was chartered for certain members of Congress, who took a good many friends, and all drank and smoked at government expense for several days at a most disgraceful rate. It is probable there will be an investigation by the House committee.

Senator Mahone has written a letter explaining his course on the proposition to permit ex-Confederates to enter the army. He says he simply voted to recommit the bill to the committee to save a profitless agitation. He don't think it wise for ex-Confederates to ask to enter the army until invited by the voluntary removal of the disqualification by Congress. The breach is slowly but surely closing, and will soon be closed if not reopened by useless war words.

Hon. Wm. H. Hunt, United States Minister to St. Petersburg, sails for Europe Wednesday.

J. B. Syphax, colored, announces himself as a candidate for Congressman-at-Large in Virginia, against Wise, the Mahone candidate.

The General Deficiency Appropriation bill will appropriate about $21,000,000, $16,000,000 of which is to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the payment of pensions during the fiscal year.

It is stated that the Distillers' Association has spotted the fellows who are opposing the bill for the extension of the bonded period, and will work to defeat their election. It is alleged that the association is putting up money to aid the Congressional committee in working certain districts in various parts of the country, to effect the election of such men as they desire, and defeat others. It is reported that a member of the Republican Congressional Committee said that the Congressional days of White, of Kentucky, who opposed the bill in the House, are numbered.

It is announced in Baltimore that Mr. Garrett, the President of the Baltimore and Ohio, made arrangements for important changes and terminal facilities at Chicago while there, both as to depot and other matters.

Business statistics, gathered from all parts of the country, show a rather unsatisfactory condition of trade, probably caused in part, however, by the backward spring.

The Red Cross Society is now closing up its work in the Mississippi valley, where it has done a great deal of quiet work in aiding suffering and distributing seeds since the flood.

Congressman Phelps, of Connecticut, is said to have fallen heir to a large fortune, and will retire from Congress.

The Grand Jury has returned new presentments against General Thomas S. Brady, John Dorsey, Stephen W. Dorsey, Montfort C. Rerdell, Henry M. Turner, J. R. Miller, J. M. Peck and Harvey M. Valle, charging them with conspiring to defraud the United States in connection with awards in the Star Route contracts. Four allegations of overt acts committed outside of the statute limitations have been omitted. Twelve new overt acts have been inserted, the acts being in making fraudulent claims against the government based on fraudulent allowance for increase allowed by Brady. A number of letters and petitions are incorporated, and, finally, the date of the conspiracy is brought forward to May 23, 1879. The court issued warrants for the arrest of defendants, returnable Tuesday next.

Among subscriptions recieved by Treasurer Gilfillan for the Garfield Memorial Hospital are $3,352 contributed in London and Paris.

Justice James this morning anounced the decision of the court in banc upon the exceptions in the Guiteau case, denying a new trial and affirming the judgement below. Justice Hagner, in a separate opinion, discussing the bearings of the old Maryland law, and held that even under the Maryland act of 1785, the indictment would have been good in this district, and Judge Carter stated that the opinions given were the unanimous opinions of the court. The court holds that jurisdiction is complete where a fatal blow is struck, without regard to the locality of actual demise; that the bullet fired at the President by Guiteau on the 2d of July, in this city, was the cause of his death, and that the trial could only have been held in Washington; that the death of the President in New Jersey, except as affected by local statutes, could not change jurisdiction. The assassin had not been in New Jersey, had committed no offense against New Jersey laws, and the mere fact of the victim being removed to Elberon to prolong his life or save it, if possible, could not be made to affect the character of the crime. Adjourned.

Mr. Reed still refuses to say what he will do after the refusal of the court to grant a new trial to Guiteau is made, but insists that he will yet save his client's neck.

Kilbourne has amended his suit against Sergeant-at-Arms Thompson and now asks $350,000 damages.

Senator Logan appeared in his seat to-day in excellent health.

"Boss" Shipherd, ex-Commissioner of the District, writes from Mexico that he is too busy to return here as he expected. It is said he is making a fortune in mines there.

J. Hyatt Smith, the Brooklyn preacher elected to Congress as a Greenbacker, but now voting with the Republicans, even on financial matters, denies the report that he contemplates resigning. He says he is much pleased with his experience here.

South Carolina Republicans are clamoring for the report in the case of Smalls, the Republican claimant for the seat occupied by Tillman, of the Fifth South Carolina District. They claim the case is a very strong one, and should have been reported and acted on long since.

Reports from Delaware show a prospect of the largest peach crop since the phenomenal peach year of 1875.

The reports from Eureka Springs show no improvement in Ben Hill's condition.

It now turns out that Phillips, the Agent of the New York Associated Press here, was removed for permitting Mr. Blaine to revise his testimony before the Foregn Affairs Committee before it was sent out.

The House Committee on Judiciary adopted the report of the sub-committee declaring that the lands granted the Northern Pacific Railway were non-forfeitable. The minority of four will present a dissenting report. Chairman Reed was authorized to submit the majority report to the House.

The latest Polar scheme is by J. Palmarts, of the Belgian Geographical Society, now visiting this country. He has devoted much time to Arctic study, and he proposes to explore the Polar regions with a cigar-shaped steel vessel, running under the water, and obtaining oxygen by the decomposition of water. Palmarts says the experiments he has made develop the practicability of his scheme. He proposes a sixty days voyage north from Spitzbergen.

The Commerce Committee presents a report accompanying the River and Harbor bill, excusing the size of the bill, and saying that the demand for improvement is unusually great, and that it believes the people prefer to continue the revenue tax on luxuries and use the money in internal improvements.

The decision of the Massachusetts Attorney General against the further publication of Walt Whitman's book—"Leaves of Grass"—brings to the surface the fact not general known that Whitman was dismissed from a position in the Interior Department here for the publication of this book, which was then deemed indecent.

The statement that Castlear, the government engraver, was connected with the bond counterfeiting case, and that the delay was occasioned for the purpose of convicting him, is not credited here. Wood has been trying to convince every Secretary of the Treasury since McCulloch of the correctness of his theory, but failed.

The prospect of ending the Congressional session by July 1 is not cheerful. It is now evident that the election cases in the House must last nearly the remainder of this month, and the work on the Appropriation bills is only about half completed.

Edward Stabler, appointed Postmaster at Sandy Springs, Md., by Jackson fifty years ago, still holds the same office.

Postmaster General Howe will arrange to put on a fast mail train west from Chicago while on his trip to the West.

The advocates of Inter-state Commerce bill have little hope of getting consideration of the bill this session.

The Foreign Affairs Committee are arranging to pick up Trescott as soon as he arrives and examine him on Peru-Chili affairs.

Governor Crittenden, in an interview says: "Missouri's prospects have brightened much since Jesse James' death, travel having increased and immigration improved.

President Barrios, of Guatemala, is en route here. He will lay before the Government the official details of the boundary troubles with Mexico, and ask the influence of this country in a peaceable settlement. He also has the outlines of a proposition for the union of all the States of Central America in one confederation, which he is preparing to push.

The President is having a very serious time selecting the tariff commission. The discovery made yesterday that Kirkwood is not eligible by reason of having been elected a Senator of the Congress which passed the bill, disconcerts the President, who, it is said, introduced him as a nucleus around which to form the commission.

The President is still considering the court-martial case of Flipper, the only colored officer in the army, and will probably modify the finding of the court martial, so as not to dismiss Flipper from the service.

Independent Republican Convention.

Philadelphia, Pa., May 24.

George Lear, who presided at the regular Republican Convention, occupied a seat on the platform when the Independent Convention was called to order.

Prayer was offered by Rev. D. C. Babcock, a noted prohibitionist, and Secretary of the Pennsylvania State Temperance Association.

United States Senator Mitchell was chosen temporary Chairman by acclamation amidst cheers and applause.

The Committee on Rules reported a platform, the reading of which was frequently interrupted by the applause which certain planks, especially those condemning "bossism" and spoils system elicited.

The platform being adopted unanimously, and nominations for the state ticket being declared in order, Major Merrick said he desired to be a private in the fight, and desired no place on the ticket. Major Merrick closed by nominating for Governor ex-Chief Justice Agnew.

Dr. Doane nominated Senator John Stewart.

Hon. Wayne McVeagh's name was proposed, but was withdrawn after several delegates declared that McVeagh would not accept.

The nominations then closed, and the convention adjourned for an hour.

Later the Independents nominated Senator Stewart for Governor. Agnew's name was withdrawn.

Bishop Foss Improving.

Minneapolis, Minn., May 24.

The condition of Bishop Foss this morning is much more favorable. His pulse and temperature are better, his mind is clear, and the swelling of the parotid gland is lessening. His physicians are very hopeful.

Law Reforms in New York.

The new general code of New York, which goes into effect May 1, provides that train men and steamboat hands who get drunk may be sent to the penitentary; that it shall be a misdemeanor to place a baggage or freight immediately after a passenger car, or to employ a locomotive engineer who can not read ordinary hand-writing; that railroad employes must wear uniforms on pain of imprisonment; that eavesdropping and subsequent vexing talk may be punished, and that women shall not be sent to the state prison, but may be confined in county penitentaries. Something is also done for the protection of convicts against brutal keepers by a provision that their rights shall be precisely like those of other men except as to the punishments provided by law.

Mr. Whittier told the Boston correspondent of the Providence Press that one day he was driving with Emerson down one of the Concord roads and talking about theology. "As we drove past a certain house, Mr. Emerson said, turning his head toward it, 'there lives a good Calvinist woman who prays for me every day,' and then, with his fine, indescribable smile, 'I'm glad of it.'"

In London it is remarked, with graceful appreciation of the fact, that one of the last acts in the life of Ralph Waldo Emerson was to cable a message of sympathy to the family of the late Darwin. It was of Darwin that the American philosopher wrote, "Earnest, honest and wrong." Portraits of Emerson, Darwin and Longfellow on one card are seen everywhere now.

DEMOCRATIC

BOOM!

June 10th, 82.

Let the People turn out en masse.

Have Harmony and Good Feeling Prevail.

We hope one and all will make the Democratic Convention one long to be throught of.

Democratic Convention.

Delegates from the several townships in DeKalb county will meet at the court house in Auburn,

SATURDAY, JUNE 10, 1882,

at 10 o'clock a. m. for the purpose of nominating candidates for the following offices:

Representative in the legislature.
County Clerk, County Auditor
County Treasurer, County Sheriff,
County Recorder, County Surveyor,
County Coroner,
Commissioner southwest district.
County Commissioner southeast district.
County Commissioner north district.

SELECTION OF DELEGATES:

All Democrats and others who intend to support the ticket nominated by the convention above named, are requested to meet at the usual voting places as they existed in their respective townships prior to the late division of townships and precincts, Saturday, June 3, 1882, at 2 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of selecting delegates to the county convention, in accordance with the following apportionment based upon the number of Democratic votes cast for secretary of state at the last state election:

Butler Township	12	delegates,
Jackson "	19	"
Concord "	22	"
Newville "	7	"
Stafford "	7	"
Wilmington	26	"
Auburn prec't	35	"
Waterloo prec't	18	"
Richland	12	"
Fairfield	22	"
Smithfield	16	"
Franklin	15	"
Troy	8	"
Keyser	[illegible]	"
Total,	[illegible]

The convention will transact such other business as may come before it.

By order of the Committee
[illegible] ROLAND, Chairman.
J. A. BARNS, Sec'y.

Commissioners.

In view of the importance of this office to the people of this county, would it not be a good plan to have the nominations for commissioners come first on the list of work before the convention. As far as we know, the names already announced represent good men, who would fill the offices to which they aspire, with credit to themselves and to the county. But if there is any choice among the candidates it can be made available by having the order of nominating so changed that commissioners will be first and not last. If brought up the last on the list, many delegates will be absent. Then, too, there will be the usual amount of soreness on the part of disappointed aspirants, and their friends will not care who gets the nomination. What do you say gentleman? Shall we have the commissioners first?

THE primary election at Fort Wayne Tuesday, resulted in 14 delegates for Coldrick and 28 for Lowry. To-day's contest at Kendallville promises to be a very spirited one.

THE Times-Star in its answers to correspondents, says: The latest puzzle directory in use is the American Puzzlers' Directory, by "Gus," price 6 cents. Address A. C. Grublky, Waterloo, Ind.

IT never was discovered until Tuesday that the grounds upon which the Huntington court house stands was deeded to the county on condition that no Negro or Indian ever be allowed to live within the city limits. So far the conditions have not been violated.—Richmond Palladium.

THE widow of Lieut. DeLong, as well as the families of the others who lost their lives in the Jeannette expedition will be cared for and supported by Mr. Bennett during their lives. This is in fact, the only redeeming thing about these arctic expeditions. They have so far been of little or no value to science or commerce, and many valuable lives have been lost. It is high time they were stopped.

THE Waterloo fair seems to be thought of such importance as to have mention made of it in a list given in the Cincinnati Commercial of state and independent fairs where mention is made of none others in the state except the state fair and one at Cambridge City. Sometimes there seems to be something in the name. "The Northeastern Indiana" sounds well and seems to carry with it a suggestion of something quite above ordinary fairs.—Steuben County Journal.

IF, as is claimed, the national debt is now being reduced at the rate of $150,000,000 a year, how long will it be possible for the present system of national banks to keep in business. The amount of bonds held by these banks, as security for their circulation, is said to reach over $400,000,000. In twelve years, we can, by paying at the rate above named, wipe out the entire debt. So, the matter comes to just this: We must either close up the national banks gradually, as the debt is paid off, or we must let the debt remain a burden on the people for all time to come. In view of these facts, the recent action on the subject, in congress will be seen in its true colors.

LAST Wednesday, was the centennial of the massacre of Gnadenhutten, Ohio. Contrary to the usual course of Indian warfare, it was the Indians who suffered. They were a band of Delawares who had been converted to christianity by German Moravian missionaries. In the fall of 1781 they were driven from their homes by a force of British and tories, and passed the winter at Sandusky where they suffered fearful privations. In March they returned to their homes to gather the corn that was still standing. Some hostile Indians followed, and committed several murders on the white settlers near the Indian town. This so enraged the whites that believing the christain Indians were the guilty parties, they came on them on the 8th, of March, and murdered ninety-six in cold blood by beating out their brains. It is the darkest chapter in the history of our Indian troubles.

Fairfield Caucus.

The legal voters of Fairfield township, DeKalb county, Indiana, met in democratic caucus at the Center school house, May 27, 1882, for the purpose of nominating delegates to the county convention, to be held at Auburn, June 10th, 1882, Mr. J. M. Brumbock presiding. The following delegates were appointed: First district, E. Shipe, W. H. Shatto; second, Samuel Heaney, Alfred Weirick, David Sair; third, S. Eckhart, N. Crossley, Daniel Deets; fourth, John Gardner, J. M. Marts; fifth, John Marts, Solomon Deets, Hiram Slaybaugh, Anthony Zonker; sixth, William Heaney, S. Williams, Peter Gonser; seventh, T. W. Grey, John Potts; eighth, Lewis Hosler, Solomon Reinoehl; ninth, David McNabb, Jonathan Shook; tenth, Frank Beuchat, Peter Emerick.

On motion, which was unanimously sustained, the delegates appointed to attend the the congressional convention at Kendallville, June 1, 1882, were confirmed by this caucus.

On motion, a ballot was taken, by which it was declared that the Hon. R. Lowry was the unanimous choice of this caucus as candidate for congress. The meeting then adjourned.

Caucuses.

Every township in the county, that has not already done so, will hold a caucus at the usual place, on Saturday of this week, to select delegates to the county convention. We are glad to note that the different candidates, are in most cases, working up their interest with the utmost good feeling. Let the delegates be chosen in as fair a manner as possible, and then, may the best man win, is our motto.

—J. H. Ehlers seems to be in a dangerous condition.

—A lot of new organs unloaded at Straw's Monday.

—Billy Little is sending out boot's and shoes lively.

—Judge Best was on the streets the first of this week.

—Hubbell, of Butler, will take charge of the Republican.

—If you want an organ or piano tuned see F. B. Straw.

—Mrs. W. H. McQuiston has returned from a recent visit.

—Lewis & Widney are making things lively in lumber trade.

—Go to the Saginaw depot for lumber, flooring and shingles.

—Go to Mc & Mike's and try their different grades of tobacco.

—Joe Rainier cut a small steak off of his thumb, the other day.

—Go to Ensley & Harter for your butter as they have lots of it.

—We have a big lot of new and very choice butter, Ensley & Harter.

—Mrs. A. C. Gruhlkey, of Waterloo, was in town Saturday on business.

—Mel. Tarney now supplies the want of a jour at his father's meat market.

—Mrs. W. P. Myers made a trip to Ann Arbor last week to visit relatives.

—The beer portion of the citizens are invited to call on Tom Sommer's.

—Miss Maud Metcalf, of Union township, was among our callers last week.

—Don't fail to call in at the cabin saloon. Uncle Tom will do well by you.

—Charley Smith is performing the duties of his new office like a gentleman.

—Look out for the new delivery wagon this week. It belongs to Mc & Mike.

—Jed. Bitting is home. He had no ma in Michigan and didn't like the "layout."

—Charley Hoff will move into his new house this week. He has a cozy residence.

John Kreuger will quit the grocery trade and put in his time at the ashery business.

—William Murphy employs several workman and can hardly supply his customers.

—Rev. Mathews feels as big as a candidate for congress, since he found his stolen clothes.

—Mc & Mike have plug tobacco that takes the huckleberry pie. Everyone should try it.

—Call on Straw to buy or have repaired, musical instruments, sewing machines, etc.

—McQuiston & Long has coffee for 15cents a pound and it will suit the oldest inhabitant.

—Mr. Geo. Gaund's wife went east on the Wabash this week, making a visit with friends.

—Charley Poumart, tonsorial designer, is complaining of lung disease. We hope he will recover.

—Stuts, in the Hulsenbeck building, will dish you out anything to "wake up the nerve."

—When our friends come to the convention drop in at Gibson's for a good lunch.

—Picker & Bumpus, contractors in brick work, are now erecting Culbertson's dwelling.

—Mrs. Dave Matheny, now living at Decatur, Ind., is visiting with the family of Dr. Matheny.

—Coffee 15c a pound at Mack & Mike's. No wonder their trade is increasing so radidly.

—Miss Frankie Ryan and Mrs. A. W. Allen brightened our office rooms by their presence Friday last.

—The old residents of the county must not forget Ed. Eldridge when they want goods to "suit the taste."

—D. S. Cochran has gone to Sandusky, Ohio, to assist Mr. Hollopeter in building an elevator at that place.

—The subject of the discourse at the Presbyterian church next sabbath evening will be, "Has the Bible Mistakes?"

—Buy your tombstones and monuments of all kinds, of W. L. Meese first dore west of Davis's hardware store. 3t

—A collar and tag was lost last week. The former was brass, heavy, and tag No. 189. Please leave the same at this office.

—Elza Shaffer came over from Albion to attend the festival, and after making a "three corner" decision went home via Waterloo.

—Joe. Hosack, of Churbusco, at one time in the employ of J. W. Shaffer & Son at this place, was in town a short time last week.

—The family of Rev. Johnson, who have been residing here for some time past, have gone to their home at Grand Haven, Michigan.

—Political and business matters are crowding our columns this week and the Courier may appear a little backward in local affairs.

—Obe Cool is selling buggies faster than he can manufacture them. He is furnishing good outfits and, of course, the demand is great.

—Charley Mercer, of Corunna, is engaged in buying butter and eggs. He is a fellow that pushes business and will no doubt succeed.

—Billy Little has started a new shoe shop near Hoff's grocery where ready-made work and repairing will be attended to immediately.

—Among those in attendance at the festival last Friday evening were Misses Fanny and Lizzie Clark and Miss Hattie Dickinson, of Waterloo.

—Complaints are being made that one of our butchers is not careful enough to keep the ground at the rear of his meat market clean.

—Tom Sommers buys choice liquors, cigars, etc, by the large quantities and consequently he can sell better, cheaper goods than any other dealer.

—A. M. Harkey, constable in Butler township, has killed four untagged dogs as early in the season as May 19, and has his eye on several others.

Lost.—Some place in Auburn, on last Friday evening, a moss-agate sleeve button. Finder will please leave the same at Ed. Baker's and get reward.

—When Billy Beatte pounds up another item for us we would like to have the proper credit. The Courier is the name of our paper and not "Exchange."

—Fin Gibson will open the bakery again on South main street. Everyone knows that he is a practical workman and dealers in bread stuff will do well to call on him.

—Chris. Baker went to Fort Wayne, the other day, to do business and see his friends. Chris. is well liked at the Junction and we are glad to know that he is prospering.

—The only and original Yankee Robinson is coming and will be in Auburn, Friday, June 2nd. Two performances only afternoon and evening with Hans' great Pavilion show.

—The Fry concert company, that will be here next Tuesday evening, have no superiors, as we can testify. Don't fail to come out and hear them. You will never regret it.

Hans' great Pavilion show, female brass band and lady orchestra. For particulars see small bills, will exhibit near the Wabash R. R. depot, Friday June 2nd, for one day only.

—We are under obligations to Miss Edith Jackman for recent numbers of the Normal Quarterly, a school journal published at the Southern Indiana Normal College, at Mitchell, Indiana.

—The only orignal Yankee Robinson with Hans' Pavilion show, will exhibit in Auburn, June 2nd, one day only. Two performances, good seats for all, tight rope ascension afternoon, free to all.

—H. B. Forney of Smithfield was in town Wednesday on business. Which reminds us that the Forney band have been much in demand during the past spring in assisting at school entertainments.

—Miss York, of the south end, is engaged as an apprentice in the millinery trade. She certainly has the taste of a good workman, after experience and practice gives her the necessary advantages.

—The roads near town are still in a bad condition. They ought to be scraped and leveled. The trouble seems to be that the new road superintendents have no funds to use for this purpose.

—Business local matters are crowding this week and our duty as a newspaper man finds us in an embarrassing condition, of course the rights of everyone, when money is offered, must be recognised.

Notice.—Until further notice I will be in my office at my home in Keyser township for the transaction of such township business as may come before me on Friday of each week.

Henry Probst, Trustee.

—There was quite a musical concert at Austin's Sunday. The lovers of fine music gathered about the street and filled the doorways of adjacent dwellings and enjoyed the treat thus afforded them.

—A [illegible] sent from Albion last week to C. C. Shaffer, ordering a casket sent to his son at Albion, has not yet been delivered. Elza came down and got the goods Friday, but feels justly indignant about it.

—Unclaimed letters in Auburn post-office for the week ending May 31st, 82: Abbey Barton, Etrick & Lemkey, James Hines, Geo. Olinger, Jennie Neiwinter, A. A. Nall, Annie Ward, C. M. Reynolds.

G. W. Gordon, P. M.

—McQuiston and Long are leading in the general dry goods and grocery trade. For a nice parasol, or anything to make the going young lady appear according to the style of the day, this popular house has the outfit.

—We learn by the Fort Wayne News that our friend, O. L. Young of Butler, was married last week to a young lady in the former city, a Miss Jennie Walker. The happy couple have our best wishes for all possible happiness.

Caucus.—The democrats of Franklin township will hold a caucus at the Center school house, for the purpose of selecting delegates to the county convention, on Saturday, June 3, at five o'clock p. m. Let there be a full turn out.

—J. A. Gushwa and H. H. Slaybaugh, of Fairfield were in town Monday. The former is road superintendent in his township, and will do the best he can to make the new law a success. He drew only $42 for road purposes, but expects to have plenty next year.

—J. L. Davis, the popular pioneer hardware man, is crowding his usual enterprise in the way of a first-class stock in both hardware and agricultural implements. He has an exclusive right of a churn which "takes the cream" and our farmer friends praise it highly.

—We hear that Sherm. Hollister will erect a building between the depot and target house at the Junction and engage in the restaurant business. The gentleman understands his "knitting" and the big men of the B. & O. will act to their interests in encouraging the enterprise.

—The new music house located next door to Rainier & Headley's meat market, is quite a substantial institution. All kinds of musical instruments are kept in stock, together with the latest and finest selections of sheet music. We welcome Mr. F. B. Straw to our business circles and commend him to the public as an honest, upright business man.

—Decoration day was observed in good style at this place, and the brave heroes who gave their lives for us to enjoy freedom and equal rights were honored grandly. The citizens in general gathered at the cemetary and the countenance of all indicated that they had a warm feeling wrapped within their breasts for the deceased soldier boys.

—Don't fail to attend the entertainment at the Presbyterian church next Tuesday evening. Mrs. Fry and her daughters are ladies of the highest character, and their songs are among the choicest gems to be found. We heard them at Waterloo last year, and do not hesitate to endorse them fully. The proceeds go in part to benefit the church. All come.

—Having a short period of leisure we dropped in to see what McQuiston & Long were "up to." For several weeks past we have noticed a number of people going in and out when other stores were apparently idle, and the secret is that they are selling goods from ten to twenty per cent. cheaper than any house in the state. We ask both town and rural people to call in and learn whether these facts are substantial or not.

—Jackson township has a revival of the George-Washington-and-his-little-hatchet business. Some one, whose name we did not learn, has a lot of fine cherry trees that he is cultivating with great care. Some of these had given off sprouts that forced their way up on the other side of the fence, on the land of a neighbor. To these was given the same care and attention as to "the ninety and nine that went not astray." But the tempter came and whispered into some one's ear, and the little hatchet came forth and the trees were girdled in a manner that would have made the immortal G. W. turn green with envy, and now there is mourning that household.

Dreadful Accident Near Hudson.

Jonathan Crays and Dan Frederick were preparing ground to plant corn last Friday. In the evening Louis Crays came from school and wanted to drive the horses that were hauling the roller. The boy took up one line, and in trying to get the other line he was caught by the roller and forced down between the cross-bar and roller. The cross-bar is a 2x4 piece of oak and runs parallel with the roller, at a distance of two inches from it. In this narrow space was little Louis, aged seven years, forced. His back was to the roller and his abdomen on the ground, and his entire body was forced through up to his chin, which caught on the cross-bar. Thus he seemed to be crushed by the weight of the roller and almost pulled in two, by his head refusing to go through so narrow a space. While in this terrible condition, blood was forced from his ears, eyes, nose and mouth. Moments of eternal length seemed to roll on until he was relieved by axes and prys. Dr. T. R. Morrison, of Hudson, was sent for to attend the suffering child, and the doctor thinks little Louie will live, notwithstanding his terrible condition.

McDonald, the thief, was sent over for fifteen days.

Beaty and Wise settled up their affairs with a judgment of $80.

Benjamin Osborne and wife received a divorce.

—Our "left-bower" looked over the stock of Snyder & Culbertson's mammoth establishment, Tuesday, and found matters lively notwithstanding the dull season now in vogue. They keep a general supply store and young married people as well as others, can save money by buying at this popular house.

—The annual meeting of the American Medical Association will be held at St. Paul, Minn., on Tuesday, June 6. To parties desiring to attend this convention, the B. & O. railroad will sell round-trip tickets on June 4th, at the low rate of one fare for the round trip. Tickets must be procured at the general office, 205½ N. High street, Columbus, Ohio; or can be procured by notifying the agent of the company or treasurer Ohio division in time to notify this office and procure them.

—A box of fine assorted candies was stolen, or in some manner lost at the Presbyterian festival. It was brought to the foot of the stairs and left there a few moments, while assistants were carrying such articles up into the hall. When they came to look for the box, it failed to put in an appearance. Some ignorant sneak had no doubt taken it. The patient and over-worked ladies of the association will be apt to reward the scamp in a very energetic way, should he fall into their hands.

—Robert Donaldson, of this place, and Miss Florence Taylor, of Waterloo, were united in marriage last Saturday evening. Rev. Mathews, of the first Presbyterian church, made the loop. Bob is a nice gentleman, an intelligent, industrious young man with recommendations of being a master workman and the entire Courier force wishes them a happy, prosperous ending and one that will be applauded by their many friends of to-day. Let little Tailor's Bob. around in glee with bright hopes of a happy future. We close this paragraph wishing the welfare of all.

—It has been mentioned several times in the Courier that the Wabash company were making substantial improvements in the elevators at this place. Upon inquiry we find that between five and six thousand dollars have been expended to improve the advantages of this grain depot. The gentlemen connected with it are polite and accommodating. John Deck is largely experienced in all grades of grain and stock and will deal fairly by everyone. Ef. Watson is known throughout the county as a man of integrity and mechanical faculties. He runs the machinery as well as deals with his friends, of whom he has many, when they desire. Our readers will make it pay in dealing at this establishment.

—It is not very often that a buyer or business visitor will notice the genius and taste displayed in a thriving retail house. While we have been here and there at different times our attention has never been more attracted, without solicitation than it was when we entered the mammoth millinery and fancy store of Ensley & Harter, located in rear of court square. The goods were nicely arranged and of the latest patterns. The millinery department presented a thriving appearance under the management of Miss Lydia Hogue. Their basement story has a stone floor which is more particularly used for the keeping of butter, eggs, etc., and hereafter our farmer friends will find a ready market to dispose of their weekly sale at top prices, and the town trade a place where they can buy at reasonable prices and get nice clean, cool articles for table use.

—Howard McCord, at the Pioneer drug store, is suffering with an aching tooth.

—Mrs. Jones, at the popular fancy store, has ladies' and gentlemen's hose t the latest patern.

GOOD BYE, PROUD WORLD.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON, 1823.

Good by, proud world! I'm going home;
Thou art not my friend and I'm not thine.
Long through the weary crowds I roam,
A river ark on the ocean brine!
Long I've been tossed like the driven foam;
But now, proud world, I'm going home!

Good by to Flattery's fawning face;
To Grandeur, with his wise grimace;
To upstart Wealth's averted eye;
To supple office, low and high;
To crowded halls, to court and street;
To frozen hearts and hasting feet;
To those who go and those who come;
Good by, proud world, I'm going home.

I'm going to my own hearthstone,
Bosomed in your green hills alone,
A sweet nook in a pleasant land,
Whose groves the frolic fairies planned;
Where arches green the livelong day
Echo the blackbird's roundelay,
And vulgar feet have never trod
A spot that's sacred to thought and God.

O, when I am safe in my sylvan home,
I tread on the pride of Greece and Rome,
And when I am stretched beneath the pines,
Where the evening star so holy shines,
I laugh at the lore and pride of man,
At the sophist schools, and the learned clan;
For what are they all in their high conceit,
When man in the brush with God may meet?

JOHN'S TRAIN.

Then you never heard what brought John and me together? Just hitch your chair close up to the fire, for there's a rain falling outside, and this wind from the sea sounds cold and feels cold. If you'll believe it, when John is foolish he says that fire is like the light in my black eyes. John talks a lot of nonsense. But there, I havn't started that story. I think John and I always fancied one another ever since we went barefooted to the little yellow schoolhouse at the corners, but then we did have so many fallings out, hot one day and cold the next! The makings up, though, were nice, and I fancied sometimes that John did it all purposely, that he would have a falling-out time that there might be a falling-in one.

There was one thing, though, that did make me mad—the way John would show attentions to Sase Cullis. She was a little snipper-snapper sort of a blue-eyed thing. She had a pretty, milky kind of a complexion, a lot of curls pasted together over night, and she knew how to put blue, yellow, and red together, and come out some Sunday as gay as a rainbow. But I knew the girl was hollow as a pumpkin stem. She had little brains, but a heap of self, and I knew she could not make John happy. So unlike him!

There had been a coolness between John and me, but when I saw John Gray and Sase Cullis walk away from the harvesting at Uncle Tobias's I was not cool a bit; I was hot. If any one had touched me with a wet finger I should have sizzled. "That John," I said, "is a fool. She is not fit for him, and yet she's a-winding him around her little finger, as she does one of those pasted-up curls around a stick. He was a smart, enterprising young fellow, was my John. Why, he started brakeman on our road only a few years ago, and was at the tail end of the train. The next thing people knew he was handling baggage at the forward end. Then—well, I don't know all the steps, but one day John had a bit of gold ribbon tied around his blue cap, and he looked real foolish under it. I asked him what it meant, and he blushed and said he was "conductor."

"I am real glad," I said.

"Are you?" and he spoke to me in a quick surprised way. "I didn't know that you cared nowadays?"

"Why, John," I told him, "of course I do."

Then he turned to me like a flash, and looked at me just the very same way he did whe he sat on the old log and made up after a quarrel. But then I was not going to have any of that after he had been cutting up so with Sase Cullis; and I knew, too, that I was needed at home, and I broke out, "Why, John, I believe I have lost my mind, for I haven't skimmed the milk at home." It is real handy to have some such thought near you in an emergency, and I used it to good effect, and turning left the conductor to his reflections. About a week after that I wanted to go to the Mills and do some shopping. I thought I would take the first afternoon train down, and come back on the train reaching home about seven. It would be dark, then, I well knew, and I could have had an earlier start, but I knew it was John's train, and I wanted to see what kind of a conductor he made. I did not want him to see who I was, so I borrowed sister Cynthy's veil. This and my own would make a screen he could not see through. Then I wore some of mother's fixings, and I knew John could not tell me from Methuselah. Well, every thing passed off just as I had planned it. My lord, the new, nobby conductor, came up to me and took my ticket. He suspected nothing. Behind that thick fence of veils I was as safe as Adam

"Good mother," he said.

The idea of it, calling me good mother.

"Good mother," he remarked, "are you going far?"

I cracked my voice and pitched it high, all r ezing, "a lietle way, sir, but I'm skittish as I'm alone."

"Don't worry! I'll look after you."

"Well," I said to myself, "John makes a good conductor."

In two minutes from that time, I was saying "John don't make a good conductor." That fellow went and sat down by the side of a young woman who seemed to turn her head, and there was Sase Cullis! Now, it is no part of a conductor's business to be flirting with young girls, though Sase was hardly that, being several years older than John, and a kind of aged bird, I used to think.

All of a sudden, just then, the engine gave the danger-signal and whistled down brakes. My! didn't John drop Sase like a hot potato, and how he sprang for the door of the car!

"What is the matter?" I thought, raising the window near me and looking out. As I looked, my blood seemed to turn to ice and refused to flow. Coming round the curve beyond us, winking horridly, was the headlight of the evening express! How it came there, it was of no use to imagine. I thought of a hundred dismal, dreadful things all at once, of a terrible crash, of people scalded by the hot steam, of people mangled, of people shot down the bank into Mud Creek close by! Above all, there was John. What if anything should happen to him? And there he was, back again. He had come to the car door and shouted "Brakes!" I knew what he meant. He supposed that a brakeman was on hand, but I had seen him leave the car and go forward. John did not know it. He only shouted, "brakes!" and then tore across the platform to the next car whose brakes he began to swing round.

Was I going to sit still there? Sase Cullis might, but the next moment I was flying to the rear of the car.

As I went the old lady's things flew to right and left, even as a tree sheds its leaves in October, and I stood at the brake not as an old woman, but as Sue Plympton, young and lively. As I seized the wheel and began to turn it, trying to do as I had often seen John, how I thanked God for any strength he had put in my arms. Didn't I, when turning the brake-wheel, thank Him for all the times I had pulled on the oar out on the water when the spray wet my face and the wind would rush up to wipe it; for every summer that I had helped father pitch hay into the barn; for every day when, alongside mother, I had tried my muscles on the old churn-handle.

I thought of John, and any natural strength I had seemed to grow into a giant's. And the engines of the two trains—they stopped.

Mercy, what an escape that was! Those engines came so near that John afterwards told me that he did not think you could have laid a hair between the two cowcatchers. There the locomotives stood, their headlights flaring, and they glared at one another on the track like mad buffalos, snorting and puffing and eying one another real demon like.

I held on to the brake, for I didn't know what those critters might take it into their heads to do. There John found me on the platform, as he afterwards said, my arm gripping the brake, my cloak throw back, my eyes flashing, my teeth set! You see he had come out of the car hurriedly to look after thing. Seeing me, he said, "Why, Sue!" Then he exclaimed, "You darling!" and kissed me. In a moment he spoke again. "There, dear, that will do; I want to start the train back, and we have all been wondering what made her hitch so. There, dear, you step into the car, and I will come and see you soon!"

One "darling," two "dears" and a kiss! I could have gripped that brake a century just to help John. I went back to my seat. I was all gone, though I did have strength enough to look around and see where Sase Cullis was. She had left the train.

Though we were three and a half miles from the station in our town, she declared that she would rather walk it than be another minute in the frisky old train. I would have stayed there with John, if the next minute we had gone over into Mud Creek. Our train was now backing down to the side track three miles off, to let the express train pass (it was the express conductor's fault that night, and not John's everybody said). John said he had two minutes to spare, as he came and sat down beside me. "Heavens!" he exclaimed, jumping up as if he had dropped down on a percussion cap. "Where is that old woman I promised to look after?" I could but laugh; "Don't worry, John, here she is?"

"Why, Sue!"

He did not ask for any explanation, but put his arm about me and said he promised to look aftre that old lady, and he guessed he would on the spot!

Then he spoke of the time we went to school together, and how he loved me, and that I didn't love him, he thought, but now—now, how many foolish things he did say! And I—I—was so weak after my tug at the brake, that my will was like a snow-flake on John's coat sleeve, and it melted all away—and—and, but there! You can't expect me to tell you everything!

When John said good-bye to me at the station that night, he kissed me before all the train hands, and he did it too, as if not ashamed of it, but having the best right in the world to do it. In two months we were married.

Making Millions.

New York Graphic.

One of the sights of Washington is the Bureau of Engraving and Printing of the Treasury Department, where government bonds, greenbacks, and national bank notes are made. This bureau, formerly located in the Treasury building itself, has now a home of its own, which ranks among the most expensive, if not the most imposing structures in the capital. Here every process necessary to the production of the bonds or notes may be seen except the manufactue of the paper. The bureau is in charge of Mr. O. H. Irish. The first step needful to the production of a note or bond after the paper has been made is to engrave the design on a steel plate. For this purpose the government employs the most skillful engravers to be obtained. The plate must be properly tempered—neither too hard nor too soft. It is then covered with a thin coating of blackened wax, after which the engraver begins his work on it. The vignettes and lettering are invariably engraved by hand, but the borders and medallions containing the number of the denomination are produced by delicate machines, which rule the lines in the fanciful curves we see in the finished notes. Some of these machines are very expensive, and require even greater construction than the finest watch.

As a rule, the vignettes, the lettering, the medallions and the borders are engraved on separate plates, and then when the steel has been hardened they are pressed in their proper positions on the surface of a soft steel roller, which is next also hardened. The impression on this roller is, of course, the reverse of that on the plates, the engraved portions rising above the surface instead of being sunk in it. The plates from which the notes are printed are produced by placing another sheet of softened steel under this roller and forcing the raised portions down into the plate. This produces the engravings in their original form again. This process is known as "transferring," and from the plate to which the roller has transferred the impression it received from the original engraved plates the printing is done.

Generally four or more notes are printed from one plate at the same time, and in order to do this four impressions of the die on the roller are transferred side by side at proper intervals on the plate. The printing is all done by hand, the ink being rubbed into the sunken lines by the printer, and the paper placed on the plate by an assistant, generally a girl. The printer then forces the plate, with the sheet of paper on it, between two rollers, a soft woolen blanket being put between the sheet and upper rollers.

The sheet containing the front side of four or more notes being printed goes through the hands of an examiner, who must see that it is perfect in every way. It then goes elsewhere to have the back printed, after which it is examined again. Then it is cut into four parts by means of a machine having three exceedingly fine and sharp knives placed in a row. Next the separate bills are numbered consecutively by a most intricate piece of mechanism. Being numbered they have to be finally counted and put up into packages ready for delivery.

When Treasury or bank notes are worn out they are cut into small bits and worn into pulp, which is afterwards cast into various shapes, each shape representing—or is said to represent—so many thousand dollars worth of old notes. These things are bought as souvenirs by visitors, and quite a large trade is done in them.

Limekiln Club Astronomy.

"I hold here in my han'," began brother Gardner, as the thermometer showed the usual 120 degrees in the vicinity of the stove, "a letter from Philadelphia axin' me if I believe wid Rev. Jasper, of Richmond, dat de sun do move? Sartin I do. I know de white folks claim dat it am de airth which am movin', while the sun stands still, but right dar we split. Joshua was about as nigh as bein' an angel as any white man will eber git, an' when he ordered de sun to stan' still he knew what he was talkin' 'bout. It would have been just as easy fur him to have commanded de airth to stan' still, but he didn't do it. If Joshua didn't know his business de rest of us might as well hang up.

"An' now, you cull'd folkses, min' what I'se gwine to say. Doan' let de 'stronomy bizness keep you awake nights. De sun am up dar by day, an' de moon an' stars am up dar by night. De Lawd put de sun dar to thaw de ice off de back door step, make cucumbers grow an' fetch up de grass an' de co'n. It didn't do any wuss when astronomy was unknown, as it would not do any better if ebary family in the kentry had a telescope fo' hundred feet long. De moon was hung up dar that folks might see to move by night when the rent got too high; dat lost cows could to fin' dar way home; dat folks could see to chop wood an' empty bar'ls of ashes on de street; dat wimin comin' home from pray'r meetin' could avoid de nail heads stickin' up in de planks, an' fur varus odder reasons. Engineer Irving's Heroism.

Staunton Valley Virginian.

Now and then, in quiet times of peace, emergencies spring up which demand the highest order of heroism. One of these emergencies occurred at Waynesboro on Wednesday a few days ago. Trains Nos. 25, 14, 12 and 16, on the Chesapeake and Ohio road, going east, had orders to meet and pass four sections of extra trains, coming west, at Blue Ridge. The extras were late, and as a consequence eleven trains were blocked on the main track above Waynesboro awaiting their arrival. After three of the extra trains had passed, the first section of No. 14 started out, and commenced ascending the heavy grade to the tunnel. Rain and sleet were falling, and the engine of No. 14 beng unable to draw its cars, the engineer of the train immediately following it, Mr. R. P. Irving, detached his engine from his own train, and coupling on the rear car of No. 14, aided the ascent After pushing the first train nearly a half a mile and giving it a good start, Mr. Irving reversed his engine and started to return to his own train, but ere he had reached it he saw a detachment of the train he had left coming down the mountain at a rapid rate, it having become uncoupled from the engine. In an instant the intrepid engineer realized the peril of the situation. Thirteen heavily-loaded cars were coming down a seventy-five foot grade, and each revolution of the wheels was adding velocity to its speed. With rare presence of mind and an iron nerve that few men possess, Irving started his engine to meet the descending mass and break the force of the collision. He ran up to within a short distance of the cars, and then reversing to lighten the shock, clutched the lever in his firm grasp, and, bracing every nerve in his body, awaited the catastrophe. A moment, and the crash came. The shock of an an avalanche could scarcely have been greater. One of the cars climbed up on the boiler of the engine and another was wrecked. But the brave man had accomplished his purpose. The wild train was stopped, and the engineer had saved many precious lives and thousands of dollars worth of property.

Muscle Reading for Deaf and Dumb.

New York World.

There was celebrated last night at Chickering hall, before a large number of ladies and gentlemen, the fifteenth anniversary of the New York institution for the instruction of the deaf and dumb, at the corner of Lexington avenue and Sixty-seventh street. Professor Greinberger, at one time a teacher in the Vienna institution for deaf mutes, who is the principal of the New York institution, gave a number of examples of lip-language. A little girl of six years, who had been in the institution but two weeks, was perfectly able, by feeling the muscles of the throat of her instructor, to repeat after him small words, such as "bad," "ma" and "pa." The institution teaches its inmates to read from the lips and speak by the study of the movements of the muscles of the throat and of the lips.

THE POWER OF PRAYER.

The Remarkable Recovery of a Cincinnati Lady from a Deadly Malady.

Cincinnati Special.

Mrs. M. E. Snowdon Washburn, residing with her mother on College Hill, is well known in Cincinnati, especially in art circles. She was born in the city, graduated at Hughes High-school, and afterward at the McMicken Art-school. For some time she has had a studio in Dayton, Ohio, where she has many friends. From there she returned to Cincinnati and opened a studio in 1875, confining herself principally to portrait painting. It was while here that her health gave way, and she was compelled to seek rest. The family are all sincere Christians, active in all church matters, and they belong to the good, old-fashioned school who receive Christianity as a heart faith, and not as a mere system of philosophy. They are members of the College Hill Presbyterian Church. Mrs. Washburn's health continued to decline rapidly, and nothing that could be done seemed to give her any material aid. The physicians were not aware of the precise nature of her malady until, when she was just at death's door, an examination revealed the fact that she was afflicted with internal cancer of the malignant type which, running its course, invariably kills its victims in, at the most, three years. All hope was now abandoned, her medical advisers telling her that, at the furthest, death would come in a few weeks. Her friends paid her their last calls; her pastor came and prayed with her, and she herself, desponding, made all preparations for leaving this world, when all at once the people of the neighborhood, who had been in hourly expectation of her death, were surprised to hear that she was getting well, and stranger still, only through the medium of prayer and a simple faith in its efficacy. To the Times correspondent Mrs. Washburn told her story, as follows: "My mother has always been a great believer in faith cures, and has wished me to try them. I had no faith, however, and gloomily looked forward to the end. One evening, when all the family had gone to prayer-meeting, I suddenly felt like getting well. I had faith that I would recover. That was on 8th of February of this year. When mother returned I told her of my determination to test the efficacy of prayer. She was overjoyed and sent for Miss Lillard, a missionary in this city, who recovered, while in Kentucky, from a severe sickness by faith alone, and who since then often prays with the sick and is instrumental in their recovery. She came, prayed with me, annointed my forehead with oil, and asked the Lord that his healing power be complete. She asked that I be made whole, and I believe that God will finish the work He has begun. After that there was no change in my condition for two days, though I felt less pain, but I was still very weak. Then I was suddenly seized with great pains. My head seemed on fire, my feet tingled and my blood burned. That passed away and I felt myself growing drowsy, and, as usual, I lay down on the sofa but I could not sleep. Then the most curicus features of my case were displayed. All my limbs were put in the most violent motion. My muscles twitched, my limbs were jerked forcibly backward and forward, and my hands moved convulsively."

"Were those motions involuntary?" asked the reporter.

"I do not know. When they came on I felt the Lord was at work, and I never attempted resistance. Since then I have grown stronger. The pain of seven years has gone. I am able to walk around the yard, and on one occasion I drove down to Cumminsville, while several times I have driven to the Mount Airy Sunday-school. I grew bright and felt better than I had for years. At times the motions returned, more violent than at first. They generally occurred at night. Sometimes their strenght was such as to throw me entirely out of bed upon the floor. At other times I would beat my breast with my arms in the most furious manner; but, strange as it may seem, I never hurt myself."

"Does your will exercise any control over these motions?" inquired the reporter.

"It does not. Something without me controls them. Occasionally I have tried to produce them myself, but in vain. At first these motions were not in the presence of the family, but latterly are at all times. Then I grew discouraged. I thought the Lord ought to cure me all at once, and I doubted. The moment my faith grew weak I felt my bodily health failing. Then hope returned, and since then I have been constantly growing stronger. My cancer has decreased in size one-half, and it is fast disappearing, I am not entirely well yet but I feel—I know—that I am on the high road to recovery."

Mrs. Washburn spoke with that calm enthusiasm that springs from eanest conviction. She seemed to feel every word she uttered. Her appearance is not that of a sick woman. Her cheeks are full, and bear the rosy tinge of health, while her eyes are bright, and she speaks with none of the weariness of an invalid.

These are the plain facts in the case. Mrs. Washburn, who, a few months ago, was scarcely able to leave her bed, is now up and around, in the enjoyment of better health than she ever had for years. The reporter has related the story exactly as it was given to him, and every one is at liberty to draw his own conclusions from these indubitable facts. Several life-long friends of the family were also interviewed, who have intimately known Mrs. Washburn from youth up, and all united in corroborating the substantial correctness of the foregoing statement.

A Terrible Disguise.

St. Louis Republican

"I don't want you to mention my name," said a gentleman at the City Hall yesterday afternoon, "because a smallpox notoriety is not an enviable one, and it is now some years since I had much to do with the disease. I was a young man with a mania for a study of medicine, and, having no means, I was compelled to earn my living at the same time I was reading. It occurred to me that if I could get a clerkship at one of the hospitals I might study to much better advantage and watch the course of disease as well as assist in surgical operations. I got a job at Bellevue Hospital, New York, and worked as an orderly, or nurse. Then smallpox became prevalent, and I was sent down to the smallpox hospital on the end of Blackwell's Island, opposite Yorkville. Among the patients was one man who had the worst case I ever saw. It was frightful to see him and hear him rave. When he began to recover I paid him a good deal of attention, and we became quite friendly. There was an air of mystery about the man which rather puzzled me, but as he did not tell me much about his affairs I did not ask him to enlighten me. One day he took very sick and grew rapidly worse. I sat by his bed-side by the hour, but he had made up his mind that his time had come, and he was very uneasy. I was about to go off watch in the evening, when he motioned for me to bend over him. He grasped my hand in both his own:

"Promise not to divulge what I am about to tell you until after I am dead."

"'I promise.'

"'Swear it,' said he, faintly.

"'I swear it.'

He was very weak, and I could barely hear what he said, when his hot breath burned my ear.

"'I am—the bank-robber.'

"'What?' I asked dumbfounded.

"'Yes; I've been tracked for two years, and just hounded until I was compelled to embrace this expedient.'

"'What expedient?, I asked.

"'The detectives knew me so well that I could not disguise myself, and I deliberately contracted smallpox in order to get my face pitted and thus alter my looks. You know how well I have succeeded, my face is hideously pocked, and I might have had some rest from the detectives, but I am going to die here, and—

"He was too much exhausted to speak farther, and I bade him lie still and tell me more in the morning. On the morrow he was sinking rapidly and hardly able to speak, but he described a spot near Astoria where he buried $5,000 a year priviously, and asked me to accept it as a mark of his friendship. He died at noon, and two days later I went out to Astoria and found the money, just as as he had said I would. At first I did not know what to do with it, as it was undoubtedly the result of some bank robbery, but I finally concluded to keep it for my own use. I have never told the story before, but those who know the determination of the man would not doubt the veracity of my statement. No, I will not tell you his name."

Millionaire Manners.

Spectator.

The wonder about millionaires is, not that they should be sometimes eccentric, but they are usually so ordinary. Power turns all heads more or less, and the absence of resistance develops wilfulness, till, as we often see in the east, it becomes monstrous caprice. Now, there is no power in modern times which is so like executive volition as that of the millionaire—of the man, we mean, with a really great fortune to use outside his usual wants. He has only to will strongly enough to draw his check, and all mankind is eager to carry out his wishes. Architects, builders, gardeners in hundreds, workmen in tribes, are only too glad that he has been graciously pleased to will. If he is a European, there is hardly anything he cannot obtain, and even time may, with adequate expenditure, be made to give way. It is supposed that the one thing unattainable is a park if there are no trees; but Louis XIV. created a park in a bare plain, with old trees and verdure and silent glades, in a few weeks, though at a cost, which, it is said, daunted even him. The very rich man must know this quite well, and must be aware that there is in him a potentiality of patronage greater than that of most ministers, must recognize his own capacity for sudden and unexplained acquisition; yet millionaires very rarely do anything which at all interests the world, or rouses its horror of the unusual. They are a little obstinate, sometimes, about "making" places. They will spend unheard of sums in perfecting an interior, which would be far more perfect were much less money wasted. They will collect at great cost, something which, when collected, interests no one but themselves. But they very rarely do anything that is striking or magnificent, or even exceptionally odd. Nobody in our days feeds horses out of gold, as Nero did; though one man did build a set of pig-sties of polished mahogany—and kept them polished, too. There is, we believe, one noble in Europe, whose daily dinner is served in Spain, as if he were present, although he is absent in Russia; but that, though so bizarre, is not really exceptional. Scores of men keep up places in such a condition that if they arrived without notice all would be ready, though they know, as well as they know anything, that they are not going there. The readiness gratifies some internal desire to be free upon the subject of going or not, but the money is not regarded. Such freaks pass unnoticed, unless the whim costs something which men with moderate incomes think great, and then the spenders are pronounced half-cracked. Some of our readers know what it costs to keep a steam yacht in harbor in such a condition that on receipt of a telegram steam can be got up, yet that is done in more than one or two cases. It is or may be atrocious waste, but it no more indicates mental aberration than the boat of the retired tradesman which is always painted and washed, and ready, though nothing would induce its proprietor to enter it. The pressure of the usual is felt by the millionaire as much as by everybody else, perhaps more so, because they have in our modern society such a dislike to be conspicuous, and such a self-distrust of their own capability to be original. It will be from America, where fortunes are vast and individuality respected, that we shall before long import millionaires with genuinely savage wills, whose caprices in brick and mortar will make those of the duke of Portland seem very tame.

At the recent royal wedding in England the golden apple for beauty was carried off very easily by the Princess Victoria of Hesse, a charming blonde of 19, daughter of the late Princess Alice of England.

JOCOSITIES.

Three periods of life—youth, mumps; middle age, bumps; old age, dumps.

A famous race-horse is named "Little Brown Jug." He is always full of spirit.

A lawyer is about the only man that ever made anything by opposing a woman's will.

It was Longfellow who slyly described the lady as wearing flowers "on the congregation side of her bonnet."

A boy who was kept after school for bad orthography excused himself to his parents by saying he was spell-bound.

When the man with the bad breath helped himself to butter, the boarders all paused to witness the trial of strength.

Patrick (dressing for a party)—"Be dad, now, and I shan't be able to git on these boots till I've worn them a toime or two."

Young man, don't marry a "gilded butterfly." Marry a good-looking girl. The butter will fly fast enough when you get to housekeeping.

A bald-headed Harlem man, in anticipation of the summer season, has had a spider painted on the top of his head to frighten off the flies.

A man has invented a chair that can be adjusted to eight hundred different positions. It is designed for a boy to sit in when he goes to church.

A great modiste issued the following direction for wearing a new style head gear: "With this bonnet the mouth is worn slightly open."

"The health of Washington!" exclaimed old Mrs. Pinaphor, reading a big headline in a newspaper. "Why, I thought Washington was dead."

It is said that the course of a cannon ball may be turned by contract with a shingle. The shingle likewise has an effect upon the bawl of early childhood.

"Don't you believe in a future life, in which we shall renew the ties that bind us together?" "I do," said the henpecked husband sadly, "but I don't want to."

Arkansas has a mule that will stop kicking if the Lord's Prayer is recited to him. It so amazes him to hear an Arkansas man pray that he forgets all about kicking.

The Topeka Capital says: "Fishing with dynamite has not proved a success." We never thought it would. A flask of rye whisky is the best thing to go fishing with.

It was a man from the great State of Ohio who unpinned a tidy from a chair in a Washington parlor and wiped his nose upon it. We are glad to hear of a man who knew what to do with a tidy.

"You was never hitched into harness with a balky mule, was ye?" said the farmer to a young man who had come to ask his daughter's hand. "No," responded the candidate, doubtfully. "Well, then, don't act as if ye was spilin' for a chance," was all the satisfaction he got.

New York Post: Professor to classical student—"If Atlas supported the world, who supported Atlas?" Student—"The question, sir, has often been asked, but never, so far as I am aware, satisfactorily answered. I have always been of the opinion that Atlas must have married a rich wife, and got his support from her father."

J. M., Memphis: "Would you please tell me if you ever had a bone-felon; and, if so, how did you treat it?" We have never had one; and, if we had, we would not have treated it. Newspaper men never treat. It would be unprofessional to do so. It is the privilege of newspaper men to be treated.

A Philadelphia girl was so thoughtless as to tell a friend that at her wedding the names of the donors would not be displayed with the presents. Of course the friend told. Her wedding came off the other day, and the presents were not displayed either. They consisted of 732 plated sugar spoons and 1,380 salt cellars.

"But why did you leave your last place?" asked Mrs. Brown. "Och, mum," replied the young person, with a toss of her shapeless head, "they was that mean that there was no livin' wid 'em. If you'll belave it, mum, 'twas only yisterday that I wint intil the parlor, and there was two of the gurruls a playing on the one peany, and their father rich enough to buy a dozen and never fale it."

Mr. Diedric Van Prouk was put, in professional parlance, "under board," and everybody said that the widow, in spite of her youth and beauty, would not last long. Her grief was of the Niagara sort, and flowed prodigally and endlessly. She even had her departed carved in wood, life size, and spent many months in its mute companionship. At last, however, the fated successor arrived. The irresistible conqueror made his plea and was accepted. One morning when the servant announced that there was no kindling wood in the house, the widow quietly remarked, in sweetly broken English, "Maype it ish well enough now to split up old Van Prouk vat ish up-stairs."

A Hint to the Wise.

From the Indianapolis Journal.

The Warsaw Indianian very properly calls attention to the rights of county papers, and inveighs against the growing custom of sending patronage of any kind to other cities, when the work can be as well done here as elsewhere. There has been a marked advance in the character of the county newspapers of this State within the past ten or fifteen years. It has more than kept pace with the improvements in city journalism. Connected with these papers there is nearly always a completely equipped printing office. A community is largely judged by its papers. A publisher who has invested his time and means in a good printing establishment, and in putting in his energy, enterprise, and ability in the publication of a creditable newspaper, is entitled to the generous support of the people whose interest he is espousing, and with whose prosperity he is identified. There can be nothing higher than the obligation resting upon every community to accord full support to its local press. That is the way to make it better. Support your own paper first.

THE STATE.

By a change in the channel of White river, a fine flouring mill near Mayesville has been left standing on an island.

Shelby county has abolished the system of holding "teachers' institutes," and will hereafter hold what are called "model schools."

The report of the Richmond city treasurer shows a cash balance of $70,204.52, a sum almost sufficent to pay off the bonded indebtedness of the city.

Dixon M. Hays, a heretofore reputable farmer, living near Brownstown, has been sent to jail on a charge of forging the name of Levi Bridgewater to a note for $82.

Joseph Bryant, aged twelve, was badly, and perhaps fatally hurt, while sliding down the banisters at a New Albany school house, contrary to rules. He fell from the banister to the floor below, a distance of ten feet, striking on the side of the head.

Judge Ferguson, of the New Albany circuit court, has decided that if a note is made drawing ten per cent. interest the holder cannot collect the eight per cent. allowable under agreement, but only the six per cent. legal rate.

Private letters indicate that the remains recently found in a soap-vat at Terre Haute were those of Sylvanus Tate, a former resident of Madison. The theory is that Tate was assaulted, killed, robbed and thrown into the soap boiler to prevent identification.

Colonel Robert Pattison, of Evansville, now at New York, announces that he has just completed arrangements to secure the capital necessary to build the road of which he is vice-president, the Evansville, Seymour & Bellefontaine. Work is to begin at Indianapolis at once.

The Democratic caucus of the city council of New Albany has nominated Sherman Frisbie, an old citizen and Republican, worth $150,000, for chief of police. They went upon the theory that a man of wealth and high standing could not be bought up by the gambling houses and saloons to permit them to run in open violation of law.

Joseph Tridle, of Silver Lake, fired several shots at Dr. Strode the other day, but failed to kill by the interference of outside parties. Strode had left his family and skipped to Warsaw with Tridle's wife. The doctor confessed his intimacy with Mrs. Tridle, and after sending his wife and children to their relatives, decamped for parts unkown.

Charles H. Roberts, a young timber merchant, and Tom Nicholson, a clerk in Nicholson & Brother's book store, at Richmond, put up $5 a-piece that they could each eat the most oranges. At the end of an hour Nicholson had eaten fifty-five and Roberts fifty-three, and Roberts acknowledged himself beaten.

About four miles east of Goshen, in Elkhart county, is a very peculiar case of what may be termed unconscious preaching. Some two years ago Mr. John Kauffman, a farmer, was taken by an illness every Wednesday evening, in which he becomes very nervous and convulsive, after which total unconsciousness would follow, which passes away during the night. During these paroxysms he preaches in German and English with great power. These attacks continue weekly, and his house is, at such times, thronged with visitors.

Judge Horatio C. Newcomb died at Indianapolis Tuesday, aged 61 years. He was one of the best known and most highly esteemed lawyers and public men in the State.

It is reported that Professor Smart, late Superintendent of Public Instruction, is contemplating the establishment of a normal school on a large scale, at Hope, in Bartholomew county.

The Supreme Court has decided that the act of March 17th, 1875, which provides that a person holding public office under the constitution or laws of this State, who becomes intoxicated during office hours, or becomes intoxicated habitually, will thereby forfeit his office, is a constitutional and valid act, and that any citizen of the county where such public officer resides, is entitled to file a complaint in the Circuit Court to have the forfeiture declared.

The State Superintendent of Public Instruction sums up the current school enumeration, and school revenues, as follows: School children in the State, 709,424; amount derived from tax, $787,804.32; interest collected on common school fund since last apportionment, $104,169.09; amount derived from unclaimed fees, $810.86; total amount reported by counties ready for apportionment, $892,804.27. The enumeration of 1881 showed 714,223 school children in the State. The decrease in the number for 1882, the Superintendent attributes to the more reliable plan of making the enumeration this year than heretofore. Neither the state tax nor the interest is so large as a year ago, showing the valuation to be less. The Attorney General turned over to the Superintendent $6,000 of school revenue for apportionment.

FROM THE WIRES.

St. Louis dispatch:

Zoe Watkins, the young lady from Denver who so mysteriously disappeared on Thursday night, is now believed to have gone to Kansas City. Two girls purchased tickets for Kansas City from Claude Wilson, a ticket agent, yesterday morning. On reading an account of the girl's disappearance, Wilson informed the detective who showed him a photograph of the young lady, which he identified. He said her companion had rather a disreputable appearance. It is now believed that the two girls went to Kansas City on last night's train.

The war on the gamblers here now promises to be actively prosecuted. The decision of the Supreme Court of the State in declaring the act making gambling a felony is a great blow to the gamblers. The Sheriff to-day is serving over 450 capiases and lottery men, some of whom have been indicted sixty times by the Grand Jury. At the latest the cases will come up in court early in July. There are over 800 cases altogether on the docket against lottery men and gamblers, and the acting Circuit Attorney says they will be pushed.

A letter from J. S. Oakford, Collector of Customs at Wrangell, Alaska, reports fighting between parties of white men. Several have been killed, and a canoe has been sent to Sitka to ask aid from the United States ship Wachusetts.

Springfield, Ill., dispatch:

At Edwardsville yesterday, during a tight-rope performance, the chimney to which one end of the rope was attached gave way, and the performer and debris fell on the heads of the crowd below. Six boys were injured, two of them, Eddie Berger and Chas. Weber, fatally, their skulls being fractured. The tight-rope performer, although badly hurt, left town.

John McMenemon, a farmer living twelve miles west of Muscatine, Iowa, aged 65, was shot and killed by his 15-year-old daughter yesterday. The father and daughter were quarelling, when the girl's brother, aged 18 years, handed her a revolver, with which she shot her father through the breast. The supposed cause of the murder is that the children desired to get possession of their father's property. The mother is in the insane asylum.

There are new and startling developments in the McMenomon parricide, twelve miles west of here, telegraphed on Saturday. The girl, Mary, who on Saturday declared that she shot her father in self-defense, and her brother and older sister are here in jail. A full confession from the two girls, showing that the murder was committed by the brother, in order that the children might have things their own way at home, and that it was arranged that the youngest sister should acknowledge the shooting, with the idea that the plea of self-defense and extreme youth would save her from punishment, and thus her sister and brother escape punishment also.

Little Rock, Ark., dispatch:

Private advices from Kirbyville, an inland town on the borders of Missouri, report the almost complete extermination of the gang of horse thieves, who for months past have been operating in that section. Some weeks ago three of the gang were lynched in the pinaries. In a recent fight with a posse, one was reported captured, one killed and one fatally wounded. Two survivors are still at large, but are believed to be hemmed in by pursuers along the White river, and cannot escape capture and lynching.

Hartford, Conn., dispatch:

The Faculty of Trinity College last month suspended thirteen members of the Senior class for severely hazing a trio of Sophomores who had published uncomplimentary references to them in a college paper. Now the Faculty has decided that the punishment has been sufficient, and the Seniors will be notified that they will be received back on the 6th of June, in time to prepare themselves for graduation.

Advices from Soham, Upper Egypt, state that the eclipse of the sun was successfully observed at that place yesterday, by English, French and Italian astronomers. A fine comet was discovered close to the sun. Its position was determined by photography. The spectroscopic and ocular observations just before and during the period of totality gave most valuable results. The darkening of the lines observed by the French astronomers, indicating the lunar-atmosphere spectrum of the corona, was successfully photographed for the first time.

Last night an attempt was made to throw a passenger train on the Shore Line road from the track near Madison, Conn. A number of ties were placed on the track and nailed down, and a disaster would have occured to the mail train from New York to Boston, had not a Station Agent, Way, succeeded in signaling the train and stopping it. Parties who obstructed the train fired on Way while he was attempting to remove the obstructions, wounding him slightly.

James C. Hueston, General Agent of the New York Associated Press, has received through the Department of State from the German Government the "Medal for saving from imminent danger." Mr. Hueston rescued Therese Enke from death by drowning, while he was sojourning at Ems, Germany. The medal has on one side a wreath surrounding the words, "Fur rettung aus gefahr." On the reverse side is the head of the Emperor William.

Shenandoah, Pa., May 24.

A terrible explosion occurred this afternoon at R. Heckscher & Co.'s Kohinoor colliery. Six miners have been taken out dead.

ONLY THE DEAD.

PAUL STONE.

Only the dead are great;
While they are here envy and strife
And jealous pride, too surely hide
The good work of their life.
The truly great earn sure, tho' late,
Their praise.

Only the dead are blest—
They earn by death that blessed bourne,
Where shade of eve, nor light of morn,
Can ever bring us rest.
Peace deep and strong to them belongs
Through endless days.

Only the dead are dear;
The best of all surely let fall
The angry word while here.
But dead lips plead for gentle thought
Of tasks now folded hands have wrought.
Dearest the dead of all.

A STORY ABOUT EARS.

An Admirable Substitute for the Snake Romance—The Wonderful Ears of a Tippecanoe County boy

Lafayette Courier.

A strange and wonderful phenomenon has just been brought to our office in the person of little Willie Lester, whose father is a well-to-do farmer on the Wea plains. Willie is only about 10 years old, unusually bright and intelligent for his age, and has always been remarkable in the neighborhood for his wonderful ears. His right one is perfectly immense, being, we should judge, as large as a palm leaf fan, whilst the other is no bigger than the ear of an ordinary-sized wax doll. Until quite recently nothing unusual had ever been noticed in his hearing, but lately he has developed wonderful powers in that direction. With his small ear he can hear the faintest buzzing of the smallest bugs and insects, and can even detect sounds uttered by the minutest animalculæ—so small that they are not even visible to the naked eye. A fly running along a window pane, a caterpillar crawling across a sheet of paper, make sufficient noise to attract his attention, even when his back is turned. The sense of hearing is so acute in this ear that it is absolutely painful to him, and he is compelled to wear a cork in it at all times. The right and large ear is quite the reverse of its little companion in both its powers and properties. To it those minute and near sounds so painfully discernable to the other are lost, but distant noises are readily heard. Although residing fifteen and a quarter miles from any railroad—Lafayette being the nearest point—yet Willie can distinctly hear the trains and mills blowing their whistles, and can easily distinguish between the engine bells. When the Wabash round house blew up some weeks since Willie felt the shock as though he had been in the building itself. He had been unwell for some days and was sleeping later than usual that morning, and when the explosion occurred he sprang from the bed with a frightened scream and holding his ear with both hands stood for some time trembling in the middle of the room. On clear days he has often heard Sheriff Taylor summoning witnesses from the court-house window. He distinctly heard the noise of the mob at Kokomo, Monday night, which was a very clear night. Although unable to make out what they were doing, yet he heard the shouts "Rope's down!" "Time's up!" and heard poor Long sing "See That My Grave is Kept Green," the tune of which Willie at once recognized, and in a low, sweet voice sang the accompaniment, it being quite familiar to him. He can hear the coming of a storm long before there is any sight of it in the air, and even long before the weather bureau gives notice of its approach. At a suggestion of a neighbor, Mr. Lester had a wire gauze lid, with a tin rim, made to fit over Willie's ear. It consists of two thicknesses of gauze, the outer one being of larger mesh than the inner one; between the two there is an intervening thickness of loose flannel to soften sounds. Willie wears it continually, and this with the cork in the small ear has the effect of reducing his hearing to a normal condition. Willie is a handsome, fair-faced, golden-haired little man, exceedingly shy and timid, and any notice taken of him seems to be quite painful to the little fellow. His father and uncle, Mr. Henry Torlburg, brought him to town this morning and to the Courier office this noon. The physicians being apprised of the fact have just been testing his powers, and are in a state of wild excitement over this wonderful freak of nature. Further comment is unnecessary and useless. The imagination has nothing left to add—we cannot gild refined gold or paint the sunbeam. To us the truth is stranger than fiction. We can only write the facts; our pen fails us further than this.

State Assassins and Defense of Insanity.

James W. Clarke, in December Atlantic.

The tragedy of the 2d of July last suddenly revived public interest in an old topic—the defense of insanity in capital cases. It is a well-worn theme, much discussed, and always with an unsatisfactory result. What is moral insanity? What is legal insanity? Conclusive answers to both these questions have often been attempted, but never given with such definiteness and decisiveness as to shut of debate. Every day the controversy is resumed in our courts, and apparently will go on to the end of time. It is settled one day, and the day after we find it not settled at all. "What," said the late Dr. Forbes Winslow, "is my test of insanity? I have none. I know of no unerring, infallible, and safe rule or standard applicable to all cases." So, too, the British judges whose efforts to define the undefinable we shall presently examine at length, after all their elaboration of statement touching what does not constitute legal insanity, finally confessed that "the facts of each particular case must of necessity present themselves with endless diversity, and with every shade of difference in each case." But if it is difficult to define what is legal insanity, which is a mere matter of human law, how much more difficult is it to determine and define what is moral insanity? Dr. Sam Johnson declares that "all power of fancy over reason is a degree of insanity," and Montaigne asserts that between genius and madness there is but "a half turn of the toe." M. Taine concurs in this dictum, and philosophically avers that "insanity is not a distinct and separate empire; our ordinary life borders upon it, and we cross the frontier in some part of our nature."

It has been the periodic mission of the assassin to revive this moot question. One day the world stands and shudders with an unanimous horror, and the next divides upon the old issue—Was he insane? It is oppressively monotonous, in looking back over these historical tragedies, to find how invariably the modern imitator of Brutus comes down to the footlights with a pistol in one hand and a plea of insanity in the other. In American history, so far, we have had only two creatures corresponding to what, in the vocabulary of Europe, would be called regicides. In the first case there was no opportunity offered to the assassin to plead insanity. A vast amount of legal lore and medical metaphysics was forestalled by the summary shooting of Wilkes Booth in the barn where he was brought to bay.

It is, perhaps, worthy of note that not one of the men who have of late murdered, or attempted to murder, Czars or Emperors, have offered the plea of insanity. In Great Britain and the United States it seems to be the assassin's inevitable defense, And in both countries counsel for the accused start with the advantage of being able to ask the jury, as Mr. Cockburn did in the cases both of Pate and McNaughten: "Could they believe that any sane man could have committed such an act?" And that is the question which the tragic event that has recently shocked and saddened both hemispheres once more invests with melancholy importance, and presents for decision to an American jury.

Lucky Sons-in-Law.

[New York letter Post-Dispatch]

The journalistic sons-in-law of rich fathers-in-law are in clover. Whitelaw Reid is said to own the Tribune now independently of Gould with the money of his father-in-law, D. O. Mills, and the story goes that Cyrus W. Field has sold the Express and Mail to John H. Starin, the excursion steamboat man, who will let his son-in-law, Howard Carroll, formerly of the Times, run the paper. It is further reported that Field, disgusted with being called a swindler by newspapers who have attacked the Manhattan Elevated robbery, and with having his Andre monument blown up, has been selling out all his interest in this country to go abroad and to take up his permanent residence among the baronial pleasure seats of the English nobility.

Mineral Deposits in Nevada.

In the barren wastes of Nevada discoveries are constantly being made of vast deposits of salt, soda, nitre, sulphur, etc.; on the desert plains and in the desert hills that are destitute of vegetation, except scattering, stunted sage-brush and grease-wood, 10,000 of which would scarcely sustain an ox, and where a horned toad can scarcely live, are also found gypsum, abestos, silica, kaolin, cinnabar, plumbago, bituminous shale, indications of coal, iron, and many other deposits, as well as veins of copper, antimony, galena, gold, silver, and other metals, all of which, when fully developed, will constitute immense sources of wealth. But little progress has been made of the developement of these valuable deposits solely on account of the want of some cheaper means of transportation than has yet been afforded. But they are coming. Already narrow-guage railroads are being projected and constructed to reach these valuable deposits.

If you feel drowsy, debilitated, have frequent headache, mouth tastes badly, poor appetite and tongue coated, you are suffering from torpid liver, or "biliousness," and nothing will cure you so speedily and permanently as to take SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR or MEDICINE.

The cheapest, Purest and Best Family Medicine in the World.

AN EFFECTUAL SPECIFIC for all diseases of the Liver Stomach and Spleen.

Regulate the Liver and prevent Chills and Fever, Malarious Fevers, Bowel Complaints, Restlessness, Jaundice and Nausea.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common as bad breath, and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons' Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your Appetite, Complexion, and General Health.

PILES!

How many suffer torture day after day, making life a burden and robbing existence of pleasure, owing to the secret suffering from Piles. Yet relief is ready to the hand of almost any one who will use systematically the remedy that has permanently cured thousands. SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR, is no drastic violent purge, but a gentle assistant to nature.

CONSTIPATION!

Should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache.

THE PASTILLE
Prof. Harris' Radical Cure
Trade Mark
FOR NERVOUS DEBILITY

BY YEARS OF USE!

A valuable Discovery and New Departure in Medical Science. A positively effective Remedy for the speedy and permanent Cure for organic weakness—the deplorable disease resulting from indiscreet practices or excesses in youth or at any time of life—by the only true way, viz: Direct Application acting by Absorption, and exerting its specific influence on the Vesicles, Ducts, and Gland, that are unable to perform their natural functions while this disease pervades the human organism. The use of the Pastille is attended with no pain or inconvenience, and does not interfere with the ordinary pursuits of life; it is quickly dissolved and soon absorbed, producing an immediate soothing and restorative effect upon the nervous organizations wrecked from vicious habits or excesses, stopping the drain from the system, restoring the mind to health and sound memory, removing the Dimness of Sight, Confusion of Ideas, Aversion to Society, etc., etc., and the appearance of premature old age usually accompanying this trouble, and restoring the vital forces, where they have been dormant for years. This mode of treatment has stood the test in very severe cases, and is now a pronounced success. Drugs are too much prescribed in this trouble, and, as many can bear witness to, with but little if any permanent good. There is no nonsense about this Preparation. Practical observation enables us to positively guarantee that it will give satisfaction. It has been in general use for several years and we have thousands of testimonials from patients, as to its value, and it is now conceded to be the most rational means yet discovered for reaching and curing this very prevalent trouble, that is well known to be the cause of untold misery to so many, and upon whom quacks prey with their useless nostrums and big fees. The Remedy is put up in neat boxes, of three sizes. No. 1, (enough to last a month,) $3; No. 2, (sufficient to effect a permanent cure, unless in severe cases,) $5; No. 3, (lasting over three months, will restore those in the worst condition,) $7. Sent by mail, in plain wrappers. Full DIRECTIONS for using will accompany EACH BOX.

Send for Sealed Descriptive Pamphlets giving Anatomical Illustrations and Testimony, which will convince the most skeptical that they can be restored to perfect health, and the vital forces thoroughly re-established same as if never affected. Sold ONLY by

Unsolicited testimony to the Efficacy of Prof. Harris' Pastilles, taken from Letters received from Patrons:

Indiana, April 11, '78.—The Remedy is working perfectly. Had suffered from weakness, five years past.

Iowa, Oct. 10th, '78.—I am almost surprised at your Pastilles. They have worked like a charm on me. I am just twice as much of a man as I was before taking. I was on the verge of the grave, I thought, and there was no cure for me, but now I am in good hopes for a cure.

West Virginia, Aug. 28, 1879.—I received your medicine and I believe it has cured me, for which I am very thankful. Inclosed find $5. Please send me another box for a friend. You have done a great thing for me. I will send you all the orders I can.

From a Physician and Surgeon.

Missouri, June [illegible].—Please forward me another box of the Pastilles. The patient on whom I have used most of one box, in addition to a sample box, is fast recovering and I think another will set him all right.

SAMARITAN
NERVINE

SAMARITAN NERVINE

Cures Epileptic Fits, Spasms, Convulsions, St. Vitus Dance, Vertigo, Hysteria, Insanity, Apoplexy, Paralysis, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, and all Nervous Diseases. This infallible remedy will positively eradicate every species of Nervous Derangement, and drive them away from whence they came, never to return again. It utterly destroys the germs of disease by neutralizing the hereditary taint or poison in the system, and thoroughly eradicates the disease and utterly destroys the case.

SAMARITAN NERVINE

Cures Female Weakness, General Debility, Leucorrhœa or Whites, Painful Menstruation, Ulceration, of the Uterus, Internal Heat, Gravel, Inflammation of the Bladder, Irritability of the Bladder. For Wakefulness at Night, there is no better remedy. During the change of life no Female should be without it. It quiets the Nervous System and gives rest, comfort and nature's sweet sleep.

SAMARITAN NERVINE

Cures Alcoholism, Drunkness and the habit of Opium Eating. These degrading habits are by far the worst evils that have ever befallen suffering humanity. Thousands die annually from these noxious drugs. The drunkard drinks liquor not because he likes it, but for the pleasure of drinking and treating his friends, little thinking that he is on the road to ruin. Like the Opium Eater, he first uses the drug in small quantities as a harmless antidote. The soothing influence of the drug takes strong hold upon its victim leading him on to his own destruction. The habits of Opium Eating and Liquor Drinking are precisely what eating is to alimentiveness, as over-eating first inflames the stomach, which redoubles its craving until it paralyzes both the stomach and appetite. So every drink of liquor or dose of opium, instead of satisfying, only adds to its fierce fires, until it consumes the vital force and then itself. Like the gluttonous tape-worm, it cries "Give, give, give!" but never enough until its own rapacity devours itself. Samaritan Nervine gives instant relief in all such cases. It produces sleep, quiets the nerve, builds up the nervous system, and restores body and mind to a healthy condition.

SAMARITAN NERVINE

Cures Nervous Dyspepsia, Palpitation of the Heart, Asthma, Bronchitis, Scrofula, Syphilis, diseases of the Kidneys and all diseases of the urinary organs. Nervous debility, caused by the indiscretions of youth, permanently cured by the use of this invaluable remedy. To you, young, middle-aged and old men, who are covering your sufferings as with a mantle by silence look up, you can be saved by timely efforts, and make ornaments to society, and jewels in the crown of your Maker, if you will. Do not keep the secret longer, until it saps your vitals, and destroys both body and soul. If you are thus afflicted, take Dr. Richmond's Samaritan Nervine. It will restore your shattered nerves, arrest premature decay, impart tone and energy to the whole system.

SAMARITAN NERVINE

is for sale by druggists everywhere, or may be had direct from us. Those who wish to obtain further evidence of the curative properties of Samaritan Nervine will enclose a 3-cent postage stamp for a copy of our Illustrated Journal of Health, giving hundreds of testimonials of cure from persons who have used the medicine, and also their pictures photographed after their restoration to perfect health. Frank James in St. Louis.

It was reported last evening, on reliable authority, that Frank James, brother of the dead Jesse James, was in the city stopping at the house of a friend. It was said that he arrived Friday evening, in advance of Mrs. Jesse James, who is now at the Southern. It is known almost to a certainty, that he communicated with her yesterday, not only a letter having been received by Mrs. James from him, but a check or draft for $50. The latter was borne for delivery to her by an old member of the James gang, by the name of Monyhan, while the message was left at the hotel by a boy. Monyhan was recognized while leaving the Southern by a gentleman who has met him in the past and knows him well. No words were exchanged, Monyhan hurrying out as though anxious to avoid scrutiny.

The young lady with Mrs. James, registered as Miss Blake, is now said positively, is not the wife of Frank James, as supposed, but a half-sister of a resident of Kansas City. The whereabouts of Frank James is a profound mystery, although from the best information, it would seem that he is in the south part of the city. Mrs. Jesse James refuses to speak of him in any way, saying that she does not think it would be right for her to do so.—Globe Democrat.

A Beautiful Tribute.

The following is a description of the floral offerings which were placed upon the casket that contained the remains of Judge Jas. H. Carpenter, during the funeral exercises Sunday last:

The pillow prepared by the business men of the railroad of this place manifested excellent taste in the arrangement.

It was composed of a variety of most beautiful flowers. The back-ground was of carnation-pinks and was surrounded with white roses. In each corner a beautiful calla-lily, and in the center of each side and end there was a white-lily. In the center of the pillow was the significant motto in purple myrtle blossoms: "At Rest."

A raised wreath of rose geraniums, white roses, calla-lilies and white blossoms, tastefully arranged, so as to form the letter C. was prepared by Miss Bliss and Miss Addie McCarty.—Garrett Herald.

The repuplicans have at last accomplished their work of gerrymandering in Ohio, Pennsylvania, Minnesota, Kansas, Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa and Michigan. One million, eight hundred and sixty-six thousand, four hundred republican voters will have 90 congressman, while one million six hundred and forty-one thousand, twohundred voting democrats have twenty-one congressmen. Only by disfranchisement, protection of thieves who gave freely of their swag to buy the principle of purchaseable men, and perjury black as night, does that party expect to maintain itself in power. Its great secretary stands a convicted and recognized felon, while the greatest infidel of the age defends him and laughs with scorn and defiance at the courts that pretend to mete out justice and even his dismissal from the management of the party is not asked. Belknap goes free. Howgat has been allowed, to escape, Robeson wields the party lash in congress, and Boss Shepherd breathes free air as well as every perjured villian who helped steal the presidency for Hays. The picture is complete. No shades could make it darker. Will the people allow it to go on until they drink the bitterest drop from the cup of the destroying angel?—[Columbia City Post.

"Brick" Pomeroy is making his 8 page paper—"Pomeroy's Great West"—hotter, livelier, better and meaner than ever. He has made a big hit with it in Denver, the wonderful city of Colorado, and appears to be spending much of the money he is making out of his mines on the paper. His Saturday Chapters are the best of its great features and open up new fields of thought. His Parson Pomeroy's Sermons are red hot, and if published in book form, will outsell Bunyan's Pilgrim Progress, or the Innocents Abroad. How he dare print such sermons is a mystery, but he does. But little that is going on escapes his attention. The mining interests of Colorado receive extra attention, as this great and profitable industry in that state is so rapidly looming up. Pomeroy's Great West is worth more than the price—$2.00 per year—and if you wish something original, independent and very interesting, send for it. Address, MARK M. POMEROY, Denver, Colorado.

Land in the more common streets of New York is worth $250,000 to $350,000 per acre. In the best part of Broadway it is $2,000,000 per acre, and the corner of Wall and Broad streets, the most valuable corner on the continent, was recently sold at the rate of $14,000,000 per acre. Values are even greater in London. In New York property is sold by the foot front; in London by the square foot.

Living Witnesses.

The hundreds of hearty and healthy looking men, women and children, that have been rescued from beds of pain, sickness and well nigh death by Parker's Ginger Tonic are the best evidences in the world of its sterling merit and worth. You will find such in almost every community.

A man was once asked how he and his wife got along with so little friction in the family machinery. "Well," said he, "when we were first married we both wanted our own way. I wanted to sleep on linen sheets, my wife preferred cotton, and we couldn't agree. Finally we talked the matter over, and came to the conclusion that it was unchristian to live in constant bickering; so we compromised on linen, and have got along all right ever since.—[Quiz.

Town Ordinance.

An ordinance to compel the owners of lots and parts of lots in the incorporated town of Auburn, in DeKalb county, state of Indiana, therein named to construct certain sidewalks, whereas it is the opinion of the board of trustees of the incorporated town of Auburn, in DeKalb county, state of Indiana, that public convenience requires the construction of sidewalks along the streets and adjoining the lots and parts of lots hereinafter mentioned; therefore,

SECTION 1.—Be it ordained by the board of trustees of the incorporated town of Auburn, in DeKalb county, state of Indiana, that the owners and persons in possession of and claiming to own as hereinafter named, thereinafter described lots and parts of lots in said town, shall, within thirty days from the taking effect of this ordinance, build and construct along and adjoining the lots and parts of lots they may own or are in possession of and claiming to own where the said lots or parts of lots front upon and adjoin the street named, a sidewalk of good and sound pine plank one and one-half inches thick and twelve inches wide, to be laid lengthwise and to be placed upon sleepers of sound white oak timber not less than three by five inches in width and thickness, and placed not more than three feet apart; said walks to be four feet wide and built on a grade with the street and alley crossings; said walks to be built along the street and in front of and adjoining the following named lots and parts of lots, to-wit:

The west end of lot No. one (1) in Kuhlman's second addition, on VanBuren street, owned by Alex M. Richards.

The west end of lot No. two (2) in Kuhlman's second addition, on VanBuren street, owned by Alfred Kelley and Julia A. Sherlock.

The west side of the west one-half of lot No. five (5) in Kuhlman's second addition, on VanBuren street, owned by Winfield S. Bangs and Charles Groscop.

The west end of lot No. ten (10) in Kuhlman's first addition, on VanBuren street, owned by Caleb Neal.

The west end of lot No. eleven (11) in Kuhlman's first addition, on VanBuren street, owned by John Miser.

The west end of lot No. twelve (12) in Kuhlman's first addition, on VanBuren street, owned by James Moore.

The west end of lot No. thirteen (13) in Kuhlman's first addition, on VanBuren street, owned by John Hartman.

The west end of lot No. fourteen (14) in Kuhlman's first addition, on VanBuren street, owned by John N. Meyers.

The west end of lot No. fifteen (15) in Kuhlman's first addition, on VanBuren street, owned by Mary Seward.

THE ÆTNA IS THE SAFEST, STRONGEST AND BEST POWDER

IN THE WORLD FOR

REMOVING STUMPS AND STONES!

It is unnecessary to tell a farmer his land is more valuable without the stump than with them. He knows that now. What he wants to know is the Best Quickest and Cheapest method of removing them, and that question we answer by saying, BLAST THEM OUT WITH ÆTNA POWDER. Any stump, large or small, green or decayed, can be thrown entirely out of the ground and broken into pieces small enough to handle.

If you have any stumps, send us your address and we will send you a man to do your work, or will sell you the powder and tools so you can do it yourself Don't delay, but attend to it at once.

Pre-Electric Telegraphs.

When it was signalling as a mode of communication was first adopted, no amount of research can ascertain. We find it difficult to conceive of a time when it was not convenient, if not necessary, and when human ingenuity was incapable of providing it.

One of the earliest recorded systems of telegraphy for signalling over long distances originated among the African negroes, and has been practiced by them from time immemorial. The means used were telephonic, the signals being read by sound, and not by the eye.

The "ellicmbic," as the instrument is termed, is still in existance, and used in the Cameroons country, on the west coast of Africa. By the sounds produced on striking it, the natives carry on conversation with great rapidity, and at several miles distance. The noises are made to produce a perfect and distinct language, as intelligible to the operator as that uttered by the human voise.

It is hardly necessary to add that the existance of this contrivance, capable of such useful effects, implies evolution probably carried on through a series of ages, from devices which, we may presume, originated in the very infancy of human society.

One of these still prevails in Montenegro, where, when a shepherd in the mountains finds himself in want of society, he sends out at random a peculiar kind of a yell, with a view of attracting the attention of any one similarly situated who may chance to be within hearing. It is well known at what a distance shrill sounds may be distinctly heard in the mountainous regions. The unseen friend, whose ears have caught the sound, responds the same way, and then begins a dialogue about their flocks and herds, or any other country gossip.

In saying that signalling by sound probably anticipated all other methods of telegraphing, we are simply saying that the most natural and obvious mode of communication, namely, that by means of the voice, was the first made of service in the rapid transmission of intelligence over long distance.

The employment of objects to be seen was a later expression of human ingenuity, intended to better answer the demand for easy and far-reaching communication. And what better for this purpose than fire—a ready servant and the most available for its conspicuousness; real even in the glare of day, and made intense by surrounding darkness during the night.

Semaphoric signalling contrivances were in use in various countries down to within a half century of the present year (1880). That employed by the English admiralty was not abolished until the end of the year 1847.

In contrast with the convenience of the electric telegraph it was cumbrous and costly. The expense of working and mounting the line from London to Portsmouth was three thousand three hundred pounds ($16,500) per annum.

Though of great service to the government, it was, of course only available in clear weather. Vexations interruptions continually took place, and droll accidents occasionly resulted from the sudden cessations of communication, because of a fog or similar cause, during the transmission of a message.

When, for example, the British army was fighting under Wellington, in Spain, news was anxiously expected from that great commander through the admiralty signals. The public was in a feverish excitement, when one day the disastrous message was received: "Wellington defeated".

The funds were violently agitated, the people and the government were bewildered and terrible rumors of enormous slaughter and great loss of guns, colors, and ammunition were heard on all sides. It turned out, however, that just as the word "defeated" had been deciphered at some part of the line, a sudden mist had come on and cut off the remainder of the message. When this inopportune visitor had passed away, the public mind was instantly relieved with the news that the message was not "Wellington defeated," but "Wellington defeated the French."—From Telegraphic Tales and Telegraphic History.

THE RADICAL AND POPULAR CHANGES THE B. & O. HAS MADE IN ITS SCHEDULE OF EAST-BOUND TRAINS.

The change of time which went into effect May 21st on the B. & O. is quite a radical one. The morning train which heretofore has been more of an accommodation than an express train now becomes a flyer—one of the fastest in fact in the country. Leaving Chicago at 8:10 in the morning so rapidly is distance annihilated that Washington is reached the following day shortly after noon and seven hours in advance of any other day train out of Chicago. This new order of things will be of an immense advantage to those who desire to spend a half day in Washington en route to New York. By taking this Washington flyer one may have an entire afternoon and evening at the National Capital and then taking the B. & O. night train for New York arrive in the metropolis bright and early the next morning. Or should the desire be to keep right on he may have the pleasure of passing through Washington in full sight of the capitol and other public buildings and reach New York the same evening. To this train will be attached the magnificent new B. & O. sleepers and parlor cars. The afternoon train under the new schedule leaves at ten minutes past five. This is the noted solid train there being no change of cars any class whatever from Chicago to New York via Washinfton, Baltimore and Philadelphia. This train is also a daisy when it comes to making time as it arrives in Washingtc the succeeding evening an entire night ahead of the late afternoon trains on other lines. To it are attached not only spacious elegant sleepers but perfectly appointed dining cars as well and in which are served meals famed as being beyond all comparison the finest known on wheels in the north-west. The night train under the new schedule will at once gain a popularity which will [illegible] of putting it on. Heretofore the great inconvenience has been all the eastern lines that trains left at an hour which prevented one from getting any benefit or pleasure whatever out of the evening. Now the B. & O. will have a train leaving at ten minutes of eleven at night in good times to afford all who so choose to spend the evening with friends or at places of amusement. In common with the trains named this late train will not let grass grow under her as she arrives at Washington early the second morning, Baltimore an hour later, Philadelphia before noon and New York in a fine season for dinner. Of course this train has sleeping cars attached and every convenience and luxury which money can command.

This new schedule is without question the best in every way the B. & O. has ever had out of Chicago and in many respects cannot be equaled by any other trunk line. There is no gainsaying the fact that when it comes to Washington as an objective point there is no line that can compare with the B. & O. and can ever beat the other into the National Capital all the way from a half day to an entire night. As for Baltimore, Philadelphia and New York travel it certainly has no reason to take a back seat as the saying goes as it possesses advantages in reaching the cities named which are unsurpassed. From a picturesque stand point its attractions are equalled by no line in existance and being the only route between the east and the west via Washington it is by the B. & O. only that a visit be made at the National Capital en route to New York without an extra expense as to fare and increased hours of travel.

A converted Indian chief gave his sixty-four pale-face scalps to his son with the remark that it almost severed his heart strings to part with these cheerful mementoes of the happy days agone; but he was growing old apace—the sundown of his life was almost at hand, and he would turn to the Bible for that sweet peace that passeth all understanding—and, besides, the pale-face government foisted so many bald-headed Indian agents upon the dusky child of the forest that he was disgusted with the whole scalping business. And yet some editors libel the noble red man by declaring that the only good Indian is a dead Indian.

HOUSE FOR SALE.—A good house and lot on south VanBuren street. For terms, address, Alvin Weyer, Orland, Indiana. 20-4t.

Mount Vernon.

During the war, says a Washington letter, while the bloodiest battles on the Potomac were being fought, the southern and northern troops fraternized on this spot, and not a shot was fired nor a blow exchanged on the domain of Mount Vernon. It was neutral ground. The soldiers exchanged coffee and tobacco and lolled amicably together under the trees, then went back to shooting and killing each other as soon as they were off the sacred ground. The most irreverent scoffer must walk with reverence through the ancient frame house in which so much of our history is embalmed. Hanging in the hall is the great key of the Bastile, sent to Washington by Lafayette, and near it is the General's field-glass hung on its rack by Washington himself and never disturbed. Of all the memories of Mount Vernon, none are more interesting than those of Eleanor Curtis—poor Nelly, who died at 22, and was her stepfather's pet. In one room stands her harpsichord, an immense machine, just the size of a grand piano of the present day, with two banks of keys like an organ. Beside it are some ancient blue chairs embroidered by her dead fingers a century ago. In the grounds stands her rose-bush, beside which, tradition says, she received her first offer, and which the guileless and credulous of her sex are persuaded to walk around six times, to bring a similar event about. One of the ingenuities of the Regents of Mount Vernon was to have magnificent Turkish rugs made to resemble, as far as possible, the rag carpets which were the floor coverings in Martha Washington's day, and for that purpose scraps of the rag carpets were sent abroad to be as nearly simulated as possible. And way up high, under the roof, in a little hip-roofed, dormer-windowed rookery, which, after Gen. Washington's death, his widow chose as her own room, because it was from that window only, that a view could be had of the hideous brick tomb in which the mortal part of the General lay.

The national banks aspire to the control of the entire currency of the republic. They favor the demonetization of the silver dollar, and if they can accomplish that they are determined to bring their vast money power to bear upon congress and arrest the coinage of the standard dollar. They are opposed to reducing the interest on the public debt because they want to collect a high rate of interest on their bonds deposited for their circulation and they do not hesitate to intimidate congress or attempt intimidation, and when that fails they seek to accomplish their purpose by purchasing votes of such venial villains as R. B. Hayes. It is said, in regard to the special privileges granted to national banks, that

1. The government holds their bonds in safe-keeping for them without charging them a cent for the favor.

2. It collects the interest on their bonds from the people and pays it over to them free of charge.

3. It furnishes them with $900 of band notes as a free gift to loan out for every $1,000 of bonds they deposited with the government.

4. It allows them to draw interest on their bonds (i. e. the people's bonds) and their own bank notes at the same time—a twofold interest.

5. It imposes no tax either on their bonds or on their money, but exacts that much more off the people.

6. It places $800,000,000 of the people's money, called "the deposits," in their possession to speculate on and establish banks on.

7. It allows them to draw interest both on what the government (the people) owe them and what they owe the people.

8; It authorizes the treasurer to pay them one year's interest in advance that they may have it to speculate on.

9. A law enacted for their special benefit on June 20, 1874, authorizes them, after they have flooded the country with their notes, and inflated prices of all property to high figures, to suddenly contract their circulation, and thus contract and prostrate business and ruin the country.

10. The law (January 19, 1875,) authorized them, after they have invested very largely in the property they have thus reduced to half price, to inflate their circulation again and raise prices so that they can make larger fortunes by selling at high prices the property they had bought up for a trifling sum.—Sentinel.

Siberia.

No country in the world, except, perhaps, the valleys of the Amazon and the Mississippi, has such a perfect system of water communication as Siberia. The Lena is the third greatest river in Asia. It flows for 2,500 miles, draining a region of 800,000 square miles. The The Obi is still longer. It flows for 3,000 miles, draining an area of 1,300,000 square miles—1,900 miles long, and 1,200 miles across—a country only inferior in extent to that through which roll the Amazon and La Plata, in South America. But the Yenessei is the river to which in the future most commerce will resort; for, though rather less than the Obi, and farther to the east, it is more easily reached from Europe. It rises among the hills on the confines of China, and after coursing through half of Asia, falls into the Arctic ocean, 2,000 miles away. All of these rivers are navigable, even for large vessels, and their valleys are abundant in wheat, minerals, cattle, timber and other products.

How to Cook Rice.

Rice is becoming a much more popular article of food than heretofore. It is frequently substituted for potatoes at the chief meal of the day, being more nutritious and much more readily digested. At its present cost, it is relatively cheaper than potatoes, oatmeal or grain-grits of any kind. In preparing it only just enough cold water should be poured on to prevent the rice from burning at the bottom of the pot, which should have a close-fitting cover, and with a moderate fire the rice is steamed rather than boiled until it is nearly done; then the cover is taken off, the surplus steam and moister allowed to escape, and the rice turns out a mass of snow-white kernels, each separate from the other, and as much superior to the usual soggy mass, as a fine mealy potato is superior to the water-soaked article.

Sitting Down on Mrs. Simpson.

[Little Rock Gazette.]

The other day a colored lady of standing, Mrs. Simpson, purchased a Gainsborough [illegible] Mrs. Fennel. It was evident that Mrs. Simpson possessed a few airs which she wished to display over Mrs. Fennel. "My husband," said Mrs. Simpson, "wanted me ter get a finer hat den dis, but reflecting dat de $20 bills in de bottom of de drawer was gettin' sorter scarce like, I concluded to content myself wid a $5 hat." Wall, yer was savin'," remarked Mrs. Fennel, and then stepping to the door, exclaimed, "Tiddy, take dat $1,000 bill away from dat chile. He tore up two yesterday. Dar ain't no sense in allowin' chillun ter 'stroy money in dat way." Mrs. Simpson retired, realizing that her hat was a failure.

A slight mistake: He came up a little late, stepped in without ringing, and striding softly along into the parlor, dropped into an easy chair with the careless grace of a young man who is accustomed to the programme. "By Jove!" he said to the figure sitting in dim obscurity on the sofa, "By Jove! I thought I was never going to see you again. Your mother never goes away from the house nowadays. Does she Minnie?" "Well not amazingly frequently," cheerfully replied the old lady from the sofa. Minnie's away so much of her time now that I have to stay in."—Rubber Era.

A sad story of Cannibalism comes from New Britain. A Fijian teacher's wife and two children set out for the house of a friend, about three miles distant from their residence, and the natives killed and roasted the children preparatory to eating them at one of their "feasts." The woman escaped into the bushes, and was found, after roaming about for eighteen days, a living skeleton.

Bishop Nulty, of the Meath diocese Ireland, read a letter which he received from Michael Davitt to his assembled clergy. It violently denounced landlordism, declared in favor of home rule, and was enthusiastically received.

Sir Wilfred Lawson protested in Parliament against the Liberal Cabinet upholding the integrity of the Ottoman Empire, and demanded a pledge that force should not be used in Egypt. Gladstone said it was impossible to comply with the demand, and intimated it was unlikely that force would be necessary.

The condition of Egypt is extremely critical, owing to the absence of an administrative government. All precautions for watering the crops have been abandoned, and farm laborers are scarce, being carried away under conscriptions. The soldiery have terrorized the rural districts, and the protection of the English Consul General has been asked for by the fear-stricken people.

A lively tilt occurred in the House of Commons between Gladstone and Dillon. The Premier spoke with great warmth, and accused Dillon of indorsing outrages in Ireland by refusing to aid the government in passing the repression bill. Dillon retorted that he had always denounced the outrages, and asserted that evictions only incited to the commission of crime.

Job Winslp, in Rush county, has a mare that gave birth, last week, to twins—one a mule and the other a horse colt.

John Woodard, charged with outraging a small girl at Decatur, has been held to answer in $5,000 and safely locked up. It is not his first offense, it is said.

Noah Hagerman, a married man of Warsaw, aged fifty years, has been arrested on a charge of outraging a little German girl nine years of age. The evidence is very damaging.

It is reported that oil in paying quantities has been discovered at a depth of six hundred feet in Washington township, Carrol county. The alleged "strike" was made on the farm of Mr. Appleton.

The jury in the case of the negro Mabry, who killed Pat O'Meara near Fort Wayne the other day, brought in a verdict of not guilty. The negro was set upon by three unknown men, and did the killing in self-defense.

Henry Hart, employed in the machine shop of the Ohio Falls car-works, at Jeffersonville, while at work became entangled in the machinery, and all of the clothing was torn from his body. He managed to escape further injury, excepting a few scratches on the arm.

Louis Kuhns, confined in the county jail at Anderson for shooting Samuel Young, escaped on Sunday. His wife and a colored man visited him in jail and blacked him up as a darkey, and the turnkey allowed him to pass out with his wife without suspicion.

A black bear in the zoological garden at Glen Miller park, Richmond, broke from its quarters and joined a picnic party from one of the public schools. It played with the children until the teachers saw it and called some men, who chased it into an enclosure with pitchforks and then shot it.

Job Kramer, a sixteen-year-old son of one of the leading citizens of Laporte, while attempting an experiment in the chemistry class of the high school, was terribly injured by a jar of potassium which exploded, destroying his eyesight and horribly disfiguring him.

A bachelor named Tait, residing near Wabash, has for many years declined to dispose of any of the wheat produced on his farm, believeing that a famine will visit the land in the distant future, and that he will then need every pound of his wheat to supply the wants of the family he expects to have by that time.

Mrs. S. H. Chase, of Bristol, Elkhar county, seems to be a desperately plucky woman. An officer attempted to arrested her when she produced a revolver and attempted to shoot him. She was disarmed, and then she escaped from custody and jumped into the river, where she was found with her feet on the bank and her head under water. She was resuscitated, and held for trial.

Monday night, Mr. Richley, of Circleville, was aroused from his slumbers by a burglar going through his rooms. He pretended sleep till the fellow turned his back, and then, seizing a pistol, captured him. The thief had $500 in money and several bank drafts. He is a German, and claims to be the erring boy of a father who put up the money found on his person. He is in jail waiting the grand jury.

In the case of Russell, who was hanged till he was half dead by vigilants in Floyd county, the jury brought in a verdict in his favor and against Ludwell Elliott, Wm. A. Elliott, James Elliott and Lemuel Hays for $1,500. Samuel Taylor was found innocent of participation in the outrage. The jury, with one exception, was in favor of an $8,000 verdict, but the one held out and carried his point. The costs willamount to $2,500.

THE banking house of Woolen, Webb & Co., at Indianapolis, has made an assignment for the benefit of its creditors. Hon. Frank Landers is the assignee.

THE Supreme Court has decided, in a test case, that $2,000,000 may be expended in the erection of the new State house directly, and that incidental expenses, such as salaries, rents, etc., are not to be deducted from that amount.

THE project of dividing the Episcopal Church in Indiana into two dioceses, which was agitated sometime ago, is again under consideration, with a strong probability of being carried into effect. The plan is to locate the second see at Fort Wayne, with Trinity Church of that city as the Cathedral, and a fund of $30,000 for the endowment of the Episcopate is now being raised.

She will accompany the lecturer, and, with her two children, sit upon the stage while the lecture is being delivered. The funds so raised, it is stated, will be used to educate the children, one a boy named after his father and aged 7, and the other a girl aged 5. Mrs. James is now keeping house in Kansas City, Mo. Recently she had pictures of her two children taken. These, with pictures of her husband, are being extensively sold, and are bringing considerable money to her.

FROM WASHINGTON

The figures furnished by the Census Bureau show Chicago to be the [illegible] manufacturing city in America. Its annual product is double that of boastful Boston; more than double that of St. Louis; two and a half times that of Cincinnati; three times that of Baltimore, and nearly equal to that of St. Louis, Cincinnati and Pittsburgh combined.

There is a good deal of criticism of the Geneva Award bill by disinterested parties. It is said it will permit the payment of money to parties with no equitable claim.

Blaine's trip to Cincinnati is supposed to be in reference to the new railroad line from Baltimore to Cincinnati, in which he is said to have a large interest. The first payment on the section of road purchased was made yesterday.

There is a good deal of indignation among Republicans, here over General Young's course in absenting himself at this time, when so great an effort is being made to get a quorum. He was brought in by the Sergeant-at-Arms a few days ago to help make a quorum, and, it is said, went home much annoyed, and declared he wouldn't return until after Decoration Day. The Republicans are talking seriously of sending the Sergeant-at-Arms to Cincinnati for him. The Congressional Committee is stirred up over his course, and it is broadly intimated that if Young is nominated or elected again in his district, it will be without the aid of the committee.

Pay Inspector Joseph A. Smith is to be appointed Chief of the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing, with the rank and pay of Paymaster General of the Navy.

Vice Admiral Stephen C. Rowan will be appointed Superintendent of the Naval Observatory, vice Rear Admiral Rodgers, deceased.

It is said that the report of the committee investigating Blackburn's charges of crookedness in the collection of war claims through War Department clerks, that while it will show fraudulent practices of some years past, it develops nothing of recent occurrence.

It is pretty well settled that Felker's effort to get Doyle's sentence set aside will not be successful, and that Doyle will go to the Penitentiary when the month expires. Felker's caim that the vignettes turned over to the department are originals stolen from the department is not believed, but it is suspected of being a dodge to save Doyle.

The reports from South America show that the Peruvian Government is still clinging to the hope that this Government will come to the front to prevent Chili swallowing that republic.

It is believed here that Blaine's new railroad to Cincinnati will make an alliance with the new owners of the Cincinnati, Hamilton and Indianapolis, thus giving a new through line from Baltimore to Cincinnati.

It is quite probable that the remains of Thomas Jefferson will be removed from Monticello to the cemetery here, as the ground where they now lie is claimed by private parties, and the government is unwilling to erect the proposed monument under such circumstances.

Mrs. Christiancy is reported flying about the city in a rather questionable manner with parties who have been charged with too near relations to her Shipherd is still here, trying to draw mileage and witness fees. He threatens publications that will make a sensation, but nobody is alarmed.

The public begins to realize that its chance at Guiteau will soon be over. Many are anxious to see him, and as $10 is offered for that privilage, but without avail.

It is said that ex-Vice President Wheeler, of New York; Alexander Mitchell, of Wisconsin; J. L. Hayes, of Massachusetts; H. W. Oliver, of Pittsburg, Pa.; J. Hale Sypher, of Louisiana, and R. B. Porter, are the gentlemen determined upon for the Tariff Commission.

Senator Butler, just returned from South Carolina, says that he has never seen such a large crop of wheat and fruit there as now.

Hon. Russell Errett, of Pennsylvania, met with quite a serious accident this morning, by being thrown from a coach. He was about alighting from the coach at the entrance to the House, when the driver started his horse suddenly, causing Errett to lose his balance, and he was thrown head first against the granite stone under the archway, receiving a very severe cut across the nose and cheeks. It is thought his nose is broken. Mr. Errett is lying in the room of the Committee of Ways and Means. Physicians have been summoned to attend him.

There is an earnest demand on the part of the sugar and railroad interests for a tariff bill to be passed this session to relieve them. Particularly is this true of the duty on Bessemer steel, which the West is clamoring to have removed, that railroad building may be pushed. It is urged that everything is known after the Tariff Commission had done its work. It is probable that a bill to this effect will be introduced, but it is scarcely likely to pass.

The bill providing for a Territorial government in Alaska comes up in the Senate Tuesday, and will probably pass.

The contents of that "mysterious room" at Cononhet have arrived, addressed "Kate Chase Sprague." Her friends denounce as untrue the extravagant statement as to the value of these articles. They say that instead of being worth thousands, they don't amount to over $100, as she was unwilling to spend money while laborers were suffering for money due from the bankrupt estate of her husband.

Judge Curtis, of New York, the chief counsel in the defense in the celebrated Buford trial in Kentucky, has been engaged to defend Solteldo, who is charged with killing his brother in the fight at the Republican office, in this city some time ago.

The Secretary of the Treasury this afternoon issued a call for $15,000,000 continued sixes of the series of March 3, 1863, which mature August 1. There are about $47,000000 in bonds of this issue outstanding, and after this amount is exhausted, calls will be issued for the continued fives.

Secretary Teller announces his policy regarding the Indians as adverse to dictation from church or philanthropic organizations. He favors liberal expenditures for education, the granting of patents to the tribes for their lands, and the making of the Indian self-supporting, but relieving him of his gun, and issuing lumber instead of tent materials.

Captain Eads has given up hope of getting his ship railway project through this session. He left a representative here to attend to his interests during his absence in Europe, but there is no hope that the bill will get through this session. He will make a preliminary effort to enlist European capital in support of the project while abroad.

Secretary Folger says he expects to continue to call in the bonds at the rate of fifteen millions per month. He has not yet determined on his course regarding the forty-nine millions outstanding of 6 per cents., as he may fund them at 3 per cent. instead of calling them in, and thus help out the banks. He will decide on this in a few days.

Germany is about to take lessons of the United States regarding its postal management. The Post Director of Bremen is on his way here to study our system. The Postal Committee is being urged to adopt a postal card with flexible cover to conceal the message. It is claimed it will not cost more than the present system.

The Senate committee to investigate the alleged whisky ring held its first session this morning. Only one witness, William H. Thomas, of Kentucky, was examined, and nothing was elicited to sustain the charges of corruption against the distillers. Mr. Thomas went into a long statement of the difference between highwines and bourbon and rye whiskies, and then gave some facts in regard to the National Distillers' Association, which was organized in 1880, to secure the passage of the Carlisle bill. It has no money on hand. The President was paid $600, the Treasurer $600, and the Secretary $1,500 a year. The witness stated emphatically that no newspaper correspondent had ever approached him for money to support the bill extending the bonded period, nor did he know of any lobbyist working in its interest. He had no knowledge of any money being used improperly. Col. Wharton was the only representative of the association at the Capitol. It is generally believed that the investigation will amount to nothing. Mr. Widom is by no means as confident as when he demanded an investigation. It is rumored that his informant of alleged corruption does not come up with his promised facts, and the ex-Secretary appears to think he may have been deceived.

The President had received so many communications urging the veto of the Geneva Award bill that he referred the bill to the Attorney General for his opinion before he left for New York. It is rumored that certain Congressmen who urged the passing of the bill have a personal interest in having brought up the claims at low rate years ago.

Reports from Senator Ben Hill show that his condition is improved, and his physicians hope for his recovery. He is able to sit up and take solid food, and there are no signs of the cancer returning.

Ex-Public Printer Defrees is reported better, with a possibility of recovery.

Congressman Black is slightly improved, and is now able to use his hand to write his name.

It is rumored here that General Hancock will be the Democratic candidate for Governor of Pennsylvania. The matter has been quietly canvassed for some days past, and the proposition is favorably looked upon all around.

There is a great demand for laborers at the South. The Bureau of Immigration says these requests come especially from Louisiana and Alabama, and call for men with families.

Many now say that Congress will be here until August. Only four of the fourteen appropriation bills have been yet sent to the President, and six of them have not yet even been reported to the House by the committee.

The Treasury Department states that the reports that there are large quantities of counterfeit currency and bonds afloat, are utterly untrue. The location of every counterfeit bond printed is known, and as no counterfeit currency reaches the Treasury in the redemption constantly going on, it is good evidence that there is none afloat.

It is said the Democrats in the House are preparing to offer a resolution censuring Keifer for his course Monday, and declaring it a violation of the constitution. There is more partisan feeling exhibited in the House just now than at any time during the session.

Guiteau yesterday sent for Rev. Mr. Gaines, a colored clergyman, to pray with him. He said in conversation, that he was not at all certain of being hanged, but if he was, he believed his soul was safe, as he did the deed at God's command, to save the country. He showed much feeling.

Signal Officer Nelson has returned from Northern Alaska, where he spent four and a half years studying the country, its mineralogy, productions and inhabitants. He has a very valuable stock of information of that almost unknown county.

The appointment of ex-Chinese Minister to the United States, Chin Lan Pin, to be Assistant Secretary of State in China, is recognized here as an excellent one, and as an evidence of the desire to introduce the American system there.

The remains of Thomas Jefferson will be brought here as soon as practicable, and buried in Glenwood cemetery.

General Drum has returned from the West. He says the new military training school at Fort Leavenworth is a great success, and will be of great value to the army.

The estimated decrease in the public debt for May is about $10,000,000, being less than usual, on account of the heavy pension payments during the month.

The Clerk Who Knows Everything.

Hotel Gazette

A newly-arrived and singularly assorted couple at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, New York, consisting of a Londoner and an out-and-out American Western man, stood watching the throng of people coming and going at the marble counter the other evening, and listening with surprise to the endless number of quick questions made to the hotel clerk about trains, rooms and individuals, and his instantaneous replies, when the Englishman broke out with;

"Most extraordinary man, seems to know everybody and everything—wonder if there is any question about a railway train or any person he can't answer?"

"I'll bet half a dozen champagne I'll put him a question about a train he can't answer," said the Westerner.

"Done! I'll stand six to see him go to grass," said her Majesty's subject.

"Well, here goes, then," and Westerner stepped up to the marble counter

"Say! You appear to know everything and everybody; who is there that's going to h——l, and when'll the train start?"

"Charles J. Guiteau; starts June 30, sir," replied the clerk, looking the querist right in the eye without moving a muscle.

"Well, I reckon you are about right, but you can't tell me where I can go to get a ticket, can you?"

"Go to the devil!" said the clerk, turning away.

"Mister," said the Western guest, looking over to the blonde book-keeper after the laughter had subsided, "you can charge six bottles of 'Fiz' in my bill for the use of them gentlemen, for I must weaken on this bet—it's agin me." He withdrew, and the clerk kept answering questions about other more familiar routes with perfect equanimity.

Arthur and the Girls.

Cor Baltimore Sun

While all this was going on the President seemed to be deeply interested in the target-firing, but, in fact, he was flirting with a handsome brunette, the belle of the occasion. Think of the President actually flirting! After eyeing His Excellency for some time this charming girl spoke to General Getty, who was conversing with the President and General Hancock. Of course, an introduction followed. In a few moments the President and the young lady were chatting together quite friendly. Thus it continued for several minutes, until the young lady's parents said they were going back to the hotel, and were waiting for her. After lingering for several minutes longer she said, "farewell," and started down the hill, looking back as she went. The President followed her with his eyes, and when she was some distance she smiled and bowed, which the President immediately recognised and returned by lifting his hat, as much as to say "Tah-tah."

The Cost of Revenge.

Wall Street News.

It is reported of one of the great capitalists of Gotham that once upon a time he found an article in one of the dailies which rather peeled the man off his spots, and he called in his confidential secretary and said:

"James, go out and see what the Daily Blaster can be bought for. I'll buy it and throw everything into the bay."

James went out on the errand and returned and reported the price at $700,000.

"Too much—too much," replied the magnate. "James, go out and see what it will cost me to start an opposition daily."

James sailed forth to get the figures, and on his return reported that half a million dollars would perhaps run it for a year or so.

"Too much—too infernal much!" was the decided reply. "James go out and buy a dollar bouquet and send it to the editor with my compliments. ——'im! James, ——'im! if revenge costs that much money we've got to knuckle and let him take the trick!"

A Boston minister has settled it. He says a husband who is in the enjoyment of celestial bliss will not mourn because his wife is tortured in Hades. Such time as he has to spare from praise and song he will devote to thanksgiving that he is not with her.

She married a railroad man
A locomotive spark;
He told her of his little plan
At the gate out in the dark.
But long ere a year had gone,
The fire it died, alack!
Their coupling apart was drawn
And he switched her off the track!

When the venerable Mr. Toy, of Connecticut, was married to a youthful bride some weeks ago, he gave the Rev. Mr. Dodge, of Yarmouth, Mass, $1,500 as a wedding fee, and added another $1,500 to enable Mr. Dodge to visit Europe. That's the kind of Toy that ministers like to see on wedding occasions.

Richard King, known all over Texas and the West as "The Cattle King," is a small, swarthy Irishman. His flocks of sheep and goats, his herds of cattle and his troops of horses and mules are estimated at 500,000 head in all. His ranche, the Santa Gertrudes, is seventy-five miles in length, and includes nearly the whole of two counties in Southwestern Texas.

Fred Archer, the celebrated English jockey, is described as a tall, emaciated, cadaverous man, with projecting lips, slight stoop, decidedly round shoulders, and long, misshapen legs. To keep his weight down to 117 pounds he often breakfasts on two seidlitz powders, eschews meat and vegetables, and subsists almost entirely upon bread and unsweetened tea. He is worth $550,000, though.

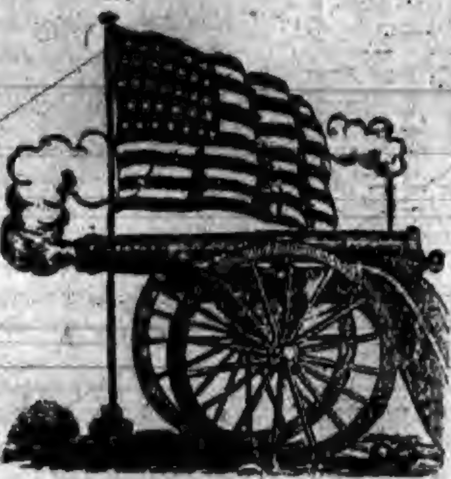
DEMOCRATIC

BOOM!



June 10th, 82.

Let the People turn out en masse.

Have Harmony and Good Feeling Prevail.

We hope one and all will make the Democratic Convention one long to be throught of.

The subject of removing the remains of Thomas Jefferson to Glenwood Cemetery, at Washington, is being discussed. The estate of Monticello, where he formerly resided and where he was buried, has passed from his descendants, and the wish of these now is that his remains be reintered at the National Capitol.

Mr. Trescott has succeeded in finding Montero, the alleged head of the Peruvian government, and presented the Chilian terms of peace. These terms were rejected, as they involve the cession of the provinces of Tarapaca and the sale of Arica to Chili, and the war will probably be resumed, if Peru is able to carry it on.

A statistical abstract just issued by the Treasury Department contains statistics of the annual production of gold and silver in the United States, from 1867 to 1881, inclusive. These figures show that the production of gold has declined from $55,000,000 in 1867 to [illegible] in 1881, and that the production of silver has increased from nothing in 1867 to $42,000,000 in 1881. The total production of gold and silver for 1881 was [illegible], an increase

Clerk.

As no regular announcements have been received for this office up to date of going to press, we think it advisable to state the names of those now before the people. They are D. Y. Husselman, T. H. Sprott and James A. Barns, of this place, and Ashford W. Bair, of Fairfield township. The friends of each are working up their candidacy, and no doubt all the above names will be before the convention.

The congressional convention, which met at Kendallville last Thursday, proved to be rather wide awake affair. Judge Lowry, as every one knew had almost a certain prospect of success, there being more than enough votes pledged to him in advance to secure his nomination. The number required was forty-five and there were about fifty already promised. The candidate with the next chance was Mr. Colerick, our present efficient member. Next came Andy Ellison, of Lagrange with the seven votes of that county. When the convention was called to order, a struggle ensued over the election of a permanent chairman, and this resulted in the choice of our old-time friend, J. W. Adair of Columbia City. An attempt was next made to have the convention put off until August or September, and failing to secure this, an adjournment was had until 1 p. m. When the convention assembled in the afternoon, there was some sparring between Col. McDonald, of Whitley county and Hon. Freeman Kelley of this county, in regard to the different methods by which delegates had been selected in the several counties. This seemed to be a bone of contention all the way through, or rather it seemed to be made the excuse by which Judge Lowry's opponent would try to defeat his nomination or else have the convention postponed. Several of these exciteable gentlemen, evidently forgot, that each county had a right to select its delegates in any manner it pleased until such time as some uniform method can be agreed upon, by all the counties in the district. When all the fillibustering motions had failed, the delegations from Steuben and Lagrange counties withdrew from the hall. The convention then proceeded to vote for the different candidates, Col. McDonald, having withdrawn, the result stood Lowry 52½ and Colerick 19½. This showed that Lowry had 7½ more than were necessary to nominate him, and makes the action of the seceding delegations appear all the more unworthy and uncalled for. If Lagrange preferred Ellison and Steuben favored Mr. Colerick they had a right to do so, and should have remained in the convention and voted for the men of their choice. Then, failing to have their men nominated they should have done just what thousands of other men have done, assist to elect the man who was the choice of the majority. That would have been sensible and democratic, and we believe that the democrats of those counties will repudiate the hasty and unwarranted course of their delegates. Judge Lowry was evidently the choice of a majority of the democrats of this district, and as such, every true democrats will abide by the decision of the convention.

"Married:—At the residence of Dr. Carscadden in York, Thursday May 18, by the Rev. G. A. Smith, Mr. R. D. Lamson of York Neb., and Miss Lillian B. Farlin of Wisconsin. The wedding was very quiet and unostentatious, but was a very pleasant and agreeable occasion, as well to the small party of spectators as to the contracting parties. Everyone seemed perfectly at ease, not excepting the happy bride and groom and the lives thus peacefully and happily united will, we trust and believe, flow tranquilly and happily on through many years. After the ceremony and, congratulations, the party adjourned to the dining-room, where an excellent supper awaited them. Not a china ware and tooth-pick lunch, but real genuine victuals of the most tempting kind. The evening was spent in social conversation, and music of a very superior quality was furnished by Miss Mamie Smith. So well pleased were the guests with the hospitality of the house, that they actually cast up the chances of another wedding at the same place, but came to no satisfactory conclusion. About nine o'clock the guests withdrew, and Mr. and Mrs. Lamson repaired to their neat and cozy little house on Sixth Street. Mr. Lamson is one of the most prosperous young business men, and highly respected for his energy and integrity. The bride is one of Wisconsin's fairest daughters, and is an appropriate companion for her worthy husband." We copy the above notice from the York Neb. Times, of May 2?, 1882. The groom who is a brother of Mrs. J. A. Barns, of this place will be remembered by many of the young people here and in Waterloo. And they, together with ye editor's family the couple in extending congratulations on the happy event. Dell we extend [illegible] some eight hundred miles over the way."

Since the above was in type, we have had news that the bride's young life has ended. She died suddenly about two weeks after her wedding. Will give in full next week.

While at Kendallville last week we had the good fortune to meet Hon. John R. Porter, of Peru, who is a prospective candidate for state treasurer on the democratic ticket. Mr. Porter is an old-time friend and schoolmate of Daniel Gonser, of this county, and is evidently a most worthy man. We believe DeKalb county can do no better than to give him her votes at this coming state convention.

DeKalb county gave Judge Lowry eleven votes at the convention at Kendallville and Colerick two.

Announcements.

Editor Courier: Please announce the name of A. D. Moore, of Wilmington township, as a candidate for commissioner from the southeast district.

Editor Courier: Please announce the name of Charles Comesky, of Jackson township, as the democratic candidate for county commissioner from the southwest district, subject to the decision of the county convention.

Editor Courier: Please announce the name of John Butt, of Waterloo, as candidate before the democratic county convention for the office of recorder, and greatly oblige his many friends.

Editor Courier: Please announce Thomas Murray as a candidate for recorder of DeKalb county, subject to the decision of the democratic convention.

J. J. Van Auken will be a candidate for the office of sheriff. If the convention nominates him he will prove a true official, if they decide to the contrary he can be counted on as a firm worker for the "other fellow."

Editor Courier.—Please say that A. W. Allen will be a candidate for the nomination for sheriff, before the democratic convention subject to the decision of that body.

Editor Courier: Please announce the name of John H. Gill, of Concord township, for the nomination of sheriff, subject to the decision of the democratic convention.

Editor Courier: Please announce that J. W. Boyle, of Butler will be a candidate before the democratic county convention for the office of sheriff, subject to the will of the convention.

Please say to the democrats of DeKalb county, that W. H. Dills will be a candidate for representative, subject to the decision of the democratic convention.

Please announce A. P. Foltz as a candidate for re-election to the office of surveyor, if such should be the wishes of the convention.

O. H. Widney, of Concord, will be a candidate for commissioner from the southeast district, subject to the action of the democratic county convention.

Editor Courier: Please announce the name of Samuel M. High, of Jackson Tp., as a candidate for the nomination for recorder, subject to the decision of the democratic county convention.

Editor Courier: Please announce the name of John C. Henry, Auburn, as a candidate for the nomination for sheriff of DeKalb county, subject to the action of the democratic county convention.

At the solicitation of many democrats, the name of Manoah Franks will be presented to the democratic convention for commissioner of the southwest district.

Editor Courier. Please announce the name of Lucius C. Loveland of Stafford township as a candidate for recorder of DeKalb county, subject to the decision of the democratic convention.

David Maxwell will be a candidate before the democratic county convention for the office of surveyor subject to the decision of that body.

Editor Courier: Please say to the democrats of DeKalb county, that the name of E. R. Shoemaker, of Smithfield township is hereby announced as a candidate for commissioner from the north district, subject to the action of the democratic county convention.

Editor Courier: The name of Burton Brown, of Jackson township will be presented to the democratic county convention for the office of recorder.

In accordance with the request of many friends, Mr. Christian Sheets, of Jackson township will be a candidate for the office of commissioner from the south west district.

A salt mine has been found near Manistee, Michigan, by boring down a depth of 2,000 feet. Its great depth, however, will render it of little value as long as the present abundant supply holds out.

Hon. J. J. Cooper, now an aspirant for the nomination for state treasurer, was a candidate for this office before the state convention in 1878, and was beaten by Mr. Fleming, of Ft. Wayne, by only one vote.

Indictments have been found against Dr. Stough, of Waterloo, by the United Stated grand jury at Indianapolis, in regard to the pension business. They are to be brought up at the June session of that court, in Ft. Wayne.

It is a noticeable fact that the great great state of Massachusetts, has never elected a soldier for its governor at least no soldier who took part in the recent rebellion. Are we to infer from this that she had no soldiers in the field? But she is reliably republican.

Mr. Colerick has made a most excellent record in congress, and has the respect of every man in his district. He would no doubt have received a renomination, but for the fact of Judge Lowry's long services and his sacrifices for the party.

Jesse Snow, of Edgerton, Ohio, left that vicinity twenty-three years ago, since which time his friends have heard no word from him. Last week he returned with as little ceremony as he left, but only to find his family all dead and most of those who once knew him laid away in the same silent home, in the grave yard.

We see by exchanges that the price of beef cattle is advancing every where with an almost certain prospect, the present difficulty in obtaining meats of all kinds, will be continued through the summer. Even the government finds great difficulty in getting the necessary supply for the army, and the Indians to whom it is still sending rations.

There is a general strike among the workmen in the iron mills of Pennsylvania and Ohio, and fears are expressed that it may spread to other parts of the country. All of the great mills affected have closed for the present, and it seems more than probable that high prices and a scarcity of all iron products may be looked for soon. In a few mills, the increased wages demanded by the men, will be paid for a short time to enable the mill owners to fill existing contracts.

Indians trying the Law.

Montreal, June 1.—The Caughnawaga Indians entered suit against Seminary St. Sulpice to recover $3,500 lent on mortgage. The money was originally obtained from the United States for Iroquois lands in New York state.

The Valpo. Messenger has its first page of last weeks issue fully occupied by the essays of the graduating class of the high school at that place. They are mostly fine productions. The titles are especially good. Among them we notice, "The world's tomorrow," which is the title of the Latin oration. "Let it Wave;" "Can you build a hen-coop?" "Character Building;" and "For Value Received I Promise to Pay." It will be noticed that some of these are entirely out of the stereotyped style of commencement subjects.

Notice.—Until further notice I will be in my office at my home in Keyser township for the transaction of such township business as may come before me, on Friday of each week.

Henry Probst, Trustee.

—M. W. Johnston and Herman Boozer of Waterloo, attended Madame Fry's concert Tuesday evening.

—Pictures taken at J. M. Rice & Son's gallery cheaper than ever before now is the time to get a bargain.

House for Sale.—A good house and lot on south VanBuren street. For terms, address, Alvin Weyer, Orland, Indiana. 20-4t

—Our young friend George Larimore, of St. Johns, made us a brief call Friday.

—Mr. and Mrs. Bearst and daughter Carrie were visiting friends in Fort Wayne over Sunday.

—The recent cold weather was a severe test on the endurance of sheep that had been sheared.

—Little Walter Baker, son of Chris. Baker at the Junction, fell and broke his arm the other day.

—Mrs. J. S. McTighe, of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, is visiting her relatives here, the family of Wm. McIntyre.

Mrs. H. Bashelier and Cass Showers had stolen goods found in their possession, but both have avoided the law.

—Rice & Son's cottage window is the grandest accessory for a gallery in northern Indiana. Call and see it.

—Ed. C. Borgegrain left for his home in Ohio Wednesday, and will return with a legacy of "government bonds."

—Sherm. Hollister made some ice cream, the other day, and pedestrains were moving about with overcoats on.

—Mr. Hensinger's son who received an injury recently while working in Michigan, died from the effects Monday.

—The Stamets House, at the Junction was burglarized to the amount of about the amount of $30 Tuesday evening.

—Farmers will save their financial box by buying salt of Schaab & Beugnot. A nice fresh article for $1.15 a barrel.

—We neglected to item the fact that Mr. & Mrs. Obe Cool were presented with a handsome baby. Obe is doing well.

—Miss Frankie Ryan and Miss Maud Allen went to St. Louis, Michigan, Tuesday. They will remain there a week or two.

—Hans' Pavilion Show that exhibited here last week is entitled to public patronage. The tent is small but the show is big.

—Hod Kircher has been fixing up his tonsorial rooms and with his first-class work has an inviting place for his customers to tarry.

—Potatoes at two dollars a bushel. This will make hash scarce, especially as the constable has already killed so many of the dogs.

—Mrs. Moss has returned to town to live. She will hereafter, together with her father and mother, occupy her residence on Main street.

—Brandriff & Co, of Fort Wayne, for whom John Robbins is drummer, made an indorsement this week. Johnny will likely "come marching home again."

—Two coach loads of half frozen picnickers went from Fort Wayne to Pleasant Lake Sunday. Ice cream must have been a rather exciting diet that day.

—If our people want better or cheaper goods than will be furnished them by Schaab & Beugnot, they will have to deal with a foreign wholesale house, that's all.

—Mrs. Jones has received a fine lot of new goods which are simply excellent. Beautiful ginghams at from 8c to 12½c a yard. Next door to Boot upside Down.

—Dr. E. C. West's Nerve and Brain Treatment is a never failing cure for Nervous Neuralgia, Nervous Headache, Overworked Brain, &c. Sold at F. E. Davenports.

—Mrs. Dr. Casebeer is in Lagrange for treatment of her eyes. The doctor has a brother there who is considered successful in the treatment of diseases of this kind.

—Johnnie Haskins, of Waterloo, is now employed at Charley Pommert's barber rooms, next door to Braun's meat market. He is said to be a splendid workman.

—Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Moody, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Knott, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Leas and Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Gruhlky, all of Waterloo, were in Auburn this week.

—Quite a row occured in a Seventh street saloon last Friday between the Junction blacksmith, Byron Rainer and Will Baldock. Rainier has caused considerable trouble by fighting and urging the same to be indulged in.

—We see by a late copy of the Fort Wayne Sentinel, that Will. Schryock has established himself in the dentistry business in Fort Wayne. His friends will find him in the Shoaff art gallery building, No. 21 West Berry street.

—There is no business house in the state that is gaining in popularity so rapidly as the mammoth double store of Schaab & Beugnot. Their quality of goods and low prices have made them business men of considerable note.

—Rosa and Carrie Shaffer have returned to the parental roof, having finished their spring terms of school. They speak very encouraging of their school work this spring, in spite of bad roads and bad weather.

—J. Thomson, the Smithfield dairyman has our thanks for a big quarter section of his May cheese. It is the finest make of cheese we have yet seen, and does credit to Mr. Thomson's skill in the manufacture of this toothsome food.

Caucus.

The democrats of Auburn precinct, Union township, held a caucus in the court-house at 2 o'clock p. m. last Saturday, June 3, for the purpose of selecting delegates to the county convention. Hon. D. D. Moody was made chairman and J. A. Barns secretary. A motion was made by Mr. Dills and after some changes adopted, fixing the ratio of delegates according to the democratic vote on justice at the April election and on town clerk at the May election. This gave to the country in the north precinct, six delegates; to the country in the south precinct, seven; to the first ward in town, eight; second ward, five; third ward, three; fourth ward, two, and to the fifth ward, four, making thirty-five in all. This motion was carried by a vote of twenty-one to eighteen, as ascertained by a rising vote. Those living in the different precincts and wards retired to separate rooms and to different parts of the court-room, and each division selected its own delegates according to instructions in the resolution. The delegates in the north precincts, outside of town, were: C. Kutzner, E. F. Metcalf, Frank Baird, Charles Fulks, I. B. Brandon and George Wagoner; in the south precinct, outside of town, were: Peter Shaffer, James McClellan, Wm. Sherwood, J. Mitchell, D. T. Smith, A. Blodgett and David Krider; in the first ward were: I. N. Cool, Justin Girardot, W. S. Sthair, C. Boesch, J. H. Weaver, Samuel Campbell and A. J. Little; second ward: F. E. Davenport, W. H. Kiblinger. C. C. Shaffer, J. R. Lanning and Wm. Baughn; third ward: E. J. Coder, James Potter and T. D. Gross; fourth ward: Dr. T. G. Matheny and A. C. Wilson; fifth ward: Geo. Ensley, D. Z. Hoffman, Wm. Snyder and D. D. Moody. After the caucus re-assembled, these names were submitted to the entire caucus, which ratified the selections thus made by a unanimous vote. The caucus then proceeded to elect two delegates to the state convention, which is to meet at Indianapolis August 2. The delegates selected were M. Boland and D. D. Moody. Caucus then adjourned. The utmost good feeling prevailed throughout, and everything was done in a spirit of fairness.

Strange Freak of a Cat.

A strange thing happened in Concord township, in this county, recently. It seems that a Mr. Grill, who lives not far from Spencerville, had discovered a nest of minks in a hollow tree, and after killing the old one, took the young minks home with him, thinking that perhaps he could by some means keep them alive for pets. As good fortune would have it, a cat belonging in the family had just lost part of her family of kittens and at once took the little minks under her care, nursing them and caring for them in every respect as she would do for her own offspring. We learn that the happy family are getting along finely, and the little minks will soon be a sore temptation to hunters who have an eye to the fur trade. They will make nice pets, but it will be well enough to keep an eye on the chicken coop when they get their growth.

Cancers Cured.

A. O. Espy is having great success in the treatment of cancers and cancerous tumors. He has treated quite a number of cases in our town and vicinity and has not failed in a single instance. Parties afflicted or having symptoms of these dreaded diseases would do well to consult Mr. Espy. Residence on North Jackson street, Auburn, Indiana. 23-3w.

—Our friends will please excuse us for not publishing all the reports of the different township' caucuses, as it was impossible to do so. We publish instead the names of the delegates. All the caucuses passed off quietly, and a universal disposition to have a fair and honest representation was shown.

—Dr. Cowan has a curiosity in his yard, in the strange form of a bird that has hanged itself. The bird was evidently engaged in building a nest, when it became entangled by a thread getting around its neck. In struggling to free itself, it must have fallen from the nest and now hangs there dead, with the thread drawn tightly around its throat.

—We acknowledge a very pleasant call from Mrs. M. A. Mitchell, of Kearney, Neb., Mrs. Joseph Stafford and Miss Laura Ensley, of this place. Mrs. Mitchell is here at present to be in attendance at the bedside of her mother, Mrs. Ensley, who has been sick so long. We are indebted to her for late copies of the Buffalo County Journal, a paper published in her western home.

—A visit to Willow Run herd of Jerseys, Spencerville, Indiana, the property of J. M. Cahill, is a real treat to an admirer of these valuable and beautiful animals. Amber of Cottage Grove No. 14,225, a fine bred animal and carries an udder for a yearling unsurpassed. She gives every promise of a large butter yield if put to the test. Marcia Belle No. 18,224, another beautiful animal, possessing all the markings and points that distinguish the Jerseys, while Cash Boy Jr., son of old Cash Boy 2,248, the finest bred bull in the west, and which sold for $3,000, heads this herd. The above animals were selected from good butter strains. Stock for sale at reasonable rates.

Temperance.

AN ADDRESS TO THE VOTERS OF DEKALB COUNTY BY THE DEKALB TEMPERANCE COUNCIL.

We address you in the interests of liberty and public safety. You are the conservators of the one and the guardians of the other; for with you is deposited the sovereignty of our commonwealth. We gratefully recognize your supremacy in the arbitrament of all questions of justice and morality. In the true spirit of American freedom we confidently appeal to you in the issue that is now presented upon the temperance question. The last general assembly in response to the petitions of nearly fifty thousand voters, voted to submit an amendment to the people for adoption or rejection, that should prohibit forever the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors within our state, except for medical, scientific, mechanical and wines for sacramental purposes. This action must be repeated by the next legislature before it can be submitted to the people for the verdict of a popular vote. The one issue now presented is, shall the people exercise this constitutional right? The purpose of this address is to remind you of your legal privilege, and to point out the fact that your right is being denied by men who fear the voice of a popular majority upon a great moral question. We claim that this is a government "of the people, by the people and for the people," and that no man or set of men has a right to deny your suffrage upon any public question. Yet in spite of the clearness and justice of this prerogative, it is being denied by men who claim to be acting in the interest of freedom and right.

Americans are not afraid of majorities being "autocratic," they will continue to rule, and that, too, in such a way that no minority will suffer loss in "life, liberty, or pursuit of happiness." Nobody will find their dominion oppressive except selfish men who put their own advancement against the welfare of the whole people. Anybody who opposes the rule of a popular majority is at war with the very charter of American liberty. You will observe at once that this is not a party question. It has no reference to your political affiliations. No party is asked to adopt prohibition as a platform principal, but we do demand that the representative to the legislature from this county shall be pledged to vote for the submission of the proposed prohibitory constitutional amendments to the people for a popular vote.

The temperance counsel simply requests that this question be submitted to the people. This is a constitutional right but it can only be secured by electing men for the next legislature who will vote for the submission of this amendment to the people. It is your privilege to vote for such men, hence it is your duty to see that only such men are nominated and elected as your representative. You must not risk your rights by sending men to represent you who are opposed to giving the people a voice on this question.

This is your present political duty no matter what may be your party affiliations. The principle is larger than any party. It is as broad as the whole law o' liberty; it is a question of popular freedom. In the present issue the temperance people say to all parties, in the very spirit of liberty, submit the question to the people, and then stand by the arbitrament of a fair election and a popular majority. Whatever shuns this is trickery; whatever resists this is tyranny. We are consequently bold in this appeal, having confidence that our sense of duty will impel the discharge of every obligation, and that you will stand with us in every effort to maintain the supremacy of the people.

Sunday School Institute Organization.

Through a special announcement a number of delegates and Sunday school workers of Fairfield township, met at the Lutheran church at Fairfield Center, DeKalb county, Indiana, June 3rd, 1882. The meeting was called to order by Mr. Solomon Reinoehl, president of this township, who stated the object of the meeting and was followed by a number of short addresses. The organization then adopted a constitution, and then elected the following necessary officers with the following results: Vice president, Mr. John Seiler; secretary, M. A. Boughman; treasurer, Geo. Husselman; marshal, Alfred Weirich. The time and place of holding the institute was decided to be held at Fairfield Center, DeKalb county, Indiana, on Saturday, October 7th, 1882.

The sabbath-school of this place on last Sabbath elected Messrs Henry Gardner, J. B. Bower, H. H. Slaybaugh and M. A. Boughman as delegates to the county institute to be held at St. Joe, DeKalb county, Indiana, June 13, and 14 1882.

—Our esteemed friend Simon Ochs has just returned from a visit to his daughter Linda, now Mrs. Adolph Kahn who resides in Seymour Wisconsin. She is now the happy mother of a fine boy, and Mr. Ochs is happy accordingly.

CORRESPONDENCE.

WATERLOO.

J. J. Duncan has a new picket fence.

The festival of the Presbyterian church here will be June 14.

Henry Zerkle is turning target during the absence of Geo. Crane.

Louie Kahn, of Chicago, is here visiting in the family of Mr. Lowenstein.

Dr. Darby is putting a foundation under his residence and otherwise improving it.

Loewenstein & Rothschild are selling stacks of goods and are still bringing on more.

Georgie Kennedy is visiting in the country with his grandmother, Mrs. Wm. Maxwell.

Miss Nannie Leas of Auburn, is spending the week with Miss Nettie Chamberlain.

Childrens day will be observed at the M. E. church by a concert next Sunday evening.

Jacob Brown is tying up goods for Brand & Duncan, and makes a good showing behind a counter.

Miss Mattie Maxson leaves to-morrow for an extended visit with friends in Adrian, Coldwater and Jackson.

Jerry Boyer thinks that new stock of summer hats and goods in that line may wait a few days till the next thaw.

Ab. Kelley found no difficulty in getting rid of his potatoes. He might possibly be able to sell another car load.

J. G. Johnson is the proudest man in the fancy goods trade. We omitted to mention the cause of it last week. It is a boy and is now over a week old.

Jacob Saltzman has finished the stone work on James Culbertson's house in Auburn and is now about home once more. He says that Mr. C. will have, when completed, one of the finest residences in the county.

We received an invitation to the wedding of Miss Mary Zwilling to Edward W. Bishop, which took place at State Center, Iowa, on Thursday morning, May 25th. The bride will be remembered as a resident of this place until within a few years. Her many friends here will be pleased to hear of her good fortune, and wish her many long years of future happiness.

The institute for Fairfield and Union, that should have been held last Saturday, was a failure, owing to the severe rain during the forenoon. Four teachers were present, however, in despite the weather: Ernest Stough, Ollie Peterman, Mary Potters and Daniel Segner. Trustee Hague and Mr. J. A. Barns came over from Auburn, and Mr Gfeller, the trustee of Smithfield was also present.

FRANKLIN.

Uncle Abe Meyers is off an a two or three weeks' visit to Ohio.

Here it is the 8th of June and corn not all planted, and but little of the first planting up.

Oats and wheat are doing pretty well on the highest ground, but on the low ground the water is putting in its damaging work.

A people's convention is talked of, so the old parties had better look a "leedle" out and do the fair thing with town and country.

Last year on the 15th of June potatoes were quite plenty, but now the tops are hardly above the ground. They are frozen down every few days.

One of those weddings that I prophisied would take place soon has already come about. John H. Rogers was married to Katy Hamman on Sunday, June 4. "All the world and the rest of mankind" wish them God's speed, undoubtedly.

I hear it frequently mentioned that it is proposed to run a non-professional man for judge. There appears to be a very general disgust of the way court matters are run. They appear to be conducted with especial reference to preventing justice and annul the right of trial by jury, by the judge assuming the right to set aside verdicts as often as he pleases in the same case.

Some of our merchants that are protectionists tell their customers that a protection tariff does not make the protected goods dearer. Now, I would like to have some one tell me why the manufacturers of such goods are so very anxious to have a tariff or tax on foreign goods before they can be sold in this country? Could the editor of the Courier give some light on the subject.

What the editor of the Courier said in last week's issue, concerning the office of county commissioner, was well said, but he might have added, that it is very important that at least one member of the board be a good accountant, so that all of the financial affairs of the county could be perfectly understood by the board. They have the control of the finances of the county and they should understand every detail. Other counties have suffered heavy losses by neglecting this, and it would be much better to keep our county matters straight, than to straighten them after they get crooked.

Wabash College.

This excellent institution of learning has just entered on the fiftieth year of its work. It has a reputation for thorough work, second to none in the country. The ability and high standing of its faculty, the character of work done, and the favorable location should be considerations to which those who expect to attend college should give their full thoughts. Many young men in this county, we are aware, expect to attend a college somewhere and take a more or less thorough course of instruction. To such, we say, give Old Wabash a trial. Write to the secretary, John L. Campbell, at Crawfordsville, and obtain full information as to the merits of this institution. 22-4t.

THE THIRTIETH OF MAY.

Through the elm-shadowed, dusty village way,
To martial music and the cannon's roar,
A long procession moves in close array,
Flower-laden wains slow creaking on before.

Now where the Silent City 'neath the shade
Uprears its white monitions of decay,
Aside they turn, the shadowy realm invade,
And many a mound bestrew with blossoms gay.

What means it? Hark upon the tremulous air
A sound of voices breaks, and wave on wave,
Rolls o'er the dead who calmly slumber there,
In swelling notes, now glad, now sweetly grave:

Hail, hero-martyrs! ye
Who for sweet liberty
Your heart's blood gave.
Hail, every honored name!
Let all, with loud acclaim,
Sing high your noble fame,
Ye heroes brave!

Strong were the chords ye brake
For Freedom's holy sake,
In that dread hour
When War, with fierce alarms,
Roused Freedom's sons to arms,
O'er your true hearts Love's charms
Had then no power.

Long o'er the land afar
Flamed the red battle-star,
Rolled War's red wave.
Ah, for the thousands slain!
Ah, for the tears and pain!
But, patriots, not in vain
Your lives they gave.

On your green graves anew
Fair flowers we proudly strew,
'Mid smiles and tears,
And though these flowers decay,
The names we laud this day
Shall never fade away
Through countless years.

The music ceases. From the realm of Death
Slow pass the throng, dispersing as they go,
And of the valiant dead, with bated breath,
They speak in whispers, tenderly and low.

"So will we keep forever green," they say,
"The glorious memory of our patriot band;
And o'er their ashes, on this sacred day,
Sing the old song, God bless our native land!"

A BOARDING-HOUSE EPISODE

I am an old maid, and live in a second-rate boarding-house, and probably the world at large would agree with my niece Elinor when she says,—

"Such a dreadful life, auntie! How can you bear the monotony, to say nothing of the annoyances?"

Elinor has always eaten cream from a silver spoon, so to speak, and having just married, and being consequently surrounded by a deeper rose-colored atmosphere than usual, it is hardly to be wondered at that she cannot appreciate the advantages of my situation.

"Bless you, child," I say to her, "it isn't so very bad after one gets accustomed to boarding-house steak and muddy coffee; and I've had more experience in these twelve years than you in the whole twenty-four of your life."

It is true, there have been such funny incidents at No. 12 Blank street than I could have given Dickens points for a dozen better tales than Pickwick. I must say, however, that two years ago this very month something happened which more nearly demoralized the tranquil course of affairs at No. 12 than anything else.

Brother William and I had been there for years, and were as nearly domesticated as it is possible to be in a boarding-house. William is somewhere in the thirties, and always so staid and quite that he has the credit of ten additional years. He came home at night—he is a clerk on a moderate salary—and after tea drops into his room with the evening paper to read, while I knit or darn his socks. We are neither of us brilliant conversationalists, so that after we have talked half an hour or so he says good-night and goes off to his own room. It is a trifle humdrum, perhaps, but we've never been used to gayeties, and on the whole rather enjoy vegetating. Sometimes William suggests that a pipe or cigar would add to his happiness, judging from the comfort some men derive from smoking, but I say to him:

"No, William, you haven't one bad habit, and why should you cultivate one now? When a man is growing bald he is too old to begin something."

To begin my story. One night a carriage drove up to No. 12, a large trunk was lifted off, and a girlish figure came up the steps. I was in the bare parlor waiting for tea and saw the arrival. In a boarding-house there are so few occurrences that one cannot help fostering a little curiosity, and I waited with some impatience for the new-comer's appearance. But she did not come, and as William did and the tea-bell rang, I proceeded to the dining-room.

The long table was nearly filled and tea was half over when a girl appeared in the doorway, and no one noticing her for an instant said in a bright and charming voice:

"Will you give me a seat?"

Then the little maid servant whom she addressed turned and placed her opposite me. I cannot begin, by any description, to tell how pretty she was. She had that plump, peachblossom beauty which reminds one so irresistibly of summer bloom and brightness. Her eyes were large, brown, and appealing, her hair full of little curly knots and rings, and when she looked down the long lashes resting on her cheeks, and made her prettier than ever. I could see that the eyes of the gentlemen were furtively directed toward her, and I knew they were filled with admiration, but no one spoke, and I believe she did not look at any of us.

To cut the story of several days short we did not succeed for that length of time in making her acquaintance. I learned from Maggie, the chambermaid, that her name was Miss Archibald, and that she had come to the city for a visit, choosing No. 12 as a stopping place, because her father had known Mrs. Ford, the landlady, before she moved to Boston.

For several days, as I said, she came to breakfast, dinner and tea, and gave none of us even the chance of saying "Good morning," until it happened that her eyes met mine by chance, and I said it boldly. Then the ice was broken. That noon when William came to dinner, he lingered in my room before going down, and says, finally:

"Smith says you were lucky this morning."

Smith is the bank cashier who sits at the end of the table.

"Why," asked I curtly, breaking my thread, although I knew well enough what he meant.

"Because you have had the first chance of speaking to Miss Archibald."

"Small honor," said I curtly.

"Well, I don't know," said William. "It depends on what you consider an honor," and by that I knew he was as much interested in Miss Archibald as the others.

All our gentlemen are of that uncertain age at which, if the follies of youth crop out, they are much more apparent than at an earlier period. William, however, seemed to be the one among them most favored by fortune. We were at dinner, and Miss Archibald, nearly opposite, was screened from us by a tall glass of celery. William, ostensibly to help himself to that vegetable, but as I still think to remove it from his range of vision, put his hand out, and instead of lifting the glass, nervously overturned it in Miss Archibald's plate. For the first time since we had known her, her face relaxed into a most charming smile. William was too much confused to do anything beyond asking incoherently to be excused, at the same time growing more and more scarlet, and Miss Archibald said, laughingly:

"I thank you for helping me so bountifully."

William made an extravagant bow, and smilingly answered:

"If I had had the pleasure of helping you, I should not have done it in so awkward a manner."

After that there was no more ceremony. Miss Archibald soon went into the little parlor after tea, and played a little on the cracked piano, sung some simple ballads in a fresh young voice, and finally it was the usual thing to see William standing, raptly attentive at one side of the piano, Smith behind her, Morrison, the newspaper reporter, in a lounging chair wheeled so that he could watch her face, and Timmins, the hardware dealer, turning her music. To be sure, he did not know one note from another, and she was obliged to stop her song and say "Now!" as a signal at every page.

I found that the gentlemen regarded William with a certain coolness, as, owing to the affair of the celery, he was on a more familiar footing with her than any of them.

As for me, I liked Miss Archibald very much. She seemed a sensible little thing, and, beyond that, she was so extravagantly pretty that one could but admire her.

She invited me to go on shopping expeditions, and I found she was having a number of elaborate dresses made, about which my advice was asked, and, of course, that deference to my opinion in the matter of dry goods, had a mollifying effect on me.

William became more and more infatuated, as did the others, and I grew provoked. As if men of their age ought not to have something better to think of than being at the beck and call of a child in her teens.

One night I went into the parlor to wait for Mrs. Jerrolds, who had invited me to a lecture, and in the darkness—for Mrs. Ford was too economical to encourage the lighting of more than one gas-jet—saw Miss Archibald on the piano-stool with her hands resting on the keys, while William was standing beside her, looking eagerly in her face.

"Yes, Miss Bessie," he was saying, 'friendship is such noble, such an elevating thing! How it lifts us above petty common places to know there is one heart will be true to us!'

"Charming indeed!" said I dryly. "Yes, William, as you say, there is nothing like friendship."

It was wicked of me, I know, but I was abundantly repaid by the start he gave and the expression I could imagine but could not see on his countenance. Miss Archibald was undisturbed, and began playing softly as I went out.

Well, things went on in the same ratio until I used to see William coming in with little white parcels, unmistakably from the florist's, and Miss Archibald wore violets and daisies at her throat.

One morning we came down to breakfast and her seat was vacant. Timmins lingered over his breakfast but she did not appear; Smith was silent and preoccupied; Morrison read the morning paper nervously, and William played with his biscuit.

At noon she did not come, and the four lunatics became more still more agitated. In the meanwhile I had ascertained that she went to Dorchester the previous afternoon and had spent the night there, but my opinion was not asked and of course I did not volunteer information. After dinner, William, instead of going out as usual, waited for me in the hall and said:

"Deborah, won't you go up-stairs and see if Miss Archibald is ill?"

"No, I'm sure I shan't," said I coolly. "Not even to oblige you."

"Deborah, how unkind you are!" cried he, dramatically. "Is this all the sympathy one woman has for an, other? Why, a person might die in a boarding-house without a soul near."

"William," said I, impressively, "take my word for it, you're making a decided simpleton of yourself." But William had shut the door forcibly and was gone.

In the middle of the afternoon Miss Archibald came into the room fresh and rosy.

"Such a nice time, dear Miss Fraser," she said. "And may I tell you a secret?"

"To be sure my dear," said I, stroking her soft cheek as she knelt beside me, for I couldn't help liking her.

"Well, all my shopping is done, and I am going home unexpectedly to-night at 6. Harry has come for me and insists that I shall go back with him. He said papa gave him full liberty to take me whether I was willing or not."

"And who is Harry?"

"That's the secret, Miss Fraser though after I am gone you may tell it. He is Harry Starr, and we're to be married in three weeks."

"So that was why you had so much shopping to do," said I. "Well, my dear, I hope you may be very happy."

I helped her pack, was introduced to Harry when he called for her—a handsome, broad-shouldered fellow—and said good-by with a blessing.

That night at tea I felt that I had a mission to perform. All were early, and the gentlemen as they came in glanced quickly at Miss Archibald's seat only to find it vacant. A general gloom settled over the table. Finally Timmins could bear it no longer and said to me:

"Is Miss Archibald ill?"

"Oh, no," said I, coolly, "she has gone home rather suddenly. The gentleman to whom she is engaged was in town, and thought it would be pleasant for her to go down on the same train with him."

I cast a glance around the table. Smith and Morrison were eating rapidly, William pushed back his chair and left the room, but only Timmins could not be satisfied.

"The gentleman to whom she is engaged?" he repeated feebly.

"Yes," said I, helping myself to butter with the utmost cheerfulness. "She is to be married in three weeks."

William never mentioned the name of Miss Archibald, and I noticed that the four gentlemen settled back immediately into their former staid and sober ways, and gave up cultivating the graces of youth.

My brother has been quite humble since the occurrence, and I am sure has more respect for his sister's common sense than before. I only enjoyed the situation, especially as he took me to the opera that week, evidently as a tacit bribe to restrain me from saying, "I told you so." But I am not above accepting a bribe, even though I am tolerably well convinced that the tickets were purchased for Bessie Archibald.

The Cow-Boy.

A correspondent of the New York Times explains to the uninitiated what the cow-boy is. He is a gentleman that at the present moment affects the frontier of Arizona and New Mexico. Tombstone has latterly been their headquarters, from whence they take their departure over the line or elsewhere, as the case may be, and raid upon Mexicans and their own people indiscriminately, stealing cattle, robbing stages, and all who come in their way, not stopping at murder, any resistance or refusal to "throw up your hand" being followed by a pistol-shot, and they as often shoot first.

Returning from their raids, they sel the stolen cattle to butchers, who make no inquiries, and as long as the proceeds last they hang around the gambling saloons and swagger through the streets armed to the teeth, ready for a fight with anybody that may look askance at them. They are a terror to the traveler and citizen. Recently they have been a little more quiet, as the citizens of Tombstone have organized a vigilance committee, and seemed determined to abate the presence of these genelemen. Many, fearing the consequences, have taken themselves off, but they are not far away and are still about the country. There is at present an opposing party, consisting of the Earp brothers and friends.

A feud led to the recent shooting of one of the Earps by one of the opposite party, and a day or two later the leader, who was supposed to have shot Earp, was himself shot dead. I visited a friend in Tombstone laid up with a bullet hole through the leg, which he get by being in the saloon at the time Earp was shot, the ball passing through Earp's body. It is to be hoped that the Kilkenny cat principle will prevail until both sides are used up; at the present moment they are a serious obstacle to the comfort and feeling of security of the traveler. Between cow-boys and Apaches things are decidedly lively, the doubt in your mind as to which you will meet before the day is over giving a pleasant excitement and serving to relieve the monotony of the road.

He Had no Fun in Him.

One of the members of the Methodist Conference held in Detroit was out for a walk at an early hour one morning, and encountered a strapping big fellow, who was drawing a wagon to the blacksmith shop.

"Catch hold here and help me down to the shop with this wagon, and I'll buy the whisky," called the big fellow.

"I never drink," solemnly replied the good man.

"Well, you can take a cigar."

"I never smoke."

"The man dropped the wagon tongue, looked hard at the member, and said:

"Don't you chew?"

"No, sir," was the decided reply.

"You must get mighty lonesome," mused the teamster.

"I guess I'm all right; I feel first-rate."

"I bet you even that I can lay you on your back," said teamster.

"I never bet," said the clergyman.

"Come, now, let's warm up a little.

"I'm in a hurry."

"Well, let's take each other down for fun, then. you are as big as I am, and I'll give you the under hold."

"I never have fun," solemnly replied the member.

"Well, I'm going to tackle you anyhow. Here we go."

The teamster slid up and endeavored to get a back hold but he had only just commenced his fun, when he was lifted clear off the grass and slammed against a tree-box with such force that he gasped half a dozen times before he could catch his breath.

"Now, you keep away from me," exclaimed the minister, picking up his cane.

"Bust me if I don't," replied the teamster as he edged off.

"What's the use in lying and saying you didn't have any fun in you, when you are chuck full of it? You wanted to break my back, didn't you?"

A Classical Joke.

Boston Transcript.

"Canst tell me, Brutus," queried Cassius, removing his havana from his lips to say it, "why our mutual friend Antonia, who yesterday feasted upon fatted Bramah chickens, resembles the valiant Spartacus?"

"Go to," replied Brutus, toying with his revolver in a menacing way. "I pray you trifle not with me. Thou knowest I am not given to these trivialties."

"Nay, but tell me," continued Cassius.

"Away, slight man," exclaimed Brutus. "When Cæsar lived he dared not thus have moved me."

"So you give it up!"

"By my troth I do, and instantly."

"Well, then," said Cassius, it is because he is glad he ate her." And Cassius tripped lightly out of the tent just in time to escape the tip of the enraged Brutus' sandal.

ELECTRICITY ON TAP

Stored in Boxes to be Used When Occasion Requires—A Novel Contrivance.

On board the steamship Labradore, of the French line, which arrived yesterday, several wooden cases of about the size of soap boxes were stored. Mr. William Lockland, an electrical engineer, under whose care the case came, connected an Edison lamp with a series of them by means of wires, and, on turning a button, the lamp shone brightly. In the boxes electricity is kept, to be drawn off as needed.

"The electricity was stored in them as far back as April 24," he said. "They were then shipped from Paris to Havre, and taken aboard the Labradore. On Saturday evening April 29, we lighted some electric lamps from them have used them all the way across the ocean and have drawn off only a small quantity of the electricity stored in them. The lamps ranged from 5 to 58 candal power."

The apparatus is known as the Faure accumulator. Its function is simply to store up electricity for use when it is not wanted. The accumulator is placed in circuit with an electric "dynamo," and the electricity transmitted to it is stored up. The packed-up electricity can then be sent anywhere, kept any necessary length of time, and will be gradually and equitably discharged along any circuit that may be attached to the apparatus.

The fact that the storage of electricity is possible has long been known. The Leyden jar stores electricity, but gives it nearly all off in one discharge as soon as a circuit is made. About twenty years ago Gascon Plante found that lead plates, frequently charged with electricity under certain conditions, acquired the power of storing electricity and parting with it gradually. But he could not get his discovery into the shape of a practical apparatus. This was something over a year ago. It did not attract public attention until May 1881, when Sir Wm Thompson published a description of it. The apparatus is simple in construction. A sheet of lead, perforated with small holes, is coated with a layer of red lead on both sides. Against each face of red lead is laid a sheet of parchment. This plate thus overlaid is sewn up in a cloth jacket, with the exception of a small portion of one corner, left bare for the purpose of connecting the plates together in a metallic circuit. A wooden case, such as one of those on the Labradore, contained fourteen such plates. They are arranged like voltaic piles, seven of the plates being connected by a metal strip at one end of the box to form the positive pole, and the seven alternate plates connected at the other end of the box to form the negative pole. There are several forms of accumulators, but all are constructed upon this principle. Acidulated water is poured over the plates so as to cover them, and the apparatus is ready for use. There is no waste of substance, and the same cell may be charged and recharged. A fourteen-plate cell, like those on the Labradore, is charged with 300 amphores of electricity of two volts tension. A sixty-cell battery would keep a fifteen-candle power Edison light burning for 400 continuous hours. One of the merits claimed for the invention is that the current given off is a steady, even flow, so that electric lights fed by it do not fluctuate in intensity. The quantity of power stored can be multiplied indefinitely by increasing the number of cells.

A Faure Company has been formed for the United States with a capital of $10,000,000, $200,000 paid up. Mr. Walter B. Whiting is one of the promoters.

"What are you going to do?" he was asked.

"We are going to sell force for any purpose. We can drive locomotives, steamboats, or train cars, and can light streets or buildings. We can drive a locomotive 200 miles an hour with ease and with smoothness, for there will be no piston rod to rack the machinery. In Paris last July we ran a train-way car carrying fifty people with the force supplied from forty Faure accumulators placed under the seats. We lifted a wheel and got the car off the track. Its motor was strong enough to turn it around on the cobble-stones and put it back on the track again. Any rate of speed can be obtained. The power is self-regulating, and can take any gradient."

"What about the cost?"

"We will contract to run any number of street cars eighteen hours a day at $4 a day each. We have submitted an offer to light the Labradore at the rate of $10 a day, which is less than the oil lamps cost. The uses to which portable electricity can be put are endless—from lighting a stand-lamp, rocking a cradle or running a sewing machine, to driving a railway train or illuminating a city. The systems of electric supply which convert steam power into electric force require machinery of the best construction, as inequalities of action cause corresponding fluctuations of force. An arc light supplied from an unsteady machine is in a constant waver. It does not matter how unsteadily the supply comes to an accumulator, and water-power can be utilized as well as steam-power. The force is stored, and given off in a steady stream."

Opium Eaters.

Brooklyn Eagle

The opium habit is infinitely worse and infinitely better than the alcoholic habit—it is infinitely worse, because its bondage is escaped only after the most intense anguish and suffering. No man can stop it without assistance; he who takes even five grains a day may think so, but he never tried it. Let him pass twenty-six hours without taking his daily dose, and he will have the most convincing proof to the contrary. At that time he is not a rational being. He is ready, I had almost said, for anything, from murder down through the whole catalogue of crime, to obtain the drug that will give the relief he seeks from the intense agony he endures. I would as soon face a tiger in its jungle as to attempt to stop an opium eater on his way for his drug when the influence of the previous dose has entirely passed away. The man suffering from the effects of a wild debauch in alcohol, intense as is his suffering, cannot form a comprehension of the opium eater's agony in the moments of reaction. How then is he cured? By diminishing his dose by a descending scale. It is a long process, in which the patient is continually deceived. The imagination plays a large part in the suffering, and none the less painful because imaginative. He knows that his doses are being diminished, but he is soon confused, because the attending physician keeps his scale to himself. For instance, he gives him fifty grains on Monday, forty-eight on Tuesday, forty-nine on Wednesday, fifty on Thursday, forty-six on Friday. I do not say that this is the process, but certainly it is managed in a capricious way in the beginning, so that the patient who has endeavored to follow the physician's scheme of treatment by the effect of the doses upon himself, finally becoming utterly confused abandons the effort in this direction and simply endeavors to make himself as comfortable as possible. In due course of time he gets down to his two or three grains a day. Now if he were informed of this such are the peculiar conditions surrounding the person and so strong the imagination, his sufferings would be intensified. The physician experienced in this treatment would immediately increase the dose and again gradually approach the end through deception. One day he presents a dose which has not a particle of opium in it. The patient is in agony, shaking and nervous; he drains the glass, almost immediately he feels the effect of the drug, and becomes more comfortable. It is pure imagination. He has endured the agony and experienced the relief. The next day the farce is repeated—that is, a farce to the physician—a serious drama to the patient. The physician, finding no ill results from the total cessation of the drug, says to himself it is a cure, but he will continue to give the dose of harmless decoctions, which resemble in taste the opium, for a month or six weeks longer. One day he laughs at the patient after he has taken a dose, and is showing signs of great relief, "You are a fool; you haven't had any opium in six weeks." The patient is disgusted and perhaps angry.

The White House Mail.

Chicago Times

Several hundred letters are received every day at the White House. They are delivered by a special messenger. The correspondence addressed to the President is not opened by him, and it is very rare that he reads one of the thousands of letters addressed to him. All of his letters are first opened by his Private Secretary. The majority of them are simply referred elsewhere, and never in any form come to the attention of the President. It makes no difference how "personal, private, or confidential" an envelope may be marked, it does not go by the desk of the Private Secretary unopened. Letters from relatives or intimate friends are sent to the President just as received, but all other letters of a character worthy of being called to his attention are simply "briefed," so that the President can see at a glance what is wanted. Applicants for office who write to the White House are always refered to the departments. It has been the custom of late years to send out to every such applicant a polite formula, saying that the applicant has been referred to such and such a department. Some of the simple minded correspondents of the Executive construe the receipt of this formula as one of the most important steps in the way of securing the desired office. One happy man recently received one of these formulas wrote in reply that his gratitude over the receipt of the same was "as Big as an Elefant." He then added that when he should get his place his gratitude would be "as big as 2 Elefants." This formula of answer is in reality as full of encouragement as the editor's polite "rejected with thanks," sent under seal with a pile of returned manuscript. But no amount of ill success has any discouraging effect upon the people who write to the President for information, advice, money, or office. Out of the 50,000,000 of people in this country there is always a daily number who flatter themselves that they are not wasting good paper, pens, and ink by writing to the President.

Ice on the Atlantic.

The vessels arriving in the last few days at New York bring reports of large quantities of ice floating about on the ocean highway between here and Europe. The German ship Magdalene, which arrived on Friday, thirty-five days out from Bremen, encountered many large icebergs. The two largest bergs seen on the voyage were encountered on the 11th. They were two immense masses of cold and glitter, fully two hundred feet high. They came within 7 or eight feet of the Magdalene, and caused much anxiety to her officers. Some of the largest covering an area of nearly 1,000 feet. The ship Senator, also from Bremen, brings accounts of vast fields and mountains of floating ice extending in some instances as far as the eye could reach. Shortly after getting clear of the ice the ship lost two seamen who fell from the topgallant yard. The steamer Ailsa, of the Atlas line, reports strange and unusual sights. On May 7, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, it suddenly became so dark that the lights had to be lit. Then came a terrific thunder storm. The flashes of lightning revealed a dozen water-spouts in different directions, all whirling and gyrating in dangerous proximity to the ship. The commotion lasted for twenty minutes, then the skies cleared, and a bright sun shown on a sea as smooth as glass.

About Fish.

To a gentleman who remarked upon the bad luck he had in trolling in the St. Lawrence for pickerel, Seth Green said: "The pickerel in that river around Alexandria Bay see so many of those spoons that they know the names of all the spoon makers. People should get out of the beaten track. When I am fishing for pickerel my daily take runs from 60 to 125."

"Do fish sleep?"

"No, sir. I have had an aquarium in a dim light by my bed for years. Always when I open my eyes the fish were in motion. Another point about fish is that they can not shut their eyes."

"What is the average age of trout?"

"Fifteen years."

"Do all fish float after they die?"

"Not one in ten."

JOCOSITIES.

It looks suspicious when the woman who had [illegible] with her husband at breakfast puts a big dish of cucumbers on the dinner table.

Lord Byron, in reference to a beautiful lady, wrote to a friend—"Lady—has been dangerously ill, but now she is dangerously well again."

A Kentucky girl was struck by lightning and killed while dressing for her wedding. It seems that even in Kentucky a man occasionally gets away.

There was a young woman at Worcester
So scared by the crow of a rooster,
That her mother cried "Hannah—
I'm surprised at your mannah!
Why don't you behave as you useter?"

Mistress—"Forget it? Why, I told you to impress it on your mind." Bridget—"It was on my moind I put it, mum, an' me moind wint astray wid it."

The clergymen in Philadelphia supply the prisoners in jail with manuscript sermons to read during their leisure hours. "The way of the transgressor is hard," very hard.

It is understood that Eli Perkins rode Apollo, the horse that won the Derby at Louisville, Tuesday. In the pictures and statues Apollo is always represented as carrying a lyre.

"Ah, my friend," said a clergyman to a parishioner who was the husband of a termagant, and who had made application for a divorce, "we should be yielding and forgiving. There are no divorces in heaven." "That's the reason," said the sufferer, "why I am so anxious to get a divorce here."

The German Fliegende Blaetter reports the following conversation: "Who is the gentleman escorting Miss Amelia?" "That's her fiance—cashier in a bank—very rich—splendid match." "Indeed! what may he be worth?" "Well, that can't be said now—don't know with what amount he'll manage to get away."

Teacher—Mr. A. and Mr. B. were candidates for Congress. There were 2,045 votes cast for Mr. A., and Mr. B. got as many more, twice as many more, and a vote and a half. How many votes did Mr. B. have?" Pupil—"Fifteen hundred." Teacher—How do you make that out?" Pupil—"Mr. A.'s party did the counting."

A wicked boy got into a fight with his uncle, and biting off his nose swallowed it. He was brought before the police court, his uncle appearing against him. "This is your nephew, is he?" asked the magistrate. "I am sorry to say he is." "I think I detect some resemblance," said the judge. "Yes," replied the uncle, mournfully, "he has my nose."

Mrs. O'Flannigan: "Shure now, Biddy—(hic), they're the foinest twins ol've seen these twenty yearsh, darlint." Biddy: "But it's not twins at all at all Mrs. O'Flannigan, only one." Mrs. O'Flannigan: "Just give me a drap o' the craythur, Biddy, darlint, an' mayhap ol'll be seein' three twinsh thin; an' if I do, bedad! ol'll appale to the queen, and send in my afferdavish, (hic), an' you'll have three goulden guineas sint ye in the twinklin' of a pig's whisper, begorra!"

Country girl—How can you tell an editor? Why it's the easiest thing in the world. You can tell him by his distinguished air, by the perfect fit of his clothes; by the elegance of his manners, and his winning ways. You may also know him by the lavish way he slings around his money; by the atmosphere of elegant leisure which always surrounds him. He generally dwives a dwag, and keeps a pet bull-dog with a brunette nose. He wears nothing but the most expensive jewelry, and invariably speaks the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth.

Mr. Emmet's New Dog.

Mr. Joseph K. Emmet was a constant visitor to the late dog show and spent most of his time while there looking at a huge St. Bernard dog, named Bayard, Jr., the property of Mr. Pepe, of Boston, who imported him last year. Bayard measures seven feet from the tip of his nose to the end of his tail. He is thirty-two and one-half inces high and weighs nearly two hundred pounds. His color is white and red, with a white collar and nose, and he has the much prized "sacred cross." He is only twenty months old and has a massive and beautiful head, with the kindest face imaginable, and great intelligent brown eyes. Mr. Emmet is playing "Fritz in Ireland," at the Grand Opera House, and last night a reporter of the World called there to ask him if he intended to train Bayard for the stage. The reporter was shown into Mr. Emmet's dressing room and there found Mrs. Emmet sitting on the floor, supporting Bayard's head in her lap, while his body almost filled the little apartment. In a few minutes Mr. Emmet entered from the stage. "You want to know what I'm going to do with Bayard?" said he. "Well, I don't know exactly. I bought him as a present for my wife, and it remains with her to decide. Wherever we go Bayard goes, so if he is in the theatre he might just as well be on the stage. Bayard has already made his debut. He went on twice last week—the first time was in the last act, where I am a mountain guide. He looked so handsome and so appropriate in that scene and was so well received that I made up my mind that I would let him appear in every scene I could. So the next night he went on in the first act, and behaved splendidly until the villain came on to steal 'Lena.' You know on this incident the whole play hinges. This Bayard did not clearly understand, and when the villain attempted to steal the child Bayard saw all was not right and drove him back to the wings. Then, standing guard over the child, he would not let any one approach until I went on and took him off so as to let the play proceed."

The Wise Editor.

Boomerang.

A Western editor offered a prize of $50 and a year's subscription for the best written proposal of marriage from a lady. He picked out a nice proposal from a beautiful and wealthy widow, answered it accepting the proposal, and with the threat of a breach of promise suit, actually captured her. Editors may not acquire wealth by writing twenty-three hours a day but when their genius takes the right shoot, they procure the persimmons.

FROM THE WIRES.

Little Rock, Ark., dispatch:

A letter written by a gentleman of Eureka Springs to a friend in this city, says that United States Senator Ben. Hill, of Georgia, is not improving to the extent hoped for by his friends, and his death appears to be only a question of time. He keeps his room as much as possible, and avoids prolonged conversations or interviews. His friends throughout the South are daily advised of his condition.

Saturday, in Lafayette county, on the Louisiana border, a negro named Wade Reed was reprimanded by Mrs. Reeves for passing through the yard and leaving the fence gate down. He left, but returned soon after with a gun, evidently looking for the lady, but not finding her found Mr. Reeves and fired both barrels, riddling Reeves' body with shot, and producing instant death.

At 1 o'clock to-day Ruben Lucas was executed near the Court House of Sans Bois county, Cherokee Nation, for the murder of Thompson McKerray in December last. All the parties are highly connected. Lucas was shot, according to Indian law.

Denver, Col., dispatch:

United States Marshal Smith yesterday arrested the third and last member of the Fuller family, charged with robbing the mails at Gunther, Ark., while in charge of the Postoffice. The elder Fuller was arrested at Pueblo, Mrs. Fuller in Denver, and young Fuller in Boulder.

New York dispatch says:

The jury in the case of General Curtis, Special Treasury Agent, rendered a verdict of guilty on the first and eighth counts, which charged the defendant with receiving, while in the the employ of the United States, money or other things of value for political purposes. A motion in arrest of judgment was made, and June 2d, fixed for the argumen.

Springfield, Ill., dispatch:

To-day was the most lively session yet held by the Presbyterian General Assembly, the question being on the reply to be made to the overtures for the exchange of delegates by the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the South. The discussion showed that while the Presbyterians of the North are more than axious for a union with the church South, and are ready to recall anything offensive that may have been said by former assemblies, they will not, under any circumstances, admit that the war was wrong or change the position taken by the church on the political questions involved in the war. They are willing to recant whatever may have been said about schism, heresy and blasphemy, but not what was said about loyalty and rebellion. The outcome of the morning's debate was the addition of a resolution explaining that the assembly, by its message, disclaimed any reference to the action of any preceding assembly as to loyalty and rebellion, but simply meant to withdraw anything said about schism, heresy, and blasphemy that was offensive to the brethren of the South. A message was then agreed upon similar to the one received from Atlanta.

The Bulletin publishes the following: "Edward Schieffelin, a well-known Arizona prospector and frontiersman, has organized a party of five experienced men, himself included, to make a thorough prospecting tour of the valley of the Yukon river, Alaska. The party has ample means. A small tight-draught sternwheel steamer has been built for river navigation, and will be taken on the deck of a schooner chartered for the purpose. The expedition will leave in a few days. Schieffelin believes that Alaska is within the mineral belt which extends through South America, Mexico, the United States and British Columbia, as far north as prospectors have explored, and leaving Alaska unexplored, is again disclosed in Siberia. The party expect to be absent three years."

Columbus, O., dispatch:

The Supreme Court room was crowded this morning by prominent attorneys from various parts of the State and representative liquor dealers, who had come to hear the result of the decision in the Pond Liquor law case. The court refused the writ of mandamus, and declared the law unconstitutional, on the ground that it is in the nature of a license. Judge Johnson dissented.

Springfield, Mo., dispatch:

The trial of Taylor Underwood for the murder of City Marshal J. P. McElrath, at Greenfield, terminated last night. The jury returned a verdict of guilty, assessing punishment of ninety-nine years in the penitentiary. Underwood was tried once before, found guilty, and sentenced to be hung; but, on appeal, got a rehearing, which resulted as above.

Louisville, Ky., dispatch:

The forty-fourth drawing of the Commonwealth Distribution Company took place to-day. The following prizes were drawn: Ticket 51,817 drew the capital prize of $30,000; ticket 8,947 drew the second prize of $10,000; ticket 65,175 the third prize, $5,000. The following tickets drew $1,000 each, viz.: numbers 4,416, 14,575, 20,802, 41,068, 57,022, 94,847.

Cleveland, O., dispatch:

The Coroner returned a verdict of justifiable homicide in the case of Frederick Jackson, who killed Thomas Merriam, in Olmstead Falls, Sunday night. Merriam was a farm hand, 27 years old, unmarried, and bore the reputation of a bully. Jackson who fired he fatal shot, is a peaceable farmer, who was much annoyed by Merriam, and when the fatal shot was fired Merriam was advancing upon Jackson in threatening manner, at the residence of the latter.

Wheeling, W. Va., dispatch:

One of the heaviest fires occuring here for years broke out shortly before 4 o'clock this morning in the wholesale grocery and liquor store of M. Reilly, on Main street, north of 14th. Impetus was given the fire by the large quantity of whisky and other liquor in the building, and in an incredibly short time the flames, which originated in the elevator way, had mounted to the roof and enveloped the whole building, and in spite of the herculean efforts of the fire department, the building, a three-story brick was completely gutted, and the stock nearly all destroyed. The loss on the building will be $10,000. The stock at the inventory on Jan. 4, was $79,000, but this included the meat in the pork house, powder in the magazine, whisky in bond, salt in the yard, and horse and wagon, etc., amounting in all to about $21,000. The total loss is about $60,000.

Indianapolis, Ind., dispatch:

After midnight last night an announcement was made that the firm of Woolen, Webb & Co., of this city, had made an assignment for the benefit of their creditors, naming Hon. Franklin Landers as the asignee. The following formal announcement is made to the public:

"Our business having become unprofitable we have determined to close it that all our creditors may fare alike. We have assigned our estate to Hon. Franklin Landers for their benefit. We trust enough will be realized from it to pay our creditors in full.

"WOOLEN, WEBB & Co."

It is stated by one of the firm that the liabilities will not exceed $72,000. The assets consist of real estate valued at $76,000, and bills receivable at $25,000. The failure will not affect any of the other banks in the city. Mr. Woolen states that since the failure of the Central Bank, their deposits have run down, and the firm concluded to discontinue business, but, in order that all creditors should fare alike, made an assignment of their property.

Love of the Sun in California.

San Francisco Call.

The houses of San Francisco are well adapted to the climate. Thick walls of brick or stone would keep out the sunlight, which is what the Californian wants more than anything else. That is why every house is studded and embossed with bay windows until all semblance of architectural beauty is lost. Every bay window increases the capacity for sunlight and air, and makes the house so much more pleasant and healthful. A house with bay windows always commands from $5 to $10 a month more than one of the same kind without them. Scientists say there is a certain actinic property in the sunlight here which is lacking in the East; so that a sun-bath every day is one of the best preservers of health and strength. Certainly Californians have the Spanish-American love of the sun, which is shown in the rich olive complexions that one sees in many of the faces of women on the streets. The men would probably show the same features, but the tendency to shorten the time between drinks gives to a great many that glowing hue known as the "burning Moscow" complexion. In fact, if the truth must be told, there is an immense amount of liquor absorbed in the city.

Couldn't Get Her Money.

Judge Lawrence, First Comptroller of the Treasury, has rendered a decision in a case possessing some romantic features. Mr. DeBildt, Secretary of the Sweedish Legation, a figure of considerable prominence in social circles, married the daughter of a wealthy Philadelphian, who inherited a large fortune in her own right, in 1879. Mrs. DeBildt, fortunately, possessed a careful disposition, and instead, of placing her fortune at the disposal of her husband, invested it in 4 per cents, registered in her own name. Last year she was committed to an insane asylum, on application of her husband, who has since tried in every way to get possession of her money. Judge Lawrence holds, however, that when, after marriage, bonds are bought with the wife's money and are registered in her name, under the laws of the District of Columbia the husband can in no way control the bonds. A guardian or committee must be appointed to collect and receive the interest in case the wife is insane.

Grace Before Meat.

Brooklyn Eagle

In the good old times it would have been considered a breach of good breeding, if not open sin, to have sat down to a meal without returning thanks. But the times are now so greatly changed that the religious rite referred to is much more honored in the breach than in the observance. The change which has within the last half-century or so taken place in the boarding system, in houses as well as restaurants, has doubtless had something to do with bringing about a change, as in a promiscuous company it would provoke risibility to ask a blessing on the viands laid on the table, more especially in a saloon.

Clara Belle (Frank File, of the New York Sun,) is a father.

HOW QUEEN VICTORIA IS ATTENDED.

The Mistress of the Robes and Maids of Honor to Her Majesty.

An article in Chamber's Journal says:

"In the Lord Chamberlain's department are the Mistress of the Robes, with a salary of £500; the Groom of the Robes, with £800 (and a clerk, a messenger, and a furrier as assistants), and eight Ladies of the Bed-Chamber. The duties of the latter consist in waiting on Her Majesty for a fortnight at a time in rotation; thus each lady would be called upon three times a year for this duty. Following these in rank are the eight Maids of Honor, who represent a very old institution in connection with royalty. In 1625, shortly after his marriage with Henrietta, of France, Charles I. issued the following rules for the guidance of the Maids: 'The Queen's Maids of Honor are to come into the Presence Chamber before 11 of the clock, and to go to prayers; and after prayers to attend until the Queen be set at dinner. Again, at 2 o'clock to return into the said chamber, and there to remain until supper-time. And when they shall be retired into their chamber, they admit of no man to come there, and that they go not at any time out of the court without leave of the Lord Chamberlain of Her Majesty, and that the Mother of the Maids see all these duties concerning the Maids duly observed, as she will answer to the contrary.' Nowadays, the Queen's Maids of Honor do not have such restrictions placed on their liberty, and merely take their turn, two at a time, for one month, to attend on Her Majesty. After these in rank stand the eight Bedchamber Women, who serve in rotation in the same manner, and are only expected to figure on State occasions. Henrietta, Duchess of Suffolk, in one of her letters, gives an interesting account of the duties of these 'women' in her time. 'The Bedchamber Women came into waiting before the Queen's prayers, which was before she was dressed. The Queen often shifted in a morning. If Her Majesty shifted at noon, the Bedchamber Lady being by, the Bedchamber Woman gave the shift to the Lady without any ceremony, and the Lady put it on. Sometimes, likewise, the Bedchamber Woman gave the fan to the Lady in the same manner; and this was all that the Bedchamber Lady did about the Queen when she was dressing. When the Queen washed her hands, the Page of the Back Stairs brought and set down on the side-table the basin and ewer. Then the Bedchamber Woman set it before the Queen, and knelt on the other side of the table over against the Queen, the Bedchamber Lady only looking on. The Bedchamber Woman poured the water out of the ewer upon the Queen's hands. The Bedchamber Woman pulled on the Queen's gloves when she could not do it herself. The Page of the Back Stairs was called in to put on the Queen's shoes,' etc. All this is now obsolete; the situations are quite honorary so far as work is concerned. The salaries of the Maids of Honor and the Bedchamber Women are £300 per annum each."

Male and Female.

Popular Science.

Students of physiology see that a final and conclusive law cannot yet be drawn from differences in brain weights and measurements, because of the present imperfection of such data. But there is an even broader and better foundation from which to build up a conclusion, and I propose to stand on this more general ground. In order, however, that such physiological details may have due influence upon the general argument, I give you a few of the best established facts. Prof. Bastian's work on the brain, published in 1880, sums up his studies of this organ as affected by sex. I condense or quote from him the following statements: "Difference of sex, in its influence over capacity of skull, is often greater than difference of race. * * * Difference of cranial capacity between the sexes increases with the development of the race, so that the male European excels much more the female than the negro the negress. The difference in the average capacity of the skulls of male and female among the modern Parisians is almost double that between the skulls of the male and female inhabitants of ancient Egypt. * * * The general superiority, in absolute weight, of the male over the female brain exists at every period of development. In new born infants the brain was found by Tiedmann to weigh from 14½ ounces to 15½ ounces in the male, and from 10 ounces to 13½ ounces in the female. The maximum weight of the adult male brain, in a series of 278 cases was 65 ounces; the minimum weight 37 ounces. The maximum weight of the adult female brain in a series of 191 cases, was 56 ounces: the minimum, 31 ounces. In a large proportion the male brain ranges between 46 and 53 ounces, and the female between 41 and 47 ounces. A mean average weight of 49½ ounces may be deduced from the male, and of 44 ounces for the female brain." It is further given, on the authority of Gratiolet and others, that the male brain cannot fall below 37 ounces without involving idiocy; while the female may fall to 32 ounces without such a result. All accepted authorities agree that the average male in brain exceeds the average female brain weight by 10 per cent. Professor Thurman also adds; "The brain weight of the male negro is the same as that of the female European."

Present and Prospective Prices of Food.

The important advances in the prices of staple articles of food, adding materially to what is termed the cost of living, has been treated at some length by the New York Financial Chronicle. It says the speculations in staples of agriculture have received their most active impulse from the apprehension that had been excited in the minds of many that there was danger of very high prices for many articles of food, before the proceeds of another harvest will become available; so that it is quite worth while to inquire what is the real situation and the probabilities as to supplies. The rapid growth of our cities and manufacturing communities during the past twenty or thirty years gives to the question of the cost of living, in its relation to and effect upon general trade, an importance scarcely less than that which it has for a long time held in Great Britain and other densely populated countries.

That the wheat crop in the United States in 1881 was 118,000,000 bushels or nearly 25 per cent. smaller than in 1880 (as estimated at the Agricultural Bureau at Washington), there is now no room to question. The visible supply of wheat in the United States and Canada, east of the Rocky Mountains, as recently made up, was 9,000,000 bushels, or 45 per cent. less than last year, and there is no likelihood that any considerable quantities are yet in the hands of the growers. The consumption is larger than last year, owing to dearer corn and other causes. Yet the Chronicle can see little to justify apprehensions of extreme high prices for wheat. "Stocks of wheat in English markets are generally larger than one year ago. And finally the prospects for the growing crop of winter is almost everywhere good. In middle latitudes of the United States it is much earlier than usual, and in a very few weeks we shall have flour rom new wheat in sufficient quantities to at least check the demand upon distributing points. This will be an important gain to supplies. Our ability to respond to an export demand in July and August will depend upon the favorable or unfavorable weather during harvest, affecting the shipping condition of the crop. But we may repeat there is no present danger of great scarcity and excessively high prices.

"With Indian corn by its correlatives, bacon, pork and lard, the conditions are different. We are yet a long way from a new crop of corn. To a large extent it has not yet been planted. Under the most favorable circumstances, the new crop cannot come upon the great market before December next, though it may become available to the immediate uses of growers early in the Autumn. The Agricultural Bureau estimates that quite recently there was only 52 per cent. as much corn in the hands of growers as at the corresponding date of 1881. The drouth last year was peculiary disastrous to corn. The visible supply is about 26 per cent. of last year. There is a scarcity of roots which might be substituted for it for feeding purposes, and oats are equally dear. We are pretty certain to have a forcible remainder of how valuable a crop of Indian corn is to our people.

"But with regard to the home demand for food we are to remember that high prices of any of the foregoing articles will induce extreme economy in consumption. And from this time on, throughout the most of the South this economy will be possible, the gardens there supplying all their needs. The North has also, through the South, and very soon will have in its own production, a supply of many vegetables. The deficiency in the growth last season of potatoes and some other vegetables has been made good by importations from Europe. This Spring our supplies from Bermuda, as well as from the South are likely to be large. There remains, consequently, no ground for apprehension on these points.

"It is probable, therefore, that while price of meats may be high for some months to come, bread and other necessaries may be expected to rule at prices little if any above the average of seasons. The American people eat too much meat, and any exigency that will cause a reduction in the quantity consumed by them will not be wholly a misfortune."

If you feel drowsy, debilitated, have frequent headache, mouth tastes badly, poor appetite and tongue coated, you are suffering from torpid liver, or "biliousness," and nothing will cure you so speedily and permanently as to take SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR OR MEDICINE.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

The cheapest, Purest and Best Family Medicine in the World.

An EFFECTUAL SPECIFIC for all diseases of the Liver Stomach and Spleen.

Regulate the Liver and prevent Chills and Fever, Malarious Fevers, Bowl Complaints, Restlessness, Jaundice and Nausea.

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common as bad breath, and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons' Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your Appetite, Complexion, and General Health.

PILES!

How many suffer torture day after day, making life a burden and robbing existence of pleasure, owing to the secret suffering from Piles. Yet relief is ready to the hand of almost any one who will use systematically the remedy that has permanently cured thousands. SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR, is no drastic violent purge; but a gentle assistant to nature.

CONSTIPATION!

Should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache.

FOR
NERVOUS DEBILITY
BY YEARS OF USE!

A valuable Discovery and New Departure in Medical Science. A positively effective Remedy for the speedy and permanent Cure for organic weakness—the deplorable disease resulting from indiscreet practices or excesses in youth or at any time of life—by the only true way, viz: Direct Application acting by Absorption, and exerting its specific influence on the Vesicles, Ducts, and Gland, that are unable to perform their natural functions while this disease pervades the human organism. The use of the Pastille is attended with no pain or inconvenience, and does not interfere with the ordinary pursuits of life; it is quickly dissolved and soon absorbed, producing an immediate soothing and restorative effect upon the nervous organizations wrecked from vicious habits or excesses, stopping the drain from the system, restoring the mind to health and sound memory, removing the Dimness of Sight, Confusion of Ideas, Aversion to Society, etc., etc., and the appearance of premature old age usually accompanying this trouble, and restoring the vital forces, where they have been dormant for years. This mode of treatment has stood the test in very severe cases, and is now a pronounced success. Drugs are too much prescribed in this trouble, and, as many can bear witness to, with but little if any permanent good. There is no nonsense about this Preparation. Practical observation enables us to positively guarantee that it will give satisfaction. It has been in general use for several years and we have thousands of testimonials from patients, as to its value, and it is now conceded to be the most rational means yet discovered for reaching and curing this very prevalent trouble, that is well known to be the cause of untold misery to so many, and upon whom quacks prey with their useless nostrums and big fees. The Remedy is put up in neat boxes, of three sizes. No. 1, (enough to last a month,) $3; No. 2, (sufficient to effect a permanent cure, unless in severe cases,) $5; No. 3, (lasting over three months, will restore those in the worst condition,) $7. Sent by mail, in plain wrappers. Full DIRECTIONS for using will accompany EACH BOX.

Send for Sealed Descriptive Pamphlet giving Anatomical Illustrations and Testimony, which will convince the most skeptical that they can be restored to perfect health, and the vital forces thoroughly re-established same as if never affected. Sold ONLY by Unsolicited testimony to the Efficacy of Prof. Harris' Pastilles, taken from Letters received from Patrons!

Indiana, April 11, '78.—The Remedy is working perfectly. Had epilepsy from weakness, for 9 years past.

Iowa, Oct. 20th, '78.—I am almost surprised at your Pastilles. They have worked like a charm on me. I am just twice as much of a man as I was before taking. I was on the verge of the grave, I thought, and there was no hope for me, but now I am in good hopes for a cure.

West Virginia, Aug. 23, 1879.—I received your medicine and I believe it has cured me, for which I am very thankful. Inclosed find $5. Please send me another box (No. 2) for a friend. You have done a great thing for me. I will send you all the orders I can.

From a Physician and Surgeon.

Missouri, June 22.—Please forward me another box of the Pastilles. The patient on whom I have used most of one box, in addition to a sample box, is fast recovering, and I think another will set him all right.

From a Druggist.

Maryland, Sept. 2 '79.—Last January we got a box of your Remedy for one of our customers, and it has made a perfect cure of him. We have another customer now suffering in the same way, and who uses No. 1 box.

How He Won Her.

(Chicago Tribune.)

"Do you dance?"

"No, I dropped on myself two seasons ago," was the response, in a strong, manly voice.

Veronica McGuire looked up at Geo. W. Simpson, with an expression of wonder and surprise in her soft, velvety eyes.

"I am sorry you do not dance, Mr. Simpson," said Veronica, after a momentary pause, "because is is really the one thing in which I may truthfully lay claim to being proficient. As you have no doubt discovered before this, I am a wretched hand at conversation, an original idea never seeming to find birth in this empty head of mine."

George looked fondly down upon her bang.

"I am afraid you are rather inclined to depreciate your own ability," he said, throwing just a shade of tenderness into the rich tones of his pure voice. "You play nicely and you certainly sing well."

"Only passably, my dear Mr. Simpson," was the laughing reply; "you really must not flatter me too much, because I am vain enough already. But, by the way, have you heard 'Over the Garden Wall' yet."

"No," was the reply, in tones that were tremulous with emotion. "I never heard the tune, but I have had occasion to go over the wall once or twice."

"It is a beautiful thing," said Veronica. "There is a weird sadness and yet joy about the music that carries one completely away. Do you not find it so oftentimes?"

"Yes," replied George, "it is pretty darn weird to get over a wall on a dark night and dive down into an alley that you don't know anything about."

"You are just too funny!" exclaimed the girl, looking at him steadily. As she did so his eyes met hers, and the rich color flooded her cheeks, making them more radiantly beautiful than ever. Turning quickly, she stood with averted face and downcast eye, and for a moment no word was spoken. Finally George stepped to Veronica's side and took the little hand that was toying with a rose into his broad palm. She did not start, nor seek to withdraw it.

[Right here it might be stated that Chicago girls are warranted not to shy.]

George held the dimpled prisoner for a moment, and then raised it to his lips.

"Mr. Simpson!" exclaimed the girl, "you do not seem to know what you are doing. Remember, sir, that—"

"Oh, I know all about it, said George. I know that you are rich and uneducated, and that you can never hope to soar in the empyrean heights of literature and knowledge where I reside permanently. But my love for your father's check-book will overcome all this. I appreciate fully the sacrifice I am making, but you must not seek to dissuade me."

"And do you then love me so dearly, George?" the girl asked.

"Certainly, my darling. Without your love, life would be nothing but a four flush to me. All my happiness is centered in my love for you. Can you deliberately cast that love aside, darling?"

For answer she raised her pure, sweet face to his, and placed a large three-for-fifty cents kiss on his innocent Wabash avenue lips.

WHY THE BEAR IS STUMPY-TAILED.—"One day the bear met the fox, who came slinking along with a string of fish he had stolen.

"Whence did you get those from?" asked the bear.

"Oh, my lord bruin, I'v been out fishing, and caught them," said the fox.

"So the bear had a mind to learn to fish, too, and bade the fox tell him how he was to set about it.

"Oh, it's an easy craft for you," answered the fox, and soon learnt; you've only got to go upon the ice and cut a hole, and stick your tail down into it; and so you must go on holding it there as long as you can. You're not to mind if your tail smarts a little,—that's when the fish bite; the longer you hold it there the more fish you'll get; and then, all at once, out with it, with a cross-pull sideways, and with a strong pull too."

"Yes, the bear did as the fox said and held his tail a long, long time down in the hole, till it was fast frozen in; then he pulled it out with a cross-pull, and it snapped short off; that's why bruin goes about with a stumpy tail this very day."

Wabash College.

This excellent institution of learning has just entered on the fiftieth year of its work. It has a reputation for thorough work, second to none in the country. The ability and high standing of its faculty, the character of work done, and the favorable location should be considerations to which those who expect to attend college should give their full thoughts. Many young men in this county, we are aware, expect to attend a college somewhere and take a more or less thorough course of instruction. To such, we say, give Old Wabash a trial. Write to the secretary, John L. Campbell, at Crawfordsville, and obtain full information as to the merits of this institution. 22-4t.

Society Belles.

On account of its remarkably delicate and lasting fragrance society belles are loud in the praises of Floreston Cologne. 20-4t.

THE ÆTNA IS THE SAFEST, STRONGEST AND BEST POWDER

IN THE WORLD FOR

REMOVING STUMPS AND STONES!

Is unnecessary to tell a farmer his land is more valuable without the stump than with them. He knows that now. What he wants to know is the Best Quickest and Cheapest method of removing them, and that question we answer by saying, BLAST THEM OUT WITH ÆTNA POWDER. Any stump, large or small, green or decayed, can be thrown entirely out of the ground and broken into pieces small enough to handle.

If you have any stumps, send us your address and we will send you a man to do your work, or will sell you the powder and tools so you can do it yourself Don't delay, but attend to it at once.

Volume 12. AUBURN, DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, JUNE 15, 1882. Number 24.

Auburn Courier.

JAMES A. BARNS, Publisher.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, postoffice as second-class matter.

The National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, will be held at Baltimore, June 21, 22, 23, 24, 1882. The programme of the entertainment of this encampment is on a more extensive scale than ever before, the city of Baltimore has appropriated thousands of dollars to entertain the old veterans, on June 21, the grand parade takes place, in which the Maryland state troops, 14th, regiment of Brooklyn, Richmond Blues, Charleston S. C. Light Infantry, and detachments from the United States army will act as escort for the Grand Army of the Republic, from present indications there will be 10,000, uniformed members of the Grand Army of the Republic in line, the other days will be devoted to pleasure excursions to Washington. Mt. Vernon, and the battle fields. The B. & O. R. R. offers special inducements to all members taking its line, three through trains daily to Baltimore, via Washington, with the new B. & O. palace sleeping cars attached, this picturesque route over the Allegheany mountains and through the valley of the Potomac, and its many points of interest, made historic by the late war, makes the route most desirable for the old soldier, round trip tickets will be on sale on June 18, 19, 20 and 21st, for all regular trains. The department of Ohio, head quarters, and the delegates from the various posts, will leave on June 19th, on train No. 5, crossing the mountains in day light and arriving at Baltimore at 4:20 p. m. parties desiring tickets, and sleeping car accomodations, can procure the same by applying to the agents of the B. & O. R. R. Co. or addressing W. E. Reppert, Pass Agt, No. 205½ North High street, Columbus Ohio. 24-3t.

The LaGrange Register has the following "phat" item which takes in some one of our fair pedagogues on a "root or die" investment: "There's a young lady schoolmarm in DeKalb county who, if she don't exactly believe that 'all flesh is grass, is thoroughly satisfied that all kinds of pork are mighty uncertain, a delusion and a snare. It seems that some rich old farmer had told her that there was money in the hog and cattle business, and of how fast the stock raisers of the great west accumulated wealth. So the young schoomarm determined to do a little in that way herself, and she bought a two months old pig of a neighbor about a mile away. She carries the pig home in her arms, and it kicked the buttons all off the front of her dress, and ripped off three yards of steel bead trimming, besides knocking the huge lace bow under her chin clear around under her left ear. She got the pork home, however, and put it under a tub with one side raised with a stick of stove wood to let in a little fresh oxygen while she built a pig pen. And while she was building the pen the pig rooted the stick out, and the tub fell down, and when the schoomarm raised the temporary corall, she found the pig dead as a box of herrrings, smothered to make a schoolmarm's holiday."

The Detroit Free Press says this in regard to the Saginaw road which sent the first engine that ever passed through Auburn over the rail: We fear, however, that the editor's views of the pool freight over the Jackson will not be borne out by the facts: "The probable gobbling up of the Fort Wayne and Jackson railroad is now talked of as an event which the next few weeks is sure to see consummated. It is a remarkable fact, that although some of the greatest trunk lines in the country pass through Fort Wayne, three-fifths of the traffic of the place, as reported on the books of the trunk line pool, goes to the little Fort Wayne & Jackson. This speaks better for M. D. Woodford's management than anything that could be said. But then Woodford, modest, quiet and unassuming as he is, always had a way of imbuing his subordinates with a part of his indefatigability.

Warren Mason, of Lagro township, prides himself on owning the boss cow, and she is not a Jersey or Short Horn, either. For some time she has given sixty pounds of milk daily, and in fourteen days, milk weighing as much as the brute herself was taken from her. Mr. Mason says she is of the "Pennyroyal" breed, and states that he wouldn't trade even, so far as actual value as a milker is concerned, for any Jersey in the country.—[Wabash Courier.

Humors of the Tariff.

The following from the Indianapolis Sentinel is too good to be overlooked. "Hon. S. S. Cox is known to be a wit as well as a statesman, and to possess the happy faculty of making his wit available when discussing subjects of the highest moment to the people. As, for instance, says Mr. Cox: "The little girl can not play with the doll, nor the boy whip the top, nor the mother wash her offspring with soap, except at an expense from one-third to one-half of their cost for the domestic privilege. If the mother gives her child castor oil, she pours down 148 per cent advalorem, if the child does not enjoy the dose there is a 25 per cent. bowl as a recipient of the contents of its tender stomach. And though she 'wash it with niter and take to it much soap, yet the iniquity is marked before me, saith the Lord,' for the soap is marked 40 per centum. God help the child. If she wraps the little dear in a plain bleached cotton night shirt it has to pay 5¼ cents per square yard, and when the child awakes in the morning fretful she combs its little head at 35 cents ad valorem; if she would amuse it, she rolls it over Brussels carpet at 90 cents per square yard, or gives it confectonary made of refined sugar at 4 cents a pound tax, and 25 per cent. ad valorem; if it tears its little panties, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. Kelley) sews them up with spool-thread taxed at three quarters of its value. Why, if she used a shingle to bring the little 'toddling wee thing' to its senses, as the honorable gentleman can recall, the cost would be enhanced at the rate of 17 per cent. taxation. If the youngster has a patriotic inclination on our Fourth of July, his fire-crackers are taxed as a patriotic luxury at $1 extra a box, and the bunting which furnishes the flag, though but twenty-three cents a pound, costs 121 per cent. extra, while the band plays on instruments taxed at thirty cents. She takes him to the menagerie to study natural history. There is the zebra, symbolic of a mixed ad valorem and specific, and the stately giraffe, high protection, the royal tiger and unicorn of Holy Writ, 25 per cent. And the procession of elephants. Every one 20 per cent. True, Jumbo, for purposes not to be mentioned, is excluded by the affidavit of a consistent protectionist! but the log-chain that holds his huge legs binds the monster in protective chains." Such facts, however playfully presented, come home to every family in the land, and in these days, when mothers as well as fathers discuss public affairs, the tariff, as it touches home interests, is deserving of attention".

"J. N." on Guiteau.

"J. N." arrived in town this morning and assures us that he assumes the pressure respecting Guiteau's relation toward the nation at this time. Guiteau, "J. N." says, is perfectly sane except on one idea, i. e. that God impelled him on Garfield, in order to make Arthur president. On this idea he took Garfield's life, and by the act, as he claims, influenced by God, made him president, and, of course Arthur must be pleased that he is president of the Nation. He should now suspend Guiteau's execution at least one hundred days. He should summon together the superintendents of the insane asylum and examine into the condition of the man's brain who might be dangerous to the community if discharged in his present condition. "J. N." submits these views with the greatest of respect to others who may be of different opinion.—Fort Wayne News.

A Word to Mothers.

Mothers should remember that it is a most important duty at this season to look after the health of their families and cleanse the malaria and impurities from their systems, and that nothing will tone up the stomach and liver, regulate the bowels and purify the blood so perfectly as Parker's Ginger Tonic, advertised in our columns.—[Post. The Teaching of Hygeine in Schools.

Prof. S. E. Chaille, of the University of Louisiana, has a paper on the above subject, in the April number of the New Orleans Medical and Surgical Journal, from which we take the following extract:

"A single generation instructed in hygeine would greatly increase the number of sensible parents, who, heeding less the foolish counsel of ignorant nurses, of prejudiced grand-mothers, and of silly and officious neighbors, would cease to take part, as so many parents now do, in killing their own children, to such an extent, that one-fourth of all the babies born in New Orleans are hurried to the grave during the first year of life. Such parents would better enforce the domestic sanitation, and that home education of children, without which, there can be no fundamental and lasting reform in hygeine. And such parents would at last get on the right road to learn, and to teach their children, what actions are physically detrimental, and that all such actions should be shunned as sins, inasmuch as whatever injures health impaires the discharge of all duties.

"Other important benefits would also be conferred. The number of citizens deeply impressed with the danger to themselves would become so large that they would no longer suffer any one to be deterred, as is now often the case, by the threats of ignorant or selfish neighbors, from complaining of the foulest and most unhealthy nuisances. Such citizens would see to it, that sanitary ordinances were not simply enacted but also executed. A sounder public opinion, due to such citizens, would force all doctors, promptly to report to the sanitary authorities as many doctors, to the great injury of the public, now do not, every case of communicable disease. Sanitarians would be provided with a constituency which could appreciate and would heed their judicious warnings.

"The high officials, authorised thereto, would no longer venture, as they now sometimes do, to appoint, as sanitary officers charged with the arduous and responsible duty of guarding the public health, men(medical as well as nonmedical) who know nothing about the preventation of disease; who, in fact, are destitute of every claim, except that due to personal friendship or political partizanship; and who neither deserve or receive the public confidence without which sanitary officers are apt to cause more harm than good. Such appointments would no longer receive the tacit approval on an ignorant and indifferent public. Competent officers would no longer be forced to plead before such a public, that it ought not hold them resposible for evils, which it gives them neither power nor means to correct.

"In addition, New Orleans would at last cease to show a balance so unfavorable, between its death rate and its birth rate, that its increase of population depends on its immigrants from the healthier air of the country; as is also the case with most other large cities, their inhabitants, like ours, still continuing too ignorant to secure themselves the most important requisite to health, pure air. Not only would all these benefits be more fully secured with each succeeding generation, but the day would at last dawn here, as it has dawned in England, when any citizen struck down by preventable disease, due to another's ignorance or negligence, can recover heavy damages. Eventually, all would understand, that disease and premature death are not due to the vindictiveness of God, but are unavoidable penalities for the violation of nature's immutable sanitary laws which the Creator, who regulates all things with the wondrous order which is Heaven's first laws, should not be expected to set aside, however piteously implored by those who have neglected to learn and to obey these laws."—Sanitary Engineer.

A wagon load of misery excited pity at Ottawa, Kansas. It was a handcuffed thief on his way to prison; his insane wife, who was being taken to the asylum; two children going to the poorhouse, and a dead baby bound for a graveyard. The object in taking them all in one vehicle was to manage the woman easily, as she refused to part from the rest.—Chicago Herald.

The organs and bosses of the republican party are not so eloquent as formerly in charging the democratic party with blundering. The Nashville Banner is of the opinion that the republican party, without reference to its stealings, which are crimes instead of blunders, has become the great blunderer. And side by side the opinions of the COURIER and Banner walk down the political path together.

"LIFE HATH ITS BARREN YEARS."

Life hath its barren years,
When blossoms fall untimely down,
When ripened fruitage fails to crown
The summer's toil; when nature's frown
Looks only on its fears.

Life hath its fruitless days,
The golden promise of the morn,
That seemed for light and gladness born,
Meant only noontide wreck and scorn,
Hushed harp instead of praise.

Life hath its valleys, too,
Where we must walk with vain regret,
With mourning clothed, with wild rain wet,
Toward sunlight hopes that soon must set,
All quenched in pitying dew.

Life hath its harvest moons,
Its tasseled corn and purple-weighted wine;
Its gathered sheaves of grain, the blessed sign
Of plenteous ripening bread and pure rich wine,
Full hearts for harvest tunes.

Life hath its hopes fulfilled;
Its glad fruitions, its best answered prayer,
Sweeter for waiting long, whose holy air,
Indrawn to silent souls, breathes forth its rare,
Grand speech by joy distilled.

FALSE OR TRUE?

"Only a home; I ask nothing more, Miss Burton; but I must have a home, or die. I will be maid, seamstress, anything you wish, for a home."

Miss Burton's beautiful brown eyes had never left the speaker's face; for twenty years she had steeled her heart against all pertaining to this girl, and yet now she found it hard to withstand those lovely, pleading eyes.

"If you take me, Miss Burton," continued the sad young voice, "I will serve you so gladly. I have battled for myself two years, ever since poor papa died, and now I could wish to die myself."

"Hush, girl! No one dares to wish that. You know my story, Jeannette Moore, mine, your father's and your mother's and you cannot wonder that, although I will keep you, I expect only ingratitude."

"I thank you," said Jeannette Moore, slowly. "Perhaps sometime I can prove that I am not ungrateful."

Miss Burton waved her white hand, commanding silence; then she rang a bell, and said to the maid who answered it:

"Open Miss Florence's room and have it arranged, for Miss Moore will occupy it henceforth."

When Jeannette Burton was 16 (she was almost 37 now), she was a vision of beauty seldom seen; those calm, powerful brown eyes and classical features made her pre-eminently glorious. They had called her "Gloria" in those days, but now it was only Miss Jeannette or Miss Burton.

The family had then consisted of Mr. Burton, his son Roy, and Gloria, beside Florence, the child of his only brother. Florence Burton was not beautiful, but she was a thousand times more attractive than the stately Gloria, and Roy was madly in love with her; so much so that Mr. Burton reluctantly consented to their engagement when Roy was 18, and his cousin two years younger.

Gloria had been promised to Harry Moore, a handsome young artist, as aristocratic as he was poor, ever since her childhood. On her 17th birthday she was to be married, and great preparations were made for the wedding. One week before the time Florence started poor the village with Harry Moore, to make some trifling purchase for the bride, and never returned. The next morning word came that they were married.

The shock killed Mr. Burton, and sent for Roy, the gay, care-free Roy of old, away from the loved home of his childhood, where he might forget Florence's perfidy. But Jeannette Burton reigned calmly on at Burton Hill.

Only a year after the runaway bride died, leaving a tender baby girl, whose name she asked might be Jeannette, for the girl they had wronged.

Jeanie Moore was happy indeed until her father died and left her penniless; but she took up the burden bravely, and, worked for her bread with all her might. She struggled for two years, and then, worn out and disheartened, applied to Miss Burton for aid. I think even then the lady would have refused her request but for the girl's eloquent, violet eyes, so like Florence Burton's that she could not resist.

"False!" Miss Jeannette whispered bitterly, half angry with herself. "Like mother, like child."

Yes, Jennie Moore was fair and fascinating, with diamond-like eyes, like the Florence of long ago; but whether she, too, were false, only time would tell. She was at least true to her word; she asked only a home, and she had gotten it. She secured pupils and gave lessons in drawing and painting, and soon won her tiny share of fame. She became a general favorite, too, for she had a pleasant word or a smiling glance from those wonderful violet eyes for everyone.

She took a deep interest in Burton Hill, where she found so many mementos of her dead, reverenced mother. In the art gallery, seldom entered now, hung that mother's picture, away from the rest of the Burton's, of whose faces Roy's pleased Jennie best. There was something in the brilliant, proud, and yet kindly brown eyes that made her pity him. He had loved her mother, and she (Jennie always sighed here) had betrayed his love.

The old wound in Jeannette Burton's heart had healed, and Harry was utterly forgotten in the deep womanly love which, in her maturer years she gave to Captain Whittmore. He, a grave man of 40, loved her as a man only once loves, and his heart warmed as he read her letter, asking him to come to Burton Hill, and telling him of its new inmate, Jennie Moore, and yet he shivered.

When he met the girl he seemed perplexed and his face paled as he looked into the bright eyes and took one little hand.

"So you are Jennie Moore?" he asked.

"Yes."

Jennie faltered, with flushed cheeks and downcast eyes, which did not escape Miss Burton's notice.

"Here are some views that arrived yesterday from Scotland, Laurence," she remarked. "If you will come into the west parlor you can see them in a good light."

"I mean to try the picture," the girl whispered, when they left her alone. "Roy Burton's eyes would look lovely sad, and I must try it. But why did he come here? I thought he meant to stay in France, where he was when we knew him. Well, it cannot matter.

But she found it did matter, when it was too late. Capt. Whittmore watched Jennie more than half the time and talked to her, it seemed, the other half. Miss Burton grew anxious. Had not Florence taken Harry from her? Was it not for her child to win Laurence Whittmore? No, no! Heaven was unkind to her.

It was a dark, stormy night in November, the third month of Jennie's stay at Burton Hill. They were sitting in the library, Jennie apart from the others, painting on a head of the old watch-dog, Hero, and Capt. Whittmore and Miss Burton talking easily, and a little confidentally, until the latter was called away.

When she returned, some fifteen minutes later, she found the Captain bending over Jennie, who had risen, both of her hands clasped in his.

"Jennie, you will never tell her," he was saying, and Miss Burton stopped.

"No, I will be true to you," was the answer bravely given. "And she, dear, good Miss Burton, will never, never know."

"She does know!" exclaimed the listener, entering with a square piece of canvas in her hands. "You are false, too, Jennette Moore! False as Florence herself! And now I ask you to explain this."

She turned the canvas toward them, and disclosed a picture; a scene familiar to them all, Miss Jeannette's father, with a paper in his hands, his head bowed with grief—she herself kneeling with her piteous face lifted to the sky, while Ray stood at a distance, calm and white, with a terrible agony in his brown eyes. This was Jeanie's idea of how they had looked on that dreadful morning, twenty years before, and she had written, in tender, girlish pity, the name, 'Gloria's Desertion,' in one corner.

"You painted it?"

"Yes," Jeanie found voice to reply.

"You are false to me, to all. Now take this vile thing and leave my house! You are to wait for nothing—go immediately! Will you stand aside, Laurence?"

She seized the shivering form, led her to the door, and put her outside. Capt. Wittmore followed her.

"You are mad, Jeannette," he exclaimed, as the door closed on poor Jeanie. "Let me me explain. I—"

"You will not say a word!" The brown eyes looked their defiance. "Neither will you follow her until morning. I command it, and I will see that my commands are enforced.

The morning broke clear. Jeanette Burton stood at the low window in the library, her sunken eyes turned without, where a figure toiled its way to the gate of Burton Hill. It was a man, tall and majestic, whose eyes never left the limp, helpless figure he held.

Miss Burton threw open the window as he approached.

"She cannot be brough there!" cried she.

He lifted a pair of dark, stern eyes to her face, and stepped over the casement with his burden, which he placed upon the lounge by the grate. Poor Jeanie was wet through, and utterly unconscious. Her lashes rested upon her white cheeks, and her long, soft hair fell like a veil half over them.

"You are Jeannette Burton?" the stranger asked abruptly.

"I am"

"And she is—"

"Jeannette Moor."

"Florence Burton's daughter?"

"Yes."

"I thought so! I recognized the picture. It is sadly defaced. Do you know what it is?"

He held up Jeanie's picture, all wet and soiled.

"I do. But who are you?"

"I am Robert Burton, the Roy of this."

He pointed to the canvas.

"My brother!" Miss Jennette exclaimed.

Jennie stirred and lifted her violet eyes.

"I meant no harm, Miss Burton," she said faintly. "His eyes were so beautiful, and I wanted to see how they would look sorrowful. So I painted it, and then I put in the others, you and Mr. Burton. Please forgive me."

Miss Burton left the room and returned with Capt. Whittmore, who looked with frightened eyes at Jennie.

"Jennette," he said huskily, turning to her, "you must hear me now for her sake, whether you will or not. I wanted her to keep my secret. Five years ago I was a gambler—no inoffensive player, but a desperate gambler, with no higher employment. They saved me, Harry Moore and his gentle, violet-eyed child. I loved you, Jennette, and did not want you to know. Poor little Jennie, she kept my secret well."

"Thanks," whispered the girl, feebly, and fainted dead away.

She had not been false after all, but she had paid for her truth almost with her life.

When at last she recovered there was a quiet wedding at the Hill, and "Gloria" (everybody called her that now) took her away with the Captain and herself to their own home. After a little while Jeanie went back to Burton Hill with Roy, as his wife.

"Jennie, the true," Roy calls her laughingly, sometimes, and then, with a tender clasp of the slender form, he assures her that the child has atoned a thousand times for all the pain the mother caused him.

Wants to Marry Arthur.

"Yes, I've come to Washington to marry the President."

"And pray, madame," said the Washington Post reporter, "how will marrying the President save Guiteau from the halter?"

"I shall marry the President," she repeated, "and we will live together at the White House. I will pray with him. Together we will seek the Lord in supplication. My husband (the President) will become inspired just as I am. Then he will pardon Guiteau."

"Are you already married?"

"Yes. Once I was a widow, but now I am married. My husband's name is John Gaylord. Strike the first part of the name off and you have lord left. If I cling to the Lord I must forsake the gay, but if I cleave to the gay I must leave the Lord. That's what I tell 'em up our way."

"Where do you live?"

"I live at Gaylordsville, Conn. I left my home yesterday morning. I came straight on through to New York, where I stopped over night, as I am not very rugged and needed rest. To-day I arrived here. I brought a banner of holiness with me. I wanted to call on the President, and announced my intention as soon as I stepped off the cars, but an officer brought me over here and told me to wait and one of the Lieutenants would take me up and introduce me to-morrow morning."

And then Mrs. Gaylord showed the reporter her banner. It was made of foolscap paper. One side was covered with gilt stars and scriptural quotations, the latter being patched out of black letters, cut out and pasted on the foolscap one by one.

The woman who was, it is painfully evident, a religious crank of a mild character, was sitting in the Lieutenant's room at police headquarters. She had reached the city about 5 o'clock, and had been taken in charge upon her arrival at the Baltimore and Potomac depot by officer Kearney. She was elderly in appearance and very neatly dressed. A difficulty of hearing causing her to put her hands up to her ear when accosted, was more than compensated by an intelligent countenance, and a bright restless eye. She was a curious mixture of the sane and insane. Upon commonplace matters she conversed fluently and coherently, but as soon as religion would be mentioned she branched off into the most unintelligable nonsense, claiming that her husband was a near relative of one of the twelve apostles, "because his name is John, as I have often told our people up where I come from," as she kept repeating.

"Does your husband know you have come on to Washington to marry the President?" asked the reporter, wondering if it was customary for Connecticut husbands to submit to this sort of grass-widowhood without a murmur.

"Me and my old man have come to an understanding on this point. We've fussed and fussed together for a good while. He's a Baptist and I'm a Methodist. So when we have protracted meeting in our town he clings to Paul and I sit down by Peter. Yes," she continued, "he knew I was making my banner. He knew it was no use to interfere with me. My name is Gaylord," she suddenly broke in after a moment's silence, "the first part is Gay and the last part is—" but before she could finish the reporter softly slipped out of the room; and when he looked in a moment afterward, she was sitting in a chair, her elbows resting on her knees, her head sunk on her bosom, and her eyes half closed, as if in deep thought, while the gloom seemed to envelop her in a half sort of mystery.

Viewed in this latter light she did not look much like a woman who could brighten up the White House to any appreciable degree. It was found upon inquiry at the depot that she had afforded the passengers considerable amusement by pacing up and down the aisle, and expounding the Scriptures in her own peculiar way.

Rammy, Rammy, Ram.

Burlington Hawkeye.

Mollie had a little ram as black as a rubber shoe, and everywhere that Mary went he emigrated too.

He went with her to church one day—the folks hilarious grew to see him walk demurely into Deacon Allen's pew.

The worthy deacon quickly let his angry passions rise, and gave it an unchristian kick between the sad brown eyes,

This landed rammy in the isle; the deacon followed fast, and raised his foot again; alas! that first kick was his last.

For Mr. Sheep walked slowly back, about a rod 'tis said, and ere the deacon could retreat it stood him on his head.

The congregation then arose and went for that 'ere sheep. Several well directed butts just piled them in a heap.

Then rushed they straightway for the door with curses long and loud, while rammy struck the hindmost man and shoved him through the crowd.

The minister had often heard that kindness will subdue the fiercest beast. "Aha!" he says, "I'll try that game on you."

And so he kindly, gently called: "Come rammy, rammy, ram; to see the folks abuse you so I grieved and sorry am."

With kind and gentle words he came from that tall pulpit down, saying. "Rammy, rammy, ram—best sheepy in the town."

The ram quite dropped his humble air and rose from off his feet, and when the parson landed he was beneath the hindmost seat.

As he shot out of the door and closed it with a slam he named a California town—I think 'twas "Yuba Dam."

How "Injuns" Farm.

Bismarck Tribune

A gentleman just up from Standing Rock Agency said the Indians were engaged in planting. In answer to an inquiry as to how the reds were progressing in the peaceful ways of Grangering, he smiled and said their manner was odd. Every year they seem to know less how to farm. This is attributed to the fact that they are learning the ways of the whites too rapidly. They begin to understand that as soon as they can grow crops their rations will be cut off, and hence their growing ignorance of agriculture. If they are given a bushel of beans to plant, they will eat nine-tenths of the amount and plant one-tenth, and the one-tenth will be dumped in three or four holes in the ground. Last Spring they were furnished with five bushels of onion seeds. They couldn't eat them, and consequently planted the entire five bushels on a piece of fifty by 100 feet. They were too lazy to prepare a larger patch; besides, it would have been contrary to their policy of maintaining the ration system. When the onions came up it was a curious sight to see the young stinkers crowd each other. The whole dry, naked surface of the ground was raised up on top of the sprouting plants. It is our informant's opinion that the present generation of Injuns will not make successful Grangers.

"Is the gentleman who knows everything in?" stammered a vision of golden hair and sea-blue eyes, as she stood timidly beside the managing editor's desk yesterday afternoon.

"Everything about what?" asked the editor, clawing around under his desk for his shoes and trying to hide his stocking feet under him. "Upon which particular branch do you seek information?"

"I don't exactly know what to do," pouted the strawberry lips. "Pa says I can only have one dress this spring, and I don't know how to make it up. I thought the gentleman who answers questions could tell me."

"H'm!" muttered the managing editor, "He has gone up in Maine to find out why the geese always walk in single file. An 'Anxious Inquirer' wants to know. What kind of a dress had you thought of getting?"

"That's what I want to know. I want something that would look well with terra cotta gloves."

"Yes, yes," murmured the editor. "Then you should get one of these green things with beads that turn all kinds of colors, and some fringe and fixings of that kind."

"Would you have it cut princess or wear it with a polonaise?" she inquired, looking at him searchingly.

"You—might have it

PRINCESS AROUD THE NECK

and a row of polonaises at the bottom," suggested the editor. "That's going to be very fashionable, and a couple of hip pockets would set it off royally."

"I don't know," murmured the beauty. "I haven't seen any of that style. Do you know whether panniers are worn bouffant this season, or whether the skirt is tight?"

"Oh, certainly!" replied the editor. "They are made with all the bouffants you can get on 'em. Some have even sixteen-button bouffants, and there was a lady in here yesterday who had a pannier that came clean up to her neck. I should have it pretty bouffant if it was my dress.

"Well," stammered the blushing blossom, "would you box plait the skirt or shirr it?"

"Shirr it, by all means!" exclaimed the editor. "Shirr it straight up and down, and fasten it with these loops of black tape."

"You mean frogs?" asked the beauty.

"No, no. These big loops that slip over two buttons. That sets off the shirrs and gives a sort of tout to the ensemble," and the editor leaned back and smiled superior.

"Don't you think revers of a light shade would look pretty?" she inquired.

"They'll do to fix up the back, but I wouldn't put 'em on the front," answered the editor sagely. "Revers are very well to trim a hat with, but they don't set off a dress front."

"How would you have the corsage?"

"I wouldn't have any at all. You would look much better without one."

"Sir!" she exclaimed, rising.

"Oh, if you insist, you might have a small one, certainly not over three inches long, for short dresses are the style now."

"You—you don't seem to understand—" she commenced.

"Oh, don't I?" he retorted. "That's what I'm here for. I think there is nothing so lamentable as to see a young lady dragging her corsage through the mud and dust. Still, if you want one, you should have it, so you can take it off on the street and only wear it at home. They are hard to handle and but one woman out of a hundred can kick her corsage gracefully."

"I—I am very much obliged to you," she murmured. "You are very good, I'm sure."

"Don't mention it," replied the editor politely, "I think when you get it shirred and reversed and polonaised and princessed, you'll like it very much. You might get a sash and some big buttons to put on behind, or if you'd like another style better, you might trim the whole front with bouffants and wear the pannier for a hat"

"Oh, thank you, sir!" exclaimed the blushing bud, as she scuttled down stairs.

"Swipes!" roared the managing editor with a complacent smile and a glance of approval at himself in the glass, "Swipes, you may tell the foreman to send me a proof of the fashion notes as soon as they come in. I have observed that a great many errors, have crept in lately."

Women in Russia.

Fortnightly Review

In Russia, where in the middle class the seclusion of women was even a few years ago nearly as great as in a harem, the advocate of women's rights would to-day find little to demand for any class of females above the level of the peasantry. The moujik still administers corporal punishment to his wife as he would to his child, and his right to do so, though denied by the written law, is tacitly acknowledged in practice. The girl, however, whose brother has been described as going to the Lycee and subsequently to the university, is nearly as independent as her male relations. Like her brother, and from similar causes, she too often becomes disgusted with her home, and determines to seek what she imagines to be the delights of the independent life led by the numerous female students who follow various university courses, and particularly that of medicine. Sometimes, when her parents refuse her permission to leave home, she simply runs away, and having no passport, her position at once becomes illegal, and she naturally finds her companions among those who, like herself, have got into trouble with the authorities. In some cases enthusiasts like Solovieff, who fired at the late Czar in April, 1879, marry girls with whom they have scarcely any acquaintance, and for whom they have no feeling of affection, merely to free them from the obligation of obtaining a passport from their parents, and their consent to leave home. The young husband and wife proceed together to the university town, and there, having no particular taste for each other's society, they often seperate immediately, and even where they would desire to maintain their mutual connection, the pressure of poverty and the difficulties of their position frequently oblige them to part company.

Even without the specially demoralizing effect of such circumstances as I have just mentioned, the general influences of life at the universities are most injurious to the majority of the young men who frequent them. The ideas of family ties and obligations of married life which prevail in the homes of the students are probably lax enough, but even these are cast to the winds by the young men and women, who adopt a code of morals of their own in the Bohemian society of which they have become members. Parental authority, which a few years ago was such a marked feature in domestic life in Russia, has become a thing of the past so far as regards the majority of the students, and university and government officials are equally condemned. The mystic reverence for the Czar appears absurd to the young philosophers, and the church itself is despised by those who have learned to recognize the ignorance of its ministers and the superstition with which its rites are practiced by the ignorant masses.

The Triumph of Christianity.

The following passage is quoted by the London Quarterly Review, with the remark in "commendation of its wide historic survey, and its vigorous and glowing eloquence, it is one of the finest in the whole range of literature:"

"It rose in an enlightened and skeptical age; but among a despised and narrow minded people. It earned hatred and persecution at home by its liberal genius and opposition to the national prejudecis; it earned contempt abroad by its connection with the country where it was born, but which sought to strangle it in its birth—Asia Minor, Egypt, Greece, Rome—and in all it attracted notice and provoked hostily. Successive massacres and attempts at extermination, persecuted for ages by the whole force of the Roman Empire, it bore without resistance, and seemed to draw fresh vigor from the axe; assaults in the way of argument, from whatever quarter, it was never ashamed or unable to repel, and whether attacked or not, it was resolutely aggressive.

"In four centuries it had pervaded the civilized world; it had mounted the throne of the Cæsars; it had spread beyond the limits of their sway, and had made inroads upon barbarian nations whom their eagles had never visited; it had gathered all genius and all learning in itself, and made the literature of the world its own; it survived the inundation of the barbarian tribes, and conquered the world once more by converting its conquerors to the faith; it survived the restoration of letters; it survived an age of free iniquity and skepticism, and has long stood its ground in the field of argument, and commanded the intelligent assent of the greatest minds that ever were; it has been the parent of civilization, and nurse of learning, and if light, and humanity, and freedom be the boast of modern Europe, it is to Christianity that she owes them. Exhibiting in the life of Jesus a picture, varied and minute, of the perfect human united with the divine, in which the mind of man has not been able to find a deficiency or detect a blemish—a picture copied from no model and rivalled by no copy— it has accommodated itself to every clim te; it has retained through every change a salient spring of life, which enables it to throw off corruption and repair decay, and renew its youth amid outward hostility and inward divisions."

A Faithful Elephant.

There is a beautiful story of an old elephant engaged in battle on the plains of India. He was a standard-bearer, and carried on his huge back the royal ensign, the rallying point of the Poona host. At the beginning of the fight he lost his master. The mahout, or driver, had just given him the word to halt when he received a fatal wound and fell to the ground, where he lay under a heap of slain. The obedient elephant stood still while the battle closed around him and the standard he carried. He never stirred a foot, refusing either to advance or retire as the conflict became hotter and fiercer, until the Mahrattas, seeing the standard still flying steadily in its place, refused to believe that they were being beaten, and rallied again and again round the colors. All this while, amid the din of battle, the patient animal stood, straining its ears to catch the sound of that voice it would never hear again.

At length the tide of conquest left the field deserted, The Mahrattas swept on in pursuit of the flying foe, but the elephant, like a rock, stood there, with the dead and dying around, and the ensign waving in its place.

For three days and nights it remained where its master had given the command to halt. No bribe nor threat could move him. They then sent to a village 100 miles away and brought the mahout's little son. The noble hero seemed then to remember how his driver had sometimes given his authority to the little child, and immediately, with all the shattered trappings clinging as he went, paced slowly and quitly away. What a lesson of fidelity is taught us by the faithfulness of this dumb creature to his master! "One is your master, even Christ." Do you stay where he puts you till his voice calls you away?—Anon.

Spiritualists Exposed.

Toledo Telegram.

While a party of mediums were giving a seance at Clyde, Saturday night, some people who suspected they were frauds exposed them. One of them, called Elsie Crindle, by the aid of a low burning light to favor deception, and array herself in ghostly attire (i. e., in chemise only), as well as by the addition of wigs and beards, tubes to blow the horns at a distance, and light sticks to rattle a suspended tambourine etc., was enabled to deceive her auditors quite successfully for a time, but as one or two of them had suspected her and prepared to expose her the adulence did not remain long deceived. She was grasped by one portly gentlemen of the company as she was impersonating the spirit of Julia Dean Hayne, at which her son, Henry Crindle, rushed to her assistance and struck the gentleman aforesaid. In the confusion which followed, the medium and her son escaped from the house and made their way to the late westbound train, leaving behind their masks, wigs, beards, satin sack, gauge, necklace, etc., being the paraphernalia with which they worked their deception.

JOCOSITIES.

The editors have struck. So we are informed by a gentleman with a spring poem and a black eye.

"Misery may like company," says a colored philosopher: "but I'd rader hab de rhumatiz in one leg den ter hab it in bofe."

"In the bright lexicon of youth there is no such word as fail," says Bulwer, but Bulwer never tried to crawl under a circus tent.

Spring pants are so attenuated in style that when a young man of the period sits down in them he will wish that he stood up and saved rent.

The Canadian Parliament has legalized marriage with a dead wife's sister. Well, one would know what kind of a mother-in-law he was to have.

One year ago a needle entered the wrist of a young lady in Elmira, and the other day it was removed from the right arm of the fellow who is her "steady company."

"You are as full of airs as a music box," is what a young man said to a girl who refused to let him see her home. "That may be," was the reply, "but I don't go off with a crank."

"Women are so contrary," remarked Blobs. "I thought when I got married my wife would darn my socks, and let me alone; instead of that, she lets my socks alone and darns me."

When it was known that a woman at Franklin, Ky., was promenading the street with a revolver in hand 125 different men had business up stairs and down in the cellar, and could not be disturbed.

"Yes, I've got a horrid cold," said Mrs. Jenkison. "I've dosed and dosed and I don't get one bit better. 'Pon my word I believe I've taken no less than thirty-nine articles and I begin to feel like an Episcopalian."

One can readily excuse the error made by the little church-going maiden who asked her mother the species of a "consecrated cross-eyed bear." She had heard the hymn commencing, "A consecrated cross I'd bear."

It was in the time of Cromwell, we believe, that an illiterate soldier contrived to spell the word "usage" without a single letter properly belonging to it. He wrote it "yowziteh," and when told that the spelling was incorrect declared that nobody could spell with a quill pen from an Irish goose.

"Does hoss racin' hurt anybody?" exclaimed a Blue Grass turfman, as he whiled away the rainy Sunday in a pious endeavor to uphold General Buford's hands in his great work of reconciling the church and the turf. "Hoss racin' hurt anybody? Why, a clean, square race, run from eend to eend, with no pullin' and no pocketin', there's no more danger in a Christian attending that sort of a race, than there is in —in—than there is in a duel between two Congressmen."

When a Nebraska paper wishes to insinuate that a prominent citizen is going to the bad through liquor, it says: "The Honorable Mr. Murphy is making a valuable collections of snakes." Western editors know how to express themselves poetically.

"They tell me Brown has a great ear for music," said Fenderson. "Yes," replied Fogg, "I knew he had a great ear, two of them, in fact; but I did not know that they were for music. I supposed they were for brushing the flies off the top of his head."

A city chap who had escorted a country girl to the theater, thinking to please her her, went out and bought some apples. When he placed them in her lap, she spoke up loud enough to be heard all about, "What do you take me for—a cider mill." City chap collapsed; he couldn't stand the press.

"Nellie, my dear," said Mrs. Slobson to her daughter, "did you read Oscar Wilde's lecture and note his observations regarding the desirability of having beautiful surroundings?" "Yes, mamma." "Then tell me what you think are the most beautiful surroundings?" "But I wont." "Yes you will." "Well, then, if you must know, I think Gus Singletree's arms the most beautiful surroundings in the wide world." The girl went to bed supperless, and poor Gus whistled at the gate for an hour without getting the usual response.

One day, last winter a well-dressed young lady was passing along Washington street, in Boston, and the pavement being coated with ice, she slipped and fell. An æsthetic youth of refinement and culture had the bad taste to indulge in a loud laugh. The young lady arose and indignantly exclaimed: "Your conduct shocks me. I have seen enough of you to convince me you are no gentleman." "Ya-as," retorted the reproved youth, hesitatingly, "and I—I've seen enough of you to convince me you are no gentleman.

A Double Advance.

Wall Street Daily News.

In the ante-bellum days a New York State grocer raised the price of a certain grade of tea from "three shillings" to forty-five cents; and an old farmer who came in with a barrel of cider-vinegar to sell could hardly credit his senses when told that his favorite brand of tea had advanced several cents per pound.

"What on airth is the reason for this sudden raise?" he inquired.

"Scarcity of tea-chests," was the brief answer.

"Well, do you want my vinegar?"

"How much?"

"Eight cents a gallon."

"I only paid you seven for the last."

"Yes, but cider has riz, you see."

"What has brought cider up?" asked the astonished grocer.

"Scarcity of bung-hole plugs," was the quiet but serious reply.

They looked at each other without winking, and the tea dropped back to thirty eight and cider to seven cents.

Warts.

To destroy warts, make a strong solution of common washing soda and water. Wash the warts with this for a minute or two, and let it dry on them. Repeat the washing several times a day until the warts disappear. Or, rub them night and morning with a moistened piece of muriate of ammonia. They soften and dwindle away, leaving no such white mark as follows their depression with lunar caustic.

FROM THE WIRES.

Little Rock, Ark., dispatch:

Saturday, in Lafayette county, on the Louisiana border, a negro named Wade Reed was reprimanded by Mrs. Reeves for passing through the yard and leaving the fence gate down. He left, but returned soon after with a gun, evidently looking for the lady, but not finding her found Mr. Reeves and fired both barrels, riddling Reeves' body with shot, and producing instant death.

At 1 o'clock to-day Ruben Lucas was executed near the Court House of Sans Bois county, Cherokee Nation, for the murder of Thompson McKerrey in December last. All the parties are highly connected. Lucas was shot, according to Indian law.

Cleveland, O., dispatch:

The threatened strike will probably not change affairs in this city. The Cleveland Rolling Mill Company's works have been shut down for some time, and are expected to resume before long as non-union works. The Forest City Iron Company's employes, 150 men, and the Union Rolling Mill Company, having 260, have signed the scale, and are running as usual.

Virginia City, Nev., dispatch:

This morning the pump column in the Alta mine broke, and soon after the bulk-head in the east drift gave way, letting in a heavy rush of water. Six men working in the west end were cut off. The pumps are running to clear the shaft of water, and save the men if possible.

The latest from the Alta mine gives no hope of saving the men in the drift. The height of the water at the station shows that the drift must be completely filled.

Dispatches from Jefferson City say that Governor Crittenden denies having offered Frank James a pardon, or of having any proposition from Attorney Hair in regard to a pardon or other form of executive clemency in behalf of James. He further denies having made any proposals to the Governors of other States asking them to join him in extending clemency to James, and adds that James has never applied to him for clemency or pardon. It will be observed that while Governor Crittenden denies that he has been in communication with Attorney Hair on the subject, he does not deny having received proposals from other friends of his noted bandit, and the opinion still prevails that negotiations for surrender and clemency are pending.

New York dispatch says:

John D. Brumley, a painter, 35 years of age, weight 160 pounds, married, to-day jumped from the top of High Bridge over the Harlem river. His jump was the result of a bet of the drinks for the crowd. He struck the water with his arms close to his sides, his feet were slightly crossed, and he cut through the water like a ball from a cannon. During his descent he turned two somersaults. He was taken from the water in an unconscious condition, but was not hurt either internally or externally. He was intoxicated, and the police arrested him and will prefer charges. The crown of the highest arch of High Bridge is 116 feet above the river surface.

F. J. Moses, ex-Governor of South Carolina, to-day pleaded guilty to petit larceny, and was sentenced to the penitentiary for six months.

Rochester, N. Y., dispatch:

Yesterday afternoon two boys, named Derrick Pike and Fred Reusch, aged 14 and 15 respectively, were playing in a boat a few rods above the middle Genesee Falls. The boat by some means became loose, and difted into the stream which is very much swollen. The boat was seen to go over the middle falls containing the two boys and a dog, and the empty boat was seen to go over the brink of the lower falls. The boys did not come to the surface. The dog, which was in the boat, swam to a rock below the middle falls, where he remains out of reach.

The failures reported to New York for seven days were 135, against 136 last week, and 134 the week previous. The increase is in the West and South principally. New York city is still remarkably free from business disasters. The most significant failure in the country is that of Lionel Simpson, of Denver, Col. This is an exemplification of the temptation afforded by too liberal credit. The geographical distribution of the failures is as follows: Eastern States, [illegible]; Western, 42; Middle, 27; Southern, 39; Pacific States and Territories, 11; New York City, 2.

The boiler in Edward Dickerson's sawmill, at Dickersville, Va., exploded yesterday, instantly killing young Davis, the engineer, and James Carpenter (colored). John Garvell, a one-armed man, had his remaining arm broken, and will probably lose it by amputation. Several other employes were severely injured.

The announcement of the death of General Garibaldi, at his island home at Caprera, produced an immense impression here. The sessions of the Municipal Council adjourned on the arrival of the news, and the performances in the various theaters were stopped. A great popular demonstration of sorrow will be arranged. The Chamber of Deputies will adjourn. King Humbert has sent a dispatch to Menotti Garibaldi, expressing his grief at the death of General Garibaldi and deploring the loss his family and country have sustained.

The Times-Star special from Catlettsburg, Ky., says: "A masked mob, at 3 o'clock this morning, came by rail from Ashland, took George Ellis out of jail at Catlettsburg, took him to Ashland near the scene of the murder and outrage of the Gibbons girls last December, and hanged him to a sycamore tree. The mob was masked. George Ellis was convicted of manslaughter yesterday on an indictment of murder of these girls. It was his testimony that convicted William Neal and Ellis Craft, who are now in jail at Lexington, Ky."

The steamer Evansville, en route from Evansville to Bowling Green, blew up this morning near Calhoun, fatally injuring her mate, Owen Gilmore, and a fireman, and scalding nine or ten others. No passengers were injured. No particulars.

Fatal Flames.

Leadville, Col., June 6.—Early this morning fire broke out in the shaft of he Mike and Starr mine. The derrick was consumed before the fire was extinguished. Firemen working in the drift fail to respond to the call-bell, and it is feared that they have been suffocated.

St. Louis, June 6.—A heart-rending accident occurred near Harris Station, on the Missouri, Kansas and Texas railroad, in this State, on Sunday last. John Jackson and his wife went to church, leaving their four children, the eldest 14 and the youngest 2 years old, locked in the house. From some unknown cause the house caught fire, and when the parents returned they found their dwelling in ruins, and their children dead and burned to a crisp.

Memphis, Tenn., June 6.—A private telegram from Pocahontas, Ark., says the entire town is now in ashes.

Odenburg, N. Y., June 6.—The flouring mills of Henry Rode, the largest in Northern New York, burned last night. Loss, $75,000; insurance, $43,000.

The Code.

New Orleans, June 7.

A duel was fought this morning at the "Slaughter House" between Major E. A. Burke, of the Times-Democrat, and C. H. Parker, editor of the Picayune. Pistols were used, and five shots exchanged. At the fifth exchange Burke was shot through the thigh. The wound is not considered dangerous.

The Home of the Horse.

Popular Science Monthly

There is no doubt that the original home of the horse is not in Europe, but central Asia; for since the horse in its natural state depends upon grass for its nourishment and fleetness for i's weapon, it could not in the beginning have thriven and multiplied in the thick forest grown territory of Europe. Much rather should its place of propagation be sought in those steppes where it still roams about in a wild state. Here, too, arose the first nations of riders of which we have historic knowledge, the Mongolians, and the Turks, whose existence even at this day is as it were combined with that of the horse. From these regions the horse spread in all directions, especially into the steppes of southern and southeastern Russia and into Thrace, until it finally found entrance into the other parts of Europe, but not until after the immigration of the people. This assumption is, at least, strongly favored by the fact that the farther a district of Europe is from those Asiatic steppes, i. e., from the original home of the horse, the later does the tamed horse seem to have made its historic appearance in it. The supposition is further confirmed by the fact that horse raising among almost every tribe appears as an art derived from neighboring tribes in the east or northeast. Even in Homer the ox appears exclusively as the draught animal in land operations at home and in the field, while the horse was used for purposes of war only. Its employment in military operations was determined by swiftness alone. That the value of the horse must originally have depended on its fleetness, can easily be inferred from the name which is repeated in all the branches of the Indo-European language, and signifies nearly "hastening," "quick." The same fact is exemplified by the description of the oldest poets, who, next to its courage, speak most of its swiftness.

Living on Mount Ætna.

London Builder.

Hitherto the Hospice of the Great St. Bernard, which stands 8,200 feet above the level of the sea, has enjoyed the distinction of being the most elevated inhabited building in Europe. This honor it can now no longer claim. During the past year the civil authorities of Catania, in Sicily, have caused to be erected near the summit of the great volcano, Mount Ætna, an astronomical observatory, which stands 2,943 metres above the sea level, or fully 1,000 feet higher than the Hospice of St. Bernard. The structure is nine metres in height, and covers an area of 200 square metres. It consists of an upper and a lower story, and is built in a circular form. In the lower story there rises a massive pillar, upon which is placed the great refracting telescope. The lower story is divided into a dining room, kitchen and store-rooms. In the upper story there are three bedrooms, intended for the accommodation of astronomers and tourists visiting the establishment. The roof consists of a movable cupola or dome. From the balconies of the upper story a prospect of vast extent and grandeur is presented. The spectator is able to see over half the Island of Sicily, the Island of Malta, the Lipari Isles, and the Province of Calabria, on the mainland of Italy. The observatory is erected upon a small cone, which will, in the case of eruption, protect it completely from the lava stream which always flows down on the opposite side of the volcano.

Adulterations in Our Food.

The Committee on Commerce, of the House of Representatives, has presented a very interesting report upon the bill to impose restrictions upon adulterated food and medicines. The committee says:

"Commercial cream of tartar contains tartrate of lime, which must, within limits, be accepted as natural to it. Cases have been recently tried in England in which the adulteration charged was the lime tartrate present in this salt, but the Magistrate properly refused to convict. Yet this is an article which is subject to gross adulteration. Among eighteen samples examined by experts, six were found to be of satisfactory purity. Eleven of them contained lime, varying from 17 to 90 per cent., three of them having nearly the latter figure. Two contained no cream of tartar at all, but consisted, the one of lime, alum, and acid phosphate of lime, and the other of alum, acid phosphate, and potato starch. Corn starch was also found in large proportion in one of the limesulphate powders. Considering the use of cream of tartar in baking, its impure condition is a serious evil. We all know, this article enters into the manufactures of the world, and certainly such adulterations should be, if possible, stopped. Of nine samples examined in New York, one had 96 per cent. of terra alba, one 61 per cent., and the others contained lime salt.

Again as to black pepper, the dealers appear to have lost all knowledge of the pure article, as out of four samples examined, taken from respectable houses in the city of New York, only one was found pure. The others contained baked flour and rice, with sand enough to prove the unclean condition of the peppers when milled. Dr. Hassall in 1855, reported forty-three specimens taken from English stores, sixteen of which were adulterated. The chemist of the National Board of Health gave the result of a large experience. Of 1,116 peppers 579 were adulterated with rice, sago, potato starch, brown and white mustard, wood, wheat, bran, flour, oat flour, and ground gypsum. The Commissary General supplied sixteen unopened sample cans for investigation. Of these two were adulterated with fresh flour, while six showed from the quantity of sand present the unclean and probable inferior quality of the peppers. Of thirty-two samples which were purchased, four were pure. The remaining twenty-eight samples were mixed with ingredients which weakened their strength and impaired their usefulness.

Alspice, which has been found in England to be generally pure, in this country is mixed with such articles as bread crusts, beans, corn-starch, woody tissues, and turmeric. Of ground ginger, fifteen specimens out of twenty-one were adulterated. Chinese teas are dusted with Prussian blue, and Japan teas with indigo, along with finely pulverized sulphate of lime and silicates. In the preparation of teas for market such drugs are used as black lead, indigo, Prussian blue, chrome yellow, Venetian red, carbonate of copper, and arsenite of copper. In the manufacture of confectionery different poisonous preparations are used containing Prussian Blue, carbonate of copper, and red lead.

It is useless to increase the number of these samples. It is believed by persons who have examined this subject for the past five years that a large proportion of the substances shipped from the old world to the new, and which enter so largely into the manufacturing of the foods of this country, are adulterated and impure. It is easy for one to see that this state of things must affect the general health of our communities. While this is a very important subject when taken in connection with the food and drink of the Nation, it becomes very much more important when taken in connection with the drugs sold by our apothecaries, which are made up so largely of adulterated and inferior materials. Attention has been repeatedly called to the fact that these powdered drugs are offered in the market at the same, or even at less price than the crude drug, notwithstanding the loss involved in drying and powdering.

Among the principal adulterations recently observed in drugs may be mentioned spurious barks imported for angostura, cascarilla and cinchona barks; spurious senega, sarsaparilla, arnica, etc.; opium, adulterated with clay, cherry gum, extract of licorice, starch, etc.; castor oil made of lard oil, with a little croton oil, cod liver oil made of lard, oil of lemon adulterated with petroleum, etc. Morphia has been found substituted by mineral matter and quina; iron for medicinal use adulterated with carbon; quinine adulterated with salicin and other cheap and inferior alkaloids; santonin adulterated with borax, or in one case, entirely substituted by picric acid."

Mohammedan Sensualism.

Saturday Review.

No one of the Mohammedan races has carried out the license given to sensual passions by the Koran and the adhering to tradition to such an extent as have the Ottoman Turks, and no race have suffered so much from that license. The evil consequences are far-reaching and baleful in the extreme. It is to feed Turkish sensuality that the slave trade throughout the Empire and the interior of Africa is maintained. The beautiful, fair daughters who are purchased from the Georgians and the Circassians also find their way at last to the harems of Constantinople, Brusa, Smyrna, Adrianople, Aleppo, Bagdad, and other towns and cities of Asia Minor. One of the direct results of this sensuality is that the Turks have degenerated physically during the past two hundred years. That the conquerors of Constantinople were a hardy race, of great physical strength, there can be no doubt; that the great majority of modern Turks are of an effeminate type is equally certain; very many of them are persons of fine appearance, but they are physically weak, without elasticity, giving the impression of men who have lost their vitality. The same may be said even more emphatically of Turkish women; they are small in stature, of a sickly complexion, easily fatigued by slight exertion, and become prematurely old. After the age of 40 all feminine beauty is gone; the eyes have become sunken, the cheeks hollow and the face wrinkled; and there remains no trace of the activity and physical strength often seen in English women of 65 and 70 years of age. Another immediate result of the prevailing sensuality is the mental imbecility of multitudes of the Ottoman Turks. Great numbers among them are intellectually stupid. Many even of the young men have the vacant look which borders close on the idiotic stare. Severe mental application is for them almost a physical impossibility. It is well known that in most all branches of business where considerable mental activity is required the Turks employ Christians to work for them. This is owing not so much to a lack of education or to a general want of energy as in many cases to a mental incapacity, which often amounts to real imbecility. Obvious illustrations of the special topic now discussed is furnished by the royal family itself. Sultan Abdul Mejid, Sultan Abdul Aziz, and the deposed Sultan Murad were all men of depraved minds, vicious habits, intemperate and sensual in the extreme, and were alike devoid of moral character and mental capacity. Mental incapacity, however, is not confined by any means to the wealthy and aristocratic classes; it is found in all grades of society.

Advice to Young Men.

My son, enjoy yourself. Have a good time; pleasure is eminently right and proper, but a good time isn't secured by a headache that lasts all the next day. The simplest pleasures are the most lasting. After you have spent two years in Europe you will come back and sit down by your own fireside and think of a picnic you went down to at the Cascade one afternoon in June, that cost you sixty-five cents. The "good times" that you daren't take your wife to, my son, that you would lie about rather than have your sister know about them, the "goodness" of them never comes back to refresh you and gladden your heart as does the memory of that sixty-five cent picnic, when you chattered nonesense with the girl you loved, and laughed just as the leaves rustled, because you couldn't help it. The "good time" that wakes in the morning and wonders where is was and who saw it and where all its money is gone; the good time that tails itself off with a headache, there's precious little fun in that. And it only takes a very little bitterness of that kind to poison the memories of your past. It doesn't take many such good times, my boy, to mingle tears with your bread and gall with your drink. The sting is the smallest part of the bee, but when you pick him up by it, though the rest of the bee were as long as an omnibus horse, yet would the sting out-weigh all the good, sweet, harmless, honey-laden portion of the bee, and you would think about it oftener and longer.

Telling Tales Out of School.

Among the arrivals of immigrants at Castle Garden Monday were a number of manufacturers of English jams and preserves. Speaking of the extent to which adulteration of food is carried on in the old country, one of them said: "People are ignorant how so-called family preserves are made. It is no unusual thing for unscrupulous manufacturers to make them from all kinds of faded fruits and decomposed vegetables. More than one-half of the "raspberry" jam made in England is from decayed figs, which are boiled down with sugar and a little essence and other chemicals added. The pips of the figs represent those of the raspberry, so the fraud is scarcely apparent." It is to be hoped that in this county, where fruit is usually so abundant and cheap, the ways exposed by these English immigants will have no imitators.

Regulate the Liver and prevent Chills and Fever, Malarious Fevers, Bowel Complaints, Restlessness, Jaundice and Nausea.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common as bad breath, and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons' Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your Appetite, Complexion, and General Health.

PILES!

How many suffer torture day after day, making life a burden and robbing existence of pleasure, owing to the secret suffering from Piles. Yet relief is ready to the hand of almost any one who will use systematically the remedy that has permanently cured thousands. SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR, is no drastic violent purge; but a gentle assistant to nature.

CONSTIPATION!

Should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache.

PROVED A SUCCESS
THE PASTILLE
Prof. Harris' Radical Cure
Trade Mark
FOR NERVOUS DEBILITY
BY YEARS OF USE

A valuable Discovery and New Departure in Medical Science. A positively effective Remedy for the speedy and permanent Cure for organic weakness—the deplorable disease resulting from indiscreet practices or excesses in youth or at any time of life—by the only true way, viz: Direct Application acting by Absorption, and exerting its specific influence on the Vesicles, Ducts, and Glands, that are unable to perform their natural functions while this disease pervades the human organism. The use of the Pastille is attended with no pain or inconvenience, and does not interfere with the ordinary pursuits of life; it is quickly dissolved and soon absorbed, producing an immediate soothing and restorative effect upon the nervous organisations wrecked from vicious habits or excesses, stopping the drain from the system, restoring the mind to health and sound memory, removing the Dimness of Sight, Confusion of Ideas, Aversion to Society, etc., etc., and the appearance of premature old age usually accompanying this trouble, and restoring the vital forces, where they have been dormant for years. This mode of treatment has stood the test in very severe cases, and is now a pronounced success. Drugs are too much prescribed in this trouble, and, as many can bear witness to, with but little if any permanent good. There is no nonsense about this Preparation. Practical observation enables us to positively guarantee that it will give satisfaction. It has been in general use for several years and we have thousands of testimonials from patients, as to its value, and it is now conceded to be the most rational means yet discovered for reaching and curing this very prevalent trouble, that is well known to be the cause of untold misery to so many, and upon whom quacks prey with their useless nostrums and big fees. The Remedy is put up in neat boxes, of three sizes. No. 1, (enough to last a month,) $3; No. 2, (sufficient to effect a permanent cure, unless in severe cases,) $5; No. 3, (lasting over three months, will restore those in the worst condition,) $7. Sent by mail, in plain wrappers. Full DIRECTIONS for using will accompany EACH BOX.

Send for Sealed Descriptive Pamphlets giving Anatomical Illustrations and Testimony, which will convince the most skeptical that they can be restored to perfect health, and the vital forces thoroughly re-established same as if never affected. Sold ONLY by

Unsolicited testimony to the Efficacy of Prof. Harris' Pastilles, taken from Letters received from Patrons!

Indiana, April 11, '79.—The Remedy is working perfectly. Had epilepsy from weakness, for 5 years past.

Iowa, Oct. 10th, '79.—I am almost surprised at your Pastilles. They have worked like a charm on me. I am just twice as much of a man as I was before taking. I was on the verge of the grave, I thought, and there was no cure for me, but now I am in good hopes for a cure.

West Virginia, Aug. 22, 1879.—I received your medicine and I believe it has cured me, for which I am very thankful. Inclosed find $5. Please send me another box No. 2 for a friend. You have done a great thing for me. I will send you all the orders I can.

From a Physician and Surgeon!

Missouri, June 21.—Please forward me another box of the Pastilles. The patient on whom I have used most of one box, in addition to a sample box, is fast recovering, and I think another will set him all right.

From a Druggist.

Maryland, Sept. 2, '79.—Last January we got a box of your Remedy for one of our customers, and it has made a perfect cure of him. We have another customer now suffering in the same way, and wish one No. 2 box.

SAMARITAN
NERVINE
[illegible]

SAMARITAN NERVINE

Cures Epileptic Fits, Spasms, Convulsions, St. Vitus Dance, Vertigo, Hysteria, Insanity, Apoplexy, Paralysis, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, and all Nervous Diseases. This infallible remedy will positively eradicate every species of Nervous Derangement, and drive them away from whence they came, never to return again. It utterly destroys the germs of disease by neutralizing the hereditary taint or poison in the system, and thoroughly eradicates the disease and utterly destroys the case.

SAMARITAN NERVINE

Cures Female Weakness, General Debility, Leucorrhoea or Whites, Painful Menstruations, Ulceration, of the Uterus, Internal Heat, Gravel, Inflammation of the Bladder, Irritability of the Bladder. For Wakefulness at Night, there is no better remedy. During the change of life no Female should be without it. It quiets the Nervous System and gives rest, comfort and nature's sweet sleep.

SAMARITAN NERVINE

Cures Alcoholism, Drunkness and the habit of Opium Eating. These degrading habits are by far the worst evils that have ever befallen suffering humanity. Thousands die annually from these noxious drugs. The drunkard drinks liquor not because he likes it, but for the pleasure of drinking and treating his friends, little thinking that he is on the road to ruin. Like the Opium Eater, he first uses the drug in small quantities as a harmless antidote. The soothing influence of the drug takes strong hold upon its victim leading him on to his own destruction. The habits of Opium Eating and Liquor Drinking are precisely what eating is to alimentiveness, as over-eating first inflames the stomach, which redoubles its craving until it paralyzes both the stomach and appetite. So every drink of liquor or dose of opium, instead of satisfying, only adds to its fierce fires, until it consumes the vital force and then itself. Like the gluttonous tape-worm, it cries "Give, give, give!" but never enough until its own rapacity devours itself. Samaritan Nervine gives instant relief in all such cases. It produces sleep, quiets the nerve, builds up the nervous system, and restores body and mind to a healthy condition.

SAMARITAN NERVINE

Cures Nervous Dyspepsia, Palpitation of the Heart, Asthma, Bronchitis, Scrofula, Syphilis, diseases of the Kidneys and all diseases of the urinary organs. Nervous debility, caused by the indiscretions of youth, permanently cured by the use of this invaluable remedy. To you, young, middle-aged and old men, who are covering your sufferings as with a mantle by silence, look up, you can be saved by timely efforts, and make ornaments to society, and jewels in the crown of your Maker, if you will. Do not keep the secret longer, until it saps your vitals, and destroys both body and soul. If you are thus afflicted, take Dr. Richmond's Samaritan Nervine. It will restore your shattered nerves, arrest premature decay, impart tone and energy to the whole system.

SAMARITAN NERVINE

Is for sale by druggists everywhere, or may be had direct from us. Those who wish to obtain further evidence of the curative properties of Samaritan Nervine will enclose a 3-cent postage stamp for a copy of our Illustrated Journal of Health, giving hundreds of testimonials of cure from persons who have used the medicine, and also their pictures photographed after their restoration to perfect health. Commissioner Southeast District—A. D. Moore, of Wilmington; Edgar Treeman, of Wilmington; O. H. Widney, of Concord.

R. H. Weamer and John Robbins were then appointed tellers, when the convention adjourned to meet at 1:30 p. m.

AFTERNOON.

Convention was called at 1:30 and proceeded to select delegates to the state convention. They were: Butler township, W. I. Work; Jackson, Henry Hine; Concord, Hon. S. S. Shutt; Newville, Moses Ashelman; Stafford, Joseph Wilson; Wilmington, D. Tomlinson; Union, Auburn precinct, D. D. Moody and M. Boland; Waterloo, C. A. O. McClellan; Richland, Hon. L. D. Britton; Fairfield, J. M. Brumbeck; Smithfield, Freeman Kelley; Franklin, Hon. Miles Waterman; Troy, O. P. Learned; Keyser, W. Teeters. On motion of M. Boland, the several candidates arose and pledged themselves to support the nominees of the convention. The convention then proceeded to ballot. The total number of delegates was 255; necessary to a choice, 128. Mr. Kelley had withdrawn his name for representative, and the first ballot for that office stood:

D. D. Moody	149
E. Kelham	71
W. H. Dills	35

For clerk, the first ballot was:

D. Y. Husselman	98
J. A. Barns	89
T. H. Sprott	34
A. W. Bair	34

Bair then withdrew, and the second ballot resulted in

Husselman	140
Barns	93
Sprott	22

and Mr. Husselman was declared the nominee. Thos. H. Tomlinson having no opposition was made the nominee for auditor by acclamation. L. J. Miller was also nominated for treasurer by acclamation, he having no opposition.

The first ballot for sheriff was:

J. W. Boyle	90
W. I. Work	54
J. C. Henry	48
John H. Gill	33
A. W. Allen	28

Second ballot:

Boyle	124
Work	53
Henry	45
Gill	18
Allen	15

Gill was then withdrawn. Third ballot:

Boyle	148
Work	50
Henry	54
Allen	3

and Boyle was declared the nominee.

RECORDER.

Mr. Loveland and Mr. Metz's names being withdrawn, the vote stood:

John Butt	145
S. M. High	41
Burton Brown	28
Thomas Murray	31

Mr. Butt having received a majority of all the votes cast, was declared the nominee.

SURVEYOR—FIRST BALLOT:

J. J. VanAuken	105
A. P. Foltz	68
David Maxwell	31
S. B. Mottinger	23
Franklin Scholes	15
J. P. Ensley	13

The names of Ensley and Scholes were withdrawn. Second ballot:

VanAuken	160
Foltz	69
Mottinger	26

VanAuken was declared nominated.

CORONER:

J. J. Latson was then nominated by acclamation, as has become the custom, and made a few remarks in his usual good-natured vein.

COMMISSIONER NORTH DISTRICT:

Joseph Sewell	206
E. R. Shoemaker	29
John Lees	20

Sewell was declared the nominee.

COMMISSIONER SOUTHWEST DISTRICT:

Christian Sheets	148
Manoah Franks	85
Charles Comesky	22

Sheets having received the necessary majority, was made the nominee.

COMMISSIONER SOUTHEAST DISTRICT:

O. H. Widney	132
A. D. Moore	64
Edgar Treeman	58

Franklin township was one vote short. Widney having a majority, was declared nominated.

A resolution was then passed, that all democrats who attend the state convention be entitled to act as delegates from this county.

Judge McClellan then, in a few brief remarks, thanked the convention for the good order and decorum maintained throughout the day. Convention then adjourned.

THE supreme court of Indiana has decided that the act of March 17, 1875, which provides "that a person holding public office under the constitution or laws of this state, who becomes intoxicated during office hours, or becomes intoxicated habitually, will thereby forfeit his office, is a constitutional and valid act, and that any citizen of a county where such public officer resides is entitled to file a complaint in the circuit court to have the forfeiture declared.—Sentinel

THE monument which Cyrus W. Field erected over the grave of Maj. Andre, has at last been tumbled over and nearly destroyed. Everybody's Going to Kendallville!

TO SEE THE HANDSOMEST WOMAN IN THE WORLD, AND 22 PERFORMING ELEPHANTS, 1,000 WILD BEASTS, COLOSSAL CIRCUS IN TWO RINGS, AND GRAND FREE PROCESSION OF INDUSTRY, AT KENDALLVILLE.

The Great Forepaugh Show exhibits at Kendallville.

FRIDAY JUNE 23rd.

In addition to a grandly great circus in two great rings, and a monster menagerie of 1,000 wild beasts, all transported by four great railway trains, there is to be a great, grand, free procession on the day Forepaugh exhibits there. Every town in this county will be represented in this huge, highway holiday parade. In addition to this, the great pageants of "Cleopatra" and the "Lalla Rookh" will be presented in the show parade. This spectacle is described as being the most gorgeous ever seen upon the streets of an American city. The loveliest lady in the land has been secured to personify the beautiful Eastern Princess, Lalla Rookh, whom poets describe as "more beautiful than any of those heroines whose names and loves embellish the songs of Persia and Hindostan; more perfect than the divinest images of the House of Azor." In this gorgeous, glittering, oriental pageant, Lalla Rookh is seen reclining in her sumptuous howdah, borne aloft upon the back of a ponderous and kingly elephant, the largest on this continent whose embroidered velvet trappings touch the ground; a fair young female slave sits fanning the Princess through the rose-colored veils, with feathers of argus-pheasant's wings, and the lovely troupe of Tartarian and Cashmerean maids of honor ride upon each side of the Princess upon small Arabian horses. Rajahs and Mogul Lords follow, accompanied by Cavaliers in costly armor, mounted upon

"Steeds with their housings of rich silver spun;
Their chains and poitrels glittering in the sun;
And Camels, tufted o'er with Yemen's shells,
Shaking in every breeze their light-toned bells."

In keeping with the author of Lalla Rookh's description of this grand, glittering, lavish and luxurious spectacle, are seen the Guards of the Great Kedar Kahn, with their silver battle-axes, and maces of gold, followed by the Great Nazir, or Chamberlain of the Harem, and the retinue of the Court of Delhi, mounted upon elephants, camels and Arabian horses decorated in oriental trappings, and bearing aloft the royal standards,—the entire scene recalling to the beholder the glories and the grandeur of the distant Indies; the whole forming the most magnificent, picturesque and realistic oriental spectacle ever presented in the New World, requiring the expenditure of a hundred thousand dollars in its preparation, eclipsing all displays of pageantry ever produced by any exhibition, and in itself worth miles of travel to behold. Remember, this superb spectacle is presented daily, between the hours of 9 and 10 a. m. and is a great, grand, gorgeous, free public festival for all to look at and admire.

THE ninety-three delegates who gave us their support last Saturday have our thanks and our gratitude, especially the plucky little Troy. Gentlemen, we hope you will some day be suitably rewarded by the democracy of this county, for doing what was believed to be for the best.

Convention Item.

On Saturday last, at the democratic convention held at Auburn, I saw a man very earnestly engaged in showing the bad points of one of the candidates. Seeing him in such deep earnest, I made it my business to get a position suitable to hear the conversation. His gestures were noticeable; and the person taking such a stand for an electioneering scheme should be very careful for fear of exposing himself. He elaborately poured forth volumes of misrepresentations of his would-be unneighborly candidate, and said, "Who would support such a man?" His statement would have left a very bad impression if it had not been falsely represented. Upon inquiry (which is very necessary on such occasions) it was found that he was a pretended minister of the gospel. He frequently takes his toddy, and such a history of his career as I received, I think he had better keep his mouth shut.

Dr HARTER'S

A combination of Protoxide of Iron, Peruvian Bark and Phosphorus in a palatable form. The only preparation of iron that will not blacken the teeth, so characteristic of other iron preparations.

GENTLEMEN: I have used DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC in my practice, and in an experience of twenty-five years in medicine, have never found anything to give the results that DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC does. In many cases of Nervous Prostration, Female Diseases, Dyspepsia, and an impoverished condition of the blood, this peerless remedy has, in my hands, made some wonderful cures. Cases that have baffled some of our most eminent physicians have yielded to this great and incomparable remedy. I prescribe it in preference to any iron preparation made. In fact, such a compound as DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC is a necessity in my practice.

DR. ROBERT HARDING, [illegible] Wash. Avenue.

ST. LOUIS, MO., NOV. [illegible], 1881.

It gives color to the blood, natural healthful tone to the digestive organs and nervous system, making it applicable to General Debility, Loss of Appetite, Prostration of Vital Powers and Impotence.

—Bertie Shaffer, daughter of John W. Shaffer, had the misfortune to run a needle into her foot Saturday last, and up to date, it has not been extracted. Dr. Littlefield was called and she was put under the influence of chloroform when a deep incision was made in the hope of finding the needle, but with no success. The shock to her system was so great, that fears were entertained that the accident would result in serious illness. But at last accounts she was getting along very comfortably.

—The funeral service of Mark Rush at the M. E. church last Sunday was a very impressive one. Rev. W. H Daniels delivered the funeral discourse, and Recorder Boland and Elza Shaffer took charge of the arrangements at the house and along the route to the cemetery. A special train on the Jackson road brought up from Fort Wayne over twenty of the employes of that line, including Conductor Cooper. Mark had been in the company's service as operator, and the boys showed their respect for the memory of their young friend by attending his funeral in a body. The arrangements of Mr. Boland and Mr. Shaffer had been carefully made, and were carried out with a thoughtful exactness that was very gratifying to all present. A large concourse of people attended both at the church and the grave. The pall-bearers were J. C. Little, C. Baut, George Miller, Elmer Lowrey, Henry McIntyre and George Ralston. The following are the names of those who came on the special train of the Jackson road: Conductor H. Cooper, E. S. Philley, agent at Fort Wayne; J. A. Pullen, Charles Hill, John Porter, Allen B. OBITUARY.

MARK L. RUSH died at the residence of his parents, in Auburn, Indiana, June 8th, 1882, aged 22 years, 4 months and 12 days.

Having lived about all his life in Auburn, he was intimately known in the community, and occupied a high place in the esteem and affectionate regards of all. He had not yielded to the allurements of evil habits of which many young men become the victims. His life was one that commended itself, in the beauty and strength of its moral tone. He had a laudable ambition to make the most of himself. Much of the period of his life was spent in acquiring mental culture and other qualifications for his vocation. In the discharge of his business duties, he was faithful and entirely trustworthy. The society of home was always most congenial to his feelings. In his associations with the loved ones of the home circle, his natural buoyancy of spirit and constant readiness to aid in their tasks did much to make home a place of joy. In his illness of many months' duration, he was a great but patient sufferer. He often expressed an earnest desire to recover. Life, with all its allurements, acquisitions and victories, was yet before him. To cling to life with almost an unyielding tenacity was but natural, yet, when informed of his exceedingly critical condition with the probabilities of recovery against him, he expressed his submission to God's will, and the belief that all was well. In the mysterious operations of the inhabitants of the spirit realm, it is sometimes given to souls on the borders of eternity to behold about them the spirits passed over before. Such, in a measure, was his experience. Only a few moments before his death, and as his last words, he uttered in tones of apparent recognition the name of a neighbor and friend who had but recently passed away.

Grand Public Parade at Kendallville

TWENTY-TWO ELEPHANTS IN LINE—THE MAGNIFICENT PAGEANTS OF "LALLA ROOKH" AND "CLEOPATRA"—JUBILEE SINGERS—FOUR HUNDRED GAILY CAPARISONED HORSES—A MILE OF CHARIOTS, TABLEAU CARS, CAGES, ETC.

On Friday, June 23d, between the hours of 9 and 10 o'clock in the forenoon, Adam Forepaugh's Great Railroad Show will appear upon the streets of Kendallville in processional order. Our exchanges from the places where the establishment has exhibited, assert that in extent and magnificence this display exceeds all spectacular or show parades ever made by any exhibition in the United States.

The procession is led by the beautiful pageant illustrating the departure of Lalla Rookh from Delhi. The lovely princess, who is personified by the handsomest woman in America, and for whose services in this pageant Mr. Forepaugh pays the sum of is seen seated in a genuine East Indian Howdah, upon the back of a kingly elephant. Maids of honor, servitors, and all the pomp and wealth of an Eastern monarch's court, surround her.

Another most attractive and novel feature of the parade is the presentation, for the first time in America, of the fascinating Egyptian spectacle, "Cleopatra Journeying to Meet Mark Antony." The famous and beautiful queen is personated, seated in a magnificent barge ablaze with gold, and all the surroundings are in keeping with the account given by the most reliable historians of this remarkable regal journey. Then follow

TWENTY-TWO HUGE ELEPHANTS,

attached to chariots ablaze with gold and glitter; two martial bands enliven the occasion; the "Grand Bashaw," with his retinue of slaves, cupbearers, sultanas, etc., is represented, riding upon white camels and black dromedaries; upon a colossal chariot, designated as the "Car of India," a monster living lion is placed, and by his side sits a youthful maiden, with her hand resting on the head of the savage brute. A monster cage with glass sides and ends, is filled with anacondas and pythons, and in the midst of this wiggling mess of serpents the spectators behold an East Indian Snake Charmer dallying with the shining, slimy monsters.

TEN CEYLON ELEPHANTS

draw another chariot, followed by the "Car of the Seasons" and the "Chariot of Olympus," which is embellished with representations of the fates, furies, graces, nymphs, gods, heroes and men. Next the Leo De Westes' Hanovarian Stud of twenty-two performing stallions and ponies in elegant and elaborate trappings, followed by

OPEN DENS OF LIONS AND TIGERS

are to be seen at intervals. A mammoth steam orchestra mingles its shrill notes with those of the bands, and at intervals are to be seen mardigras masqueraders in fanciful and mirth-provoking costumes.

An instructive as well as humorous feature of the pageant is the appearance of a real slave-singing band of old-time old plantation darkies. All were formerly slaves, not one of them has ever been away from the south, and, seated upon cotton bales, in a genuine southern mule team, this band of freedmen sing, as the procession moves, the camp-meeting melodies and songs of the slave cabins, as was customary in slavery days.

THREE GREAT BANDS OF MUSIC

are in position along the line of the cavalcade; droves of camels, diminutive ponies, ornate tableau cars, and nearly a mile of statuary-adorned and beautifully-embellished animal cages, all drawn by hundreds of plumed steeds, drivers uniformed, constitute some of the attractive features of this princely pageant. Our readers should reach Kendallville by nine o'clock in the forenoon, in order to behold this free-for-all holiday parade.

Wine seems to have become unpopular at Washington parties. At several very fashionable private parties, including the wedding reception given by the British Minister, Mr. West, at his legation, to Mr. Drummond and his bride, there was no wine at all, nor even punch, nor was there any at the President's card reception last week.

THE increase in receipts of the Government's internal revenue for May, compared with the same month last year, is $1,590,865. Receipts for eleven months ending Friday, June 2d, $138,740,319; increase for eleven months, $10,222,600; receipts for May, $16,347,-273, being more than was collected in any one month since the bulk of the war taxes was abolished.

THE way of the Irish land law courts out of the work now on hand is not clear. On the 16th of April last no fewer than 76,387 cases had been entered for hearing of which 664 had been dismissed and 469 had been withdrawn, thus leaving 75,256 to be dealt with. Of these latter, 7,443 have been decided, but nearly 1,500 went afterward to appeal, and only 247 of the appeals have been settled. Hence about 72 000 cases remain untouched.

The value of the American dairy products exported to Europe during the year ending April 30 was $5,405,409 less than during the previous year. During the last year the shipments of butter were 15,985,290 pounds, and of cheese 136,241,919 pounds: during the preceding year the shipments of butter were 35,637,438 pounds, and cheese 145,679,812 pounds. The falling off in butter exports was nearly one-half.

THE "Knights of Labor" is an organization that bids fair to make a good deal of trouble in the labor market, if its action in a recent case is to be taken as a sample of its interference. It recently turned its attention to the brick-makers of Delaware, and advised the workmen to demand $4 per day, instead of $3. This large advance was refused, of course, and another big strike is the result. Employers prefer to stop work altogether rather than carry it on at a loss.

THE recent increase in ocean telegraph rates has resulted in the formation of an English company, which intends to lay two new cables between England and the United States. There has been subscribed in London $4,000,000 toward the capital stock. An arrangement has been made with Mr. Garrett, of Baltimore, to operate the new cables in connection with the Baltimore and Ohio Telegraph Company. The tariff to the public will be 25 cents a word. The new cables will have an entry in Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, and other centers of commerce. The cost of the two cables is estimated at $9,000,000.

THE following extract from a speech by Hon. James F. Wilson, of Iowa, challenges the attention and careful consideration of every thoughtful citizen. Is it true that "if our form of goverment shall ever fail, the historian will have no difficulty in tracing the cause to the municipal governments of our cities. And when he reaches that point he will find that the saloon system was the foundation from which disaster flowed. It is a permanently organized and an efficiently aggressive force. It stands for itself, regardless of the character of issues involved in municipal elections. It cares not how much corruption creeps into the municipal government provided no restraint be put upon it."

A CHATTANOOGA dispatch of June 1st, says: "On the day after the news was received of Hancock's defeat for President, a wealthy citizen of Jeffersonville, Ind., named Harry Anderson, jumped from his seat, placed $3,000 in his boots, and disappeared from home in a demented state of mind. Nothing was heard of his whereabouts until yesterday, when he was arrested here by officers for lunacy, and $1,700 found on his person. Mrs. Kate Wallace, of Jeffersonville, arrived here and took charge of him. They left last night for his home. He has been wandering over the country ever since Hancock's defeat. He was a strong Democrat, and it is supposed the result of the election caused his derangement.

President Miller, of the Western Export Association, explained to the Senate committee investigating the Bonded Spirits bill, the workings of his association. Its purpose was to protect Western distillers from the evil effects of over production, and the funds of the association were collected solely from distillers, and expended among those who were losers by the operations of the pool. Not a dollar, he said, had been paid for the purpose of influencing legislation. He intimated that it would be a disastrous blow to the whisky interest should Congress refuse to extend the bonded period.

The Soldiers of France.

New York Sun.

Most people who see that 286,000 young men are brought forward annually for military service in France attach an exaggerated significance to this large number. As a matter of fact, not one-third of them go just now into the ranks for five years' service. Out of every hundred of these youths, seventeen serve only a year or for six months, twenty-four are exempted for family or educational reasons, five or six are set aside for auxiliary service because of minor bodily defects, nine of extra small and weakly make are put back for two years, and twelve are declared totally unfit for service. Thus we have the significant fact that the large production of 27 per cent. of the young men of France are, at the age of twenty, more or less physically unfitted for military service. The standard of education may be judged from the fact that one in every seven recruits can neither read nor write. Ten years ago the proportion of the illiterate was about one in every five, and fifty years ago it was 50 per cent. As to height—or rather the want of it—36 per cent. of the recruits are between 5 feet and half and inch (the minimum army height) and 5 feet 4 inches, and the general average is less than 5 feet 5 inches.

From observations made during many years in Senegal and other intertropical regions in Africa, Dr. A. Corre is inclined to believe that the African blacks are destined in course of time to disappear and be supplanted by the superior race of European immigrants. Beyond the possession of immunity against yellow fever and malaria, he thinks the blacks in every way inferior to the whites.

Cablegrams from London say that the Duke of Manchester, now in this country, is backed by a Scotch company which proposes to send a number of Scotch farmers to occupy Canada Pacific lands.

The owner of the estate at Monticello, Va., from which it is proposed to take Jefferson's remains, says Jefferson was buried there at his own request. He and a young friend made an agreement in early manhood that whichever died first the other should bury him at the favorite spot Monticello. The friend was killed in the Mexican war, and Jefferson had the remains brought home and buried there, and before his own death asked to be buried beside them.

Edwin Cowles, of the Cleveland Leader, will, it is said, be nominated Consul General to Egypt to-morrow, to succeed Wolfe, of Pennsylvania, who recently returned from that post.

In the Star Route trials, this morning, Mr. Ingersoll asked leave on behalf of his clients, the Dorseys, to withdraw their pleas of not guilty and enter a motion to quash, on the ground that the Grand Jury was not selected in accordance with Section 2 of the act of June, 1879. The motion was denied, and the defense announced its readiness to call the jury.

The public debt reduction for eleven months is about $140,000,000, and will be for the year over $150,000,000. At this rate the debt will be paid off in ten years. The reduction for May is 50 per cent. more than for May last year.

Major W. H. H. Benyaurd leaves for Chicago to-morrow to take the place of Major Lydecker in charge of the government works in improving the harbor there.

Mr. Hubbell is receiving very satisfactory responses to his circular calling for a campaign fund. The responses are very prompt, and, in many cases, exceed the amount asked for.

It looks as though the railroads west of Chicago have killed the goose that lays the golden egg, by asking Postmaster General Howe too much for a fast train. He is in doubt about putting it on.

Messrs. Walker, Blaine and Trescott are back. Peru received them with open arms, and were hopeful as to the mission, but Chili's course was very cool. Peru refused Chili's terms offered through Mr. Trescott. They say that little result from their trip is apparent, but it may finally lead to compromise and peace. They also say that Montero, Vice President of Peru, has but 600 troops. They have made no report to the State Department yet.

This morning Charles H. Reed, counsel for Guiteau, presented a petition to the District Supreme Court in general term, asking a rehearing of the case of his client. The application is upon purely technical grounds, and embodies liberal citations from the official record of the trial. Judge Carter said a decision would be rendered upon the petition as soon as the Judges could consult upon it, which will probably be to-morrow morning.

Lieutenant Danenhower's assignment to special duty at Washington to write his report, means an opportunity for a long rest. He draws full pay while on special duty, but had he been placed on waiting orders, he would only have had half pay.

There is much anxiety respecting Commissioner Raum's report about glucose. The Ways and Means Committee contemplate imposing a tax of 5 cents per pound on glucose. General Raum has had an analysis made for the committee, but has not yet reported it. Some suppose the delay is caused by an unwillingness to make enemies of the Illinois manufacturers during the pendency of the Senatorial contest.

The reports from the Southwest show that the crop prospects are unusually fine. The Mississippi overflow is not so injurious as was supposed. The shipments of stock from the Southwest to New York are unusually large.

Chief Justice Cartter and Judges James and Hagner, constituting the court in banc, to-day rendered the decision upon the last motion filed by Mr. Charles H. Reed in Guiteau's behalf. The Chief Justice delivered the decision, as follows:

In the case of Guiteau, the judges who listened to the argument in that case have come to the conclusion that they have exhausted their powers upon it; that they heard it patiently, fully and fairly, and that a re-argument would bring no other conclusion than that already arrived at, and they decline to reopen the case for the argument.

It is stated as sure that either Secretary Folger or ex-Congressman Starin will be the candidate for Governor of New York. Both are Stalwarts.

Attorney General Brewster has decided that more legislation is necessary before the Eight-Hour law can be enforced at the navy yards and other Government works.

The War Department has reports showing the number of lives lost by the late Indian raid in Arizona to have been forty-two. The damage to property is stated at $32,000.

General Phil Sheridan and John McCullough are preparing to spend the summer in the Yellowstone country.

Phœbe Couzins has written Postmaster General Howe, protesting against the proposition to compel carriers to deliver letters on Sunday.

The figures prepared on the price of labor in this country by the Census Bureau show that American workmen receive nearly 100 per cent. more than those of Great Britain.

Attorney General Brewster appeared in the Star Route [illegible] this morning. He evidently means to have the cases pushed.

It is said ex-Senator Harlan will be made member of the Alabama Claims Commission.

The general impression is now that Congress will adjourn about the 10th of July. The House manifests a disposition to go to work, and as the Senate keeps up, the work will probably be got through with in about a month. The friends of the River and Harbor bill now propose to let it in as a privileged report the first time they catch the House in good humor, if that is possible. They saw that everybody was sour yesterday, and that it was unsafe to take it up.

The report that Blaine is to stump Pennsylvania for the Republican ticket is denied here. He is giving all his time to private business.

Mr. Reed made his motion before Judge Wylie to-day, the same made before the court in banc last week, and it was promptly denied. He went out to the jail, and told Guiteau the situation, and the two had quite a long consultation. Mr. Reed says that he has still another resort, though he refuses to state what it is. It is probably that indicated in the dispatches yesterday—to apply for a writ of habeas corpus on the morning of June 30, in the hope of delaying the execution past the day set. Guiteau is somewhat depressed, but professes to hope at least for Executive clemency.

Secretary Folger has about decided the question of quarantining cattle imported and exported from districts infected with pleuro pneumonia. Canada admits cattle from infected districts ninety days from shipment from Liverpool, while the United States quarantines them ninety days from date of landing, thus giving the Canadians two weeks' advantage. The Secretary has modified the order, which was a recent one, to conform to the regulations of the Dominion. Congress will be asked for a large appropriation to stamp out the disease in the few districts where the disease is prevalent, which are only in New York and New Jersey, the disease not having reached the West.

The Deficiency bill brought up in the House to-day revived some of the scandals of the Yorktown Centennial. The bill showed a deficiency in the fund for the expenses of entertaining the French and German guests while here of $80,000, or nearly double what was authorized to be spent. It leaked out, a little at a time, in statements from Holman and Sparks, and admissions from Hiscock, that the money was largely expended for wines and in a high old time generally. Eighteen thousand dollars of it was for hotel bills in New York and Washington, and several thousand for the use of the steamboat on which the committee took the parties to Yorktown. Hiscock tried to keep the matter as quiet as possible, saying it would be an insult to our guests to quibble over the bills for their entertainment. But he didn't succeed.

Much interest is felt in the convention of the Independents of North Carolina, which meets to-day. It is expected they will make a ticket which the Republicans will indorse in part at their convention next week, and, in return, receive the Independent support for a Republican Congressman.

Ex-Delegate Cannon, of Utah, still lingers here looking after his personal interests. He says Hon. A. S. Paddock, of Nebraska, is likely to be one of the Utah commission.

Phebe Couzins is here, renewing the struggle for a membership of the Utah commission for herself. She thinks the prospects are good.

Guiteau has received a letter from Mrs. Scoville, in which she urges him to keep up courage, and comments upon Mr. Reed's energetic movements in his behalf. She urges that everything possible be done in his behalf; expresses the warmest sympathy with him, and speaks of him as a martyr. Mr. Reed will make no new move for a few days.

Josh Billings' Philosophy.

N. Y. Weekly.

If a man iz absolutely wise he kan git along with a very little gravity. Gravity is the very best kard a dull phool kan play.

One grate man in the world at a time is enuff; they are a great nuisance; if they could be kut up into four medium ones it would be better.

All genuine humorists are as reddy to weep as to laf; humor and pathos grow on the same bush.

Hypokrasy is more weak and wicked than infidelity; it iz possible for an infidel to be only a dupe to his folly, while a hypokrite iz always an ignominious fraud.

Ideality iz the smoke of an idea.

It would be difficult to name a single thing we possess that has not cost us more than it iz worth.

Honesty iz a principle, while honor seems more like a sentiment, often a very refined sentiment, it iz true.

The ladder of fame iz free to all, but to many it is like climbing a greased pole, one foot up, then slip back three.

There ain't much hypokarsy in hate; it is a thousand times more honest than flattery, but we kan't always give good reasons for our hate.

A well-balanced man iz not one who parts hiz hair in the middle, but one who has a level head and a broad heart, that never interfere with each other's bizness.

Honesty iz money at interest.

No grate suckcess has ever been reached yet without a martyrdom ov sum kind.

Grate things and grate men should be looked at from a distance; you kan't see the spots on them then.

If you kan't educate but one, let it be the harte; with a well edukated harte the head kan't git far amiss.

Habits are a hair at first, at last a cable.

It is very difficult to define happiness, or to mezzure them in any way; the best way is to guess at the amount and let them slide.

Haste and hurry are a couple of vagrants, enny how, but haste iz more ov the nature ov dispatch. Hurry will tangle enny man's legs.

Hope hez no favorites, and often plays a konfidence game with those she deals with.

A Father's Plan to Save His Son

London Telegraph.

Originality of conception and vigor in execution alike characterize the expedient adopted a few years ago by a Parisan father to obtain his only son's exemption from the conscription of 1882. The youth, it appears, had drawn a "bad number", and the prospect of his exposure to the perils and and fatigues of military service plunged his mother into such dark depths of despair that her husband, unable to endure the contemplation of her sore affliction, made up his mind one day to take a measure that could not fail to avert the threatened separation of mother and son. While they were weeping in one another's arms he suddenly clasped them both in a convulsive embrace, murmured the word "Adieu!" and rushed from the house to the nearest bridge over the Seine, whence he sprang head foremost into the river. Fortunately some boatmen, who saw him fall, promptly put off from the quay and succeeded with considerable difficulty in rescuing him alive but insensible. He was conveyed to the morgue and there stripped in order to be subjected to the usual restorative process of violent friction. In accordance with the regulations of that institution his clothes were searched, with a view of establishing his identity, in his pocketbook was found a sheet of note paper, upon which he had written down his name, address, and the following touching sentence: "The child shall not be parted from his mother; he is a widow's only son." Never yet, in all probability, has a tale of sublime self-sacrifice been told in so [illegible] words.

In the Sleeper.

Detroit Free Press.

As the train was about to leave the Union Depot, for the East the other night, a man with satchel said he'd heard a heap about "them sleeping cars," and he guessed he'd try one once. Making the necessary arrangements, he was admitted to the car, and soon settled himself into a seat. Before reaching Trenton he was asleep, feet on the opposite cushion, and his satchel for a pillow. The porter finally got ready to make his bed and gave him a shake to rouse him.

"Who the blazes be you!" growled the man as he opened his eyes.

"De Porter, sah."

"You are, eh! Well, now you look here! I never saw you before, and never shall again, but I want you to understand that I'm no chicken. I paid $2.00 for the privilege of sleeping in this car, and just as I get into my first snooze along you come and wake me up! If you want a chaw of tobacco or a match you can have it, but don't break on my dreams again if you want to be alive when we get to Buffalo! When I buy certain rights I'm going to have 'em or bust!"

Mob Law.

Indianapolis Journal.

A law abiding community cannot countenance a mob. Mob law is no law. Our statutes are established to restrain both court and criminal; to mete out justice from one to the other; to stand between passion and its victim, between prejudice and equity. That is hardly possible that a murderous and iresponsible mob will conserve public interests to a better advantage than will a jury of men of known character sworn to act with strict impartiality. Let it once be acknowledged that mobs may usurp the prerogatives of courts and all safety is at an end. The worst elements of society are certain to take advantage of such a state of affairs and work to their own nefarious ends, to the overthrow of social order and the permanent injury of the community in all respects.

Driven Off By Bees.

"The little busy bee" was once used in a naval fight in the Mediterranean. A small vessel, which was suspected of belonging to pirates, was chased by a Turkish man-of-war, on board of which were 500 seamen and soldiers. As soon as the man-of-war came up to the privateer, several hundred men were sent in small boats to take possession of her. When the small boats got alongside the privateer, the latter's crew mounted the rigging, taking with them a dozen hives of bees, which they had stolen to sell on the Italian coast. At the word of command the bees were thrown into the boats among the Turks. The terrible time that followed was beyond description. Some of the soldiers jumped overboard to escape the furious insects, and in the excitement the privateer escaped. The scene was witnessed from the deck of an approaching English ship, which picked up two of the Turkish boats.

How the Suckers Bite.

[Chicago Tribune.]

"Myrtle dear?"

"Yes, George, what is it?" replied the girl, glancing shyly upward.

The radiant glory of a summer moon shone down upon the earth this June night, bathing in all its mellow splendor the leafy branches of the sturdy old oaks that had for centuries shaded the entrance to Castle McMurtry and laughed defiance to the fierce gales that every winter came howling down in all their cruel force and fury from the moorlands lying to the westward of the castle. On the edge of the broad demesne that stretched away to the south stood a large brindle cow, and as the moonlight flecked with silvery lustre her starboard ribs, she seemed to Myrtle a perfect picture of sweet content and almost holy calm.

"Is it not a beautiful night, dearest?" murmured the girl. "See how the moonbeams flutter down through the trees, making strange lights and shadows that flit among the shrubs and flowers in such a weird, ghost-like fashion. The dell is indeed clothed in loveliness to-night, sweetheart."

"Yes," said George W. Simpson, "this is the boss dell"—and then, looking down into the pure, innocent face that was lifted to his, he took in his own broad, third-base palm the little hand that erstwhile held up Myrtle's polonaise. As they stood there silently in the bosky glade, George passed his arm silently but firmly around Myrtle's waist.

The noble girl did not shy.

"Do you love me, sweetheart?" he asked in accents that were tremulous with tremulousness.

Myrtle's head was drooping now, and the rosy blushes of Calumet Avenue innocence were chasing each other across her peachy cheeks.

George drew her more closely to him. If a mosquito had tried to pass between them then it would have been bad for the mosquito.

"Can you doubt me, darling?" he whispered. "You surely must know that I love you with a wild, passionate, whoa-Emma love that can never die. Do you not love me a little in return?"

For an instant the girl did not speak. George heard the whisking of the brindle cow's tail break in rudely upon the solemn stillness of the night, and ever and anon came the dull thud of the bullfrog as he jumped into a neighboring pond. Presently Myrtle placed her arms around his neck, and with a wistful, baby's-got-the-cramp look in her sweet face, she said to him: "I love you, George, with a deathless devotion that will eventually keep you broke." And with these fateful words she adjusted her rumpled bang and fearlessly led the way to an ice-cream lair.

Wabash College.

This excellent institution of learning has just entered on the fiftieth year of its work. It has a reputation for thorough work, second to none in the country. The ability and high standing of its faculty, the character of work done, and the favorable location should be considerations to which those who expect to attend college should give their full thoughts. Many young men in this county, we are aware, expect to attend a college somewhere and take a more or less thorough course of instruction. To such, we say, give Old Wabash a trial. OLD SETTLERS' REUNION.

An Address Delivered By James E. Rose, at Auburn, June 15, 1882.

MR. PRESIDENT, LADIES AND GENTLEMEN:—Reunions have become of frequent occurrence. Those who have been associated together in any particular relationship, especially if the object of the association has been for a philanthropic purpose, after a long separation, or after the objects of the association have been realized, greatly enjoy meeting together and exchanging congratulations over the accomplishment of their common purpose or over each others' personal success; or condoling each others' sorrows and sympathizing with each other in whatever there has been of life, through which they have been called to pass that has been unpleasant and hard to bear. Our joys are increased by recounting them to our friends, and the burdens of life are diminished, when the sympathy of old time friends is extended toward us in our afflictions. The spirit's burden that weighs down old age, becomes as a feather when we realize the presence and encouragement of the friends of our early lives. These reunions afford us an opportunity for the time being, of living over again the long past, and drawing from it lessons which enable us the better to enjoy the present. The men, who, in the hour of their country's peril, bared their breasts to the leaden hail of rebel bullets to save their country's flag and their country's honor, hold their annual reunions, and live over again all the pleasurable excitement of the march, the bivouac and the battle. The shrieking fife and the rolling drum, the rifle's sharp crack and the cannon's reverberating roar, as the mimic battle rages, recalls all the enjoyable qualities of the real battle, relieved of its attendant dangers and suffering. And, for the time being, the halting, limping step that has characterized the unfortunate patriot for a score of years is forgotten by himself, and unnoticed by others, as he marches side by side with the comrades, by whose side he fought real battles years ago.

The college students, who for four years, during the incubation of their manhood, racked their overtaxed minds over difficult mathematical problems until reason almost tottered on her throne, or conned Greek roots, prefixes and suffixes until in their wearied frenzy they would gladly attend the obsequies of a language that has been dead for centuries, hold their reunions, at which they recount the experiences of college, and live over again their youth. And the most dignified men of the age at their alumni gatherings, in their recitals of college life experiences, prove the truthfulness of the old adage that "boys are boys the world around." For a time the elasticity of youth returns and reanimates the trembling frame of the venerable sage, and lends to life a buoyancy and pleasure that could not flow from any other source. The pilgrims, while living, and their descendants after their death, from the time of their landing on Plymouth Rock to the present time have had their annual reunions on the anniversary in this country, and at these reunions they gather the relics of two centuries ago in honor of the names of their noble ancestry, whose love of freedom, and independence, and devotion to principle, did so much to make New England, in morality and industry what it is to-day. These reunions are induced by the friendly feeling which grows up among those engaged in a common work where hardships are undergone, and sacrifices made to accomplish a common purpose,

"When our lives
"Were linked together, and our young hearts blossomed out
"Like violet bells upon the self-same stem,
"Pouring the dewy odors of life's spring
"Into each others' bosoms.

In imitation of this custom, the pioneers of the county, those by whose personal efforts and personal sacrifices, the vast and apparently impenetrable wilderness has been subdued and, as if by magic, the cultivated farm with its palatial home, and wide stretching fields, its lowing herds and waving grain; the school house, the church, the village and the busy city have appeared, meet in annual reunions, in their several localities to revere the memories of the long past, and to greet each other again on this side of the mysterious river that forms the boundary line between time and eternity. Yes we meet to take each other by the hand, as in the "long ago" when in our home spun garb we met at the log cabin raising, or the meeting in the log school house, and renew our poineer associations, and rekindle the fires of friendship, and paternal feeling that burned so brightly nearly half a century ago. The pioneer's fire was emblematical of his friendship, although covered for a time, the covering was not to extinguish, but to preserve, and it required but a breath to start it into a flame; and it requires but a moment for memory to go back to the pioneer days of this country, and from its store house of sacred relics bring forth for our consideration and enjoyment pictures of things that then existed, and by comparing them with what exists to day determine what advancements we have made in the time that has intervened. Professor Swing in the preface to his lectures, entitled, "Motive of Life" expresses the following beautiful thought. "Visiting a large forest in June, you cannot bear home with you all its great old trees; you may carry back only a few boughs from elm and oak." So with us, to day. I cannot bring back, from memory's store house all the noble deeds of the poineers. I cannot recount all that would be interesting to hear, of the experiences and incidents of pioneer life in the time allotted to me; but I hope to be able to present to your consideration a few reminders of the great and noble achievements of the pioneers, and some of the peculiarities of their mode of life, which may instruct the young and interest the old. And, looking back over the history of this county from its first settlement, for I have witnessed the facts from which most of that history has been made; and contemplating the vast field of labor and sacrifices and incidents that might be made subservient to my purpose on this occasion, it is difficult for me to determine with what branch of the work of the pioneers to commence this examination of what they have accomplished. As the friendly greetings of to day so vividly remind me of those at the religious meetings held by the pioneers in the log school house, I will ask you to go with me to one of them and consider its surroundings. We had no church edifices then, with cushioned pews and carpeted aisles, with deep toned organ and voice trained choir. No white gloved usher to conduct you to a seat, with a soft and easy grace, all assumed, that would have made a fairy blush. No gilded carriage, no liveried coachman to convey you to the palatial church at the call of the deep toned bell, pealing out its reverberating notes of welcome in the mellow air of the sabbath morning. No vestibule with its French mirror, at whose shrine every fashionable lady must do homage before entering the place dedicated to the worship of God. No cushioned and tasselated pulpit and upholstered chairs.

No, we had none of these luxuries connected with the worship of God in those pioneer days. The log school house answered the tripple purpose of school-house, church, and town hall. The congregation consisted of the neighborhood for miles around. The minister "rode the circuit" which comprised a territory embracing several counties, and equal in area to the whole state of Rhode Island. These trips were made on horseback, and the circuit rider carried with him a huge pair of saddle-bags, in which was stowed away his bible and hymn-book, a clean shirt and few copies of Baxter's Saints rest, for sale. He was made to feel himself at home wherever he stopped by the homely and heart-felt hospitality with which he was entertained by the pioneers in their log-cabin-homes. The coming of the preacher, was a welcome event in the household, as he brought the news from other neighborhoods, which he visited on his circuit. It would amuse, and probably, in some things, instruct, the young man and young woman of the present day to witness a "quarterly meeting" such as we had among the pioneers.

Now, no young man can think of entering society until he becomes the possessor of a covered carriage, nickle-plated harness and a fine horse, and until he is supplied with this outfit he receives but little consideration from the average young lady; but in those pioneer days the young man on whom such paternal kindness was bestowed as to be favored with the use of the family horse to attend quarterly meeting with, was a desirable catch for the most ambitious young lady of his acquaintance. Equipped with horse, saddle and bridle and coverlet or quilt thrown over the saddle and extending back to the horse's hips, he went to the house of the most popular young lady in the neighborhood, with as much pride as the kid-gloved young man of to-day drives his 2:40 horse and gilded carriage to the palatial home of his lady friend; and with his girl mounted behind him, her arms around his waist to prevent falling off, the journey was commenced. As these meetings were attended by people who came several miles, it was not an unusual sight to see a procession of eighteen or twenty couples, thus mounted two on one horse, wending their way to the place of worship. A horse that would not carry double could not be sold to a pioneer in those days at any price, if the young men of the family were consulted in regard to the purchase.

There are before me to-day, men now well down the sunny side of life whom I have seen on their way to meeting on horseback with their girls behind them. Farm wagons drawn by oxen was the usual mode of conveyance to meetings and other places to which the pioneers went if the distance was great; but to walk three or four miles to meeting or to form an acquaintance of an emigrant recently arrived, was not regarded as much of a task by the pioneers' wife and daughters.

The first school house built in the county, I think was in the Handy settlement, three miles south of the place where the town of Butler now is. It would be a curiosity now. Permit me to describe it to-day as it stood more than forty years ago. It was built of round logs, that is unhewn logs, and sixteen feet wide and twenty-four long, with a puncheon floor, and a sled-runner chimney; a fire place extending across one end of the building and a door near the corner in the side. The chimney was made of mud and sticks and was so large at the top that much of the light that illuminated the literary path of the students during the weeks; or the spiritual path of the church goer on Sunday, came down the chimney through the smoke. At the end of the room opposite the fire place, was the window which consisted of a row of "seven by nine" glass, occupying the place of a log that had been left out when the house was raised. The window was nine inches high and sixteen feet long, and when a snow ball passing through the air without the aid of human agency, for no boy ever threw a snow ball that hit a window, and a pane of glass was broken its place was supplied by a piece of oiled paper. These were usually supplanted with glass at the commencement of a term; the number of accidents of that mysterious nature that transpired during the term could be determined by the number of greased papers in the window, and as these improvised panes of glass became numerous in the window and were not exceedingly translucent during cold cloudy days, when the doors must be kept shut, the whole school literally groped in darkness. The writing desk was a hewn puncheon placed against the wall, at an angle of forty-five degrees, in front of the window, and a seat at the writing desk was a post of honor enjoyed only by the large scholars, and those who occupied it were envied as bitterly by the balance of the school as the senior class in college is by the freshmen. The cracks between the logs were chinked with pieces of wood and daubed with mud outside and in. The ceiling was made of round poles extending from one side of the room to the other, the ends resting in cracks made large for that purpose in each side. Over the poles mud was spread in copious profusion, which, when dried, formed a ceiling that bid defiance alike to piercing winds of winter, and sorching heat of the summer sun. The roof was made of clap-boards, held to their place by logs laid on top of them, called weight-poles. The seats were made of sasafras poles about six inches in diameter, split in two, the heart side up, and wooden pins or legs in the bottom or oval sides. These were made to suit the comfort of full-grown men, and hence, were so high from the floor, that the aid of the teacher was necessary to place the small scholars on the seat, and when there no little care was required on their part to avoid falling off. The text books used were the Western spelling book, the new testament and for advanced scholars the Old English Reader. The scholars who ciphered used such arithmetics as they could procure, but Dabold's predominated; and when an industrious and studious scholar had reached the "Rule of Three" (now called Proportion) the teacher to avoid an exposition of his ignorance of the mysteries beyond, prudently required a review and the mathematical ardor of the ambitious youth was cooled by being turned back to Notation and compelled to memorize the fine print and foot notes. As there was not a uniformity of books there were no classes except spelling and reading classes, and each student studied arithmetic "on his own hook." The advent of such a man as my friend Houser or Keeran, into the neighborhood at that time, with their sample desks and ink wells, slate blackboards and crayon pensils, terresterial and celestial globes, Spencerian copy-books and a trunk full of eclectic spellers, readers, mental and practical arithmetics, grammars, geographies, histories, steel pens, pointers would have attracted more attention and created more excitement among the pioneers, than did the Rev. Lewis Hickman, lecturing on Millerism, with his illustrated map, as large as a bed blanket, on which were pictures of the great Dragon that John, the Revelator saw, with its seven crowned heads and ten horns; with its glowing mouth and red-hot fangs through which blue, sickening and sulphureous flames seethingly issued; with its serpentine caudal appendage drawing in its train one-third of the stars of heaven. There too, was the fair woman standing on the moon, clothed with the sun and crowned with stars. There, too, was Michael and his angels, chafing for a fight with his dragonship as soon as orders could be obtained from headquarters to open out on the enemy. And last but not least of the hideous things on that chart, was the devil with his cloven foot. There are many here to-day who heard those lectures in the log-cabin school houses, and yet remember that horrid chart, and the blood-curdling harrangue of the Reverend gentleman as he tried to terrify men, women and children into repentance, on the same principle that the bee-keeper scares an out-going swarm of bees into a new hive, by the hideous noise produced by the united efforts of his entire family on tin pans, cow-bells and dinner horns. One could almost hear the approaching echoes of Gabriel's trumpet while looking at that chart and listening to the speaker's terrifying portraiture of the horrors of the "last day." None of the modern improvements and discoveries, to aid in the cause of a practical education were then known in this county. No graded reading books or spellers, no blackboards, steel pens or mathematical frames, no globes or varnished pointers. Then we had pointers, fresh hickories cut from the adjacent thicket, with the jack-knife of the teacher. But they were not used as the ornamented pointers now are, to demonstrate mathematical problems on the blackboard, and trace out the course of rivers and mountains, and the most practical and direct route across the continent, or around the globe, upon an outline map suspended on the wall, but they were applied to the backs of the wayward youth to demonstrate the propriety of searching for the most direct route to obedience. And those pointers were effective, too. Two of the qualifications for teaching that were indispensable then are now entirely obsolete—the applicant for the position of school teacher must then be able to make a goose quill pen, and possess the muscular power to wield a hickory whip. But the educational facilities of this country have changed since then. The old log-cabin school-house has disappeared, and now beautiful structures of frame or brick dot our county thickly over. The sasafras benches have given place to easy and convenient seats and desks, Aparatus by which the intelligent teacher may illustrate the sciences, adorn the school room in abundance. The crack of the hickory over the shoulders of the disodedient pupil is now but seldom heard and Professor Barnes does not now inquire of applicants for license to teach, whether they can whittle a goosequill pen or not.

It is a fact however that some of the most useful and prominent of the citizens of our county, to day, recieved their education in the old log-cabin-school-house, with the meager facilities that I have enumerated. It should be remembered, however, that men, steady, relible men cannot be made from books alone, you might be able to put a dazzling polish on a paper boot, but a moment's walk in the dewey grass would leave you barefooted. A little of the rough-and-tumble of life such as the pioneer experienced is requisite to develop the courage, the moral back bone, the self reliance and industry, the patience and perseverance necessary to usefulness in life. The meetings in the old log-cabin school house were conducted with a zeal and pathos that we do not witness now in the fashionable church. The average congregation then, did not comprise more then twenty five or thirty persons, on ordinary occasions, but their earnestness and zeal would exceed the aggregate zeal of an ordinary congregation of three hundred persons of the present day. There is many a gray-haired and sun-bowned pioneer before me to day, who near a half century ago has assisted in the singing of "Old Hundred" "Lenox Mear" or the long meter doxology in those old time meetings until the very atmosphere around them was filled with such a spirit of goodness, that every one, who inhald it, was made to feel, that it was good for him to be there.

There was more real solid, soul stirring hallelujahs in one of those log-cabin-protracted meetings, on a cold winter night, under the management of some of the pioneer preachers, than Moody and Sankey ever produced, when at the acme of their fame as revivalists. The early preachers have nearly all gone, to their reward. Gabriel Williams, Lewis Hicklin, Henry Kunler, Ladd Thomas, Cyrus Alton and James Hadsell, are numbered with those who have passed through the chilly waters of the mysterious river. Jonathan Thomas, Elder Ward, Jno. McCurdy, and Jas. Cather, who were among the pioneer preachers, are yet with us, and continue their life work in trying to better the condition of those around them by both precept and example.

The pioneer merchants, store keepers we then called them, were N. L. Thomas, of Newville, whom we familiarly called "Uncle Ladd" and Thomas J. Freeman, of Auburn, both men of some consequence in their time, have long since gone to that country from which no traveler returns. But, during their time, they served their day and generation in a landable manner. Great changes in mercantile business have occurred since then, as well as in the educational and religious institutions of the country. Now we find in our midst double front brick stores, carrying a stock of goods worth twenty-five thousand dollars, embracing every article of merchandise that the most fastidious could desire, supplied from the jobbing houses of the great cities that have grown up within a few hours travel from our homes, transported on railroads running in every direction through our county, over which trains of cars are passing almost every hour. These towns, with their mammoth stores, these railroads with their thundering locomotives and apparently living trains of cars, these great cities with numerous wholesale houses, where millions of dollars worth of goods are sold each year, have all been built since the pioneers of this county began the work of subduing the wilderness. These beautiful stores with their large stocks of costly goods were not even dreamed of by the pioneers. The pioneer store in the eastern part of this county, the one kept by Ladd Thomas, occupied a room about fifteen feet square and $200.00 would have purchased every article he had to sell. He made his regular trips to Fort Wayne at stated periods, riding an old black horse familiarly known as "Old Jack" by all the early settlers, and carrying with him his purchases of produce, consisting of deer and coon skins, beeswax and ginseng roots. These he exchanged for such articles as he kept for sale, and freighted Old Jack with his purchases on his return trip. I said Old Jack was familiarly known to the settlers. Uncle Ladd, as he was called, was a Methodist preacher, and in addition to his business as a merchant and his services in the pulpit, he preached the funerals and solemnized the marriages for all the settlers in the east part of the county, and when he went from home to attend to these duties Old Jack was his only mode of conveyance. The old horse seemed to have the ability to determine the difference between a funeral and a wedding, and it is not strange that he had, when we consider the fact that when Uncle Ladd attended a funeral he went alone, but when called to officiate at a wedding the whole family went with him, and Old Jack's burden, like Job's, was grievous to be borne, and like one of olden times, he might have exclaimed: "It is better to go to the house of mourning than to the house of feasting." I have often seen Old Jack, on Sunday mornings, passing my father's cabin home, on his way to a wedding with the whole family, consisting of Uncle Ladd, his wife and two sons, David, who died at early manhood, and Newton, now a prominent lawyer in a western city, all perched upon his back. Pardon this digression, but as the old horse will be remembered by so many persons, he deserves a passing notice. The store keepers in the pioneer days were required to procure a license from the county commissioners before commencing business, and in their applications for the license they were required to enumerate the articles they proposed to sell and state the amount of capital invested in the business. And in compliance with the law, Thomas J. Freeman, the first merchant of Auburn, on March 7th, 1838, applied for a license to sell foreign merchandise and domestic groceries, with a capital of $175.00, and was required to pay for that privilege the sum of $5.00, and his traffic in time pieces was restricted to one dozen for the year. That number of sales would hardly be a paying business for our friend Abright. The opinions of the people have changed greatly since then, for at that time Mr. Freeman was permitted to sell intoxicating liquor without a license, but was not allowed to sell tea, coffee and sugar without a permit. Now the dealer may sell the latter without a license but must pay for the privilege of engaging in the liquor traffic. In the pioneer days there were no boot and shoe stores as now, and the "Boot Up-side Down" establishment of our townsman would have been a curiosity. Then the shoemaker, following the example of the itinerant preacher, went from house to house with his kit of tools and made the shoes for the several families comprising his list of patrons. The ladies had not then acquired the habit of crowding a number four foot into a number three French kid shoe, but the shoes were manufactured to fit the foot and not the eye, and were made of substantial material, impervious to wet and cold. And equipped with a pair of these shoes, the pioneer's wife could walk a mile through the snow without being placed under the doctor's care for weeks following. But these pioneer customs, together with the log-cabin homes, and log school houses, have passed away and now live only in the fond recollections of the few old settlers who survive. The wilderness we then loved for its native grandeur has disappeared, and in its stead the cultivated field with its waving grain, the beautiful homes, and pleasant little towns have sprung up. The winding wagon road, meandering around the swamps and creeks through the woods, can no longer be traced by the "oldest inhabitant." The old Indian trail can no longer be found, but the commodious highways permeating every part of the county furnish a comfortable route for every man to travel upon. The "mail carrier," with his horn and saddle bags, bringing us the news of important events, at the rate of three miles per hour, has been supplanted by the elegantly equipped mail coach, carrying the news of the world, at the rate of sixty miles per hour. And not contented with even that rate of speed, science now supplies us with the telegraph; and later with the telephone, by which we may converse with our friends at a distance of what was in pioneer days a four days' journey. Yes, indeed, great changes have taken place since the pioneer days. Suppose some pioneer, like Rip Van Winkle, had gone to sleep in this county in 1838 or 1840, and had been awakened to-day by the shrill whistle of the railroad locomotive, by which you were drawn here this morning, what strange sights would he see. He would be as ignorant of the things surrounding him as is the little child. The railroad with its long trains of cars; the telegraph with its mysteries; the telephone faithfully conveying a whisper a hundred miles; the audiphone reproducing a lecture or a sermon after the speaker has died and been forgotten, would be mysteries to him. Since then the cooking range and its appurtenances has taken the place of the old trammel, and crane, and skillets, and Dutch ovens. The horseback riders, in their home spun garb, dismounted and transformed into elegantly dressed ladies and gentlemen riding in gilded carriages with upholstered cushions and glittering polish, dazzling the eye as they move in the sunlight. Yes, all has changed since the pioneer days, and we, too, who yet survive, of the early settlers, have changed. I well remember these old men and women here to-day, now with white hairs and trembling and uncertain step, when in the vigor of early manhood and womanhood, with a courage scarcely excelled by the man who braves the cannon's mouth, they left the tender associations of their early lives, and came to this county, then a wilderness, cheerfully and uncomplainingly, enduring its dangers and its privations for a grand and noble purpose. A few of the old pioneers yet remain with us. They are the true heroes of this country—more deserving of adulation—more worthy of laudotory honors than the heroes of the battle-field. To them we owe a debt of gratitude that we can never pay. As they go down to the grave, one by one, we see the land marks of the civilization of this country disappear. The civilization remains for us to enjoy, but the motive power that planted it, is fast receding from our midst. Each year, as we meet, we notice the ranks are being thinned. Here and there we see vacancies, where the year before sat a pioneer. To-day, we will no doubt for the last time, take the hand of some one of this noble band of heroes, and ere another annual reunion shall take place, it may be said of some of these good old people present to-day, "Their life work is done, and they have gone to their reward." My friends, let us remember that we owe a duty to these old pioneers; that to them, to their sacrifices, and patient and unremitting industry, we are indebted for all there is of the blessings of civilization that surrounds us. Let us spare no pains to make the remainder of their paths through life pleasant and enjoyable. Let us imitate their industry and integrity, their virtue and frugality, laboring to make our lives as worthy of imitation by those who follow us when we are gone; and hoping that it may be said of us, truthfully, when our life work has been finished, as it can now be said of the pioneers, that the world has been made better by our having lived in it.

During the last year the shipments of butter were 15,985,289 pounds, and of cheese 136,241,919 pounds; during the preceding year the shipments of butter were 35,637,488 pounds, and cheese 145,679,812 pounds. The falling off in butter exports was nearly one-half.

The Madison Courier states the case and argument tersely and forcibly. It says: "Sunday delivery of mails is the refinement of snobbery and injustice. In the first place those who want their letters on that day should go for them, and secondly the carriers ought to have their rest. Furthermore, there is too much money lavished on city mail facilities already. The towns and the country deserve better service and the city less."

Advices from the great grain-growing centers of the Northwest are highly encouraging in regard to the coming harvest. The farmers are in the best of spirits, and the apprehension that the crops would be a failure on account of the wet and backward spring has been succeeded by a feeling of confidence. The prospect of a bountiful harvest has also had its effect upon country trade and travel, and the mercantile and other interests are already giving indications of renewed life and activity.

The House Committee on Judiciary has authorized Representative Humphrey, of Wisconsin, to report a bill to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy. Creditors in cases of involuntary bankruptcy shall give security before instituting action, and if the suit be decided in favor of the alleged bankrupt damages shall be recoverable. In case of fraud any person may be adjudged bankrupt; but for failure to pay within a limited time, or dissolve attachment, farmers shall not be so adjudged.

The musical question in the United Presbyterian Church is likely to prove difficult of settlement. The first split has already occurred in Canada. The Presbytery of Toronto has refused to sanction the constitution of the anti-organists, who recently seceded from Cooke's Presbyterian Church, in that city. This body, at present worshiping in a hall in Toronto, separated from the parent church on account of the objections of its members to hymns and instrumental music. The constitution contained a clause prohibiting the discussion of the church and organ question in the congregation.

Is Henry Ward Beecher a prophet, or only a frightened hobby-rider? In his morning sermon Sunday he said: "If the rich men are wise, they will lay aside at once this devilish idea that they can swell before the community in vast array and not attach themselves to the humblest of the community. If the rich men by and by are overwhelmed and sacked, it will be their own fault. There is a storm in the sky, and if by and by there should come revolution and massacre and misrule, it will be because the spirit of the gospel has been set at naught by the men who had the power in their own hands."

Mr. Richard Parsons says to a Washington correspondent in regard to the means of Mrs. Garfield: "She has $3000,000 in Government bonds, the result of the subscription. Then, her husband's life was insured for $50,000, which she promptly received. She also was paid the salary of the President for the unoccupied first year, amounting to about $20,000. Then add to it about $30,000, the total value of Garfield's estate. That was the total amount, after all the abuse that was received, that he was able to accumulate in a life of fifty years. That makes $400,000, does it not? I suppose that the income from this total of more than $400,000 will be perhaps $16,000 a year. She is also put on the pension list at $5,000 a year. So she is comfortable, and can raise her children well."

THE STATE.

By the death of an aunt in Paris, France, Mr. Joseph Pierard, of New Albany, and his sister, Mrs. John Moutsey, of Franklin township, have fallen heir to $50,000, which they will receive within a few weeks.

Nicholas Thalheimer has refiled his suit against the city of Connersville for $5,000 damages for the death of his child, who was killed in a street accident last fall. The suit was dismissed at the last term of court on account of a defect in the complaint.

Steve Meyer, of Lawrenceburg, undertook to get rid of some troublesome pigeons with his shot gun. The shot scattered, and his daughter, coming in range just as he pulled the trigger, received a number in her side and breast. Her injuries are painful but not mortal.

Late Thursday night Marshal Edward, of New Albany, waylaid and made a murderous assault with a butcher knife on David Kelly, inflicting three severe and dangerous wounds. Edwards was arrested and held to answer for assault with intent to murder.

The population of South Bend in 1880, according to the census, was 13,279. That year the vote was 2.504. At the city election last month the vote was 3,511. This indicates a population, as compared with the vote and population in 1880, of 18,619, and a very flattering growth.

Dr. Motogomery's (the colored abortionist) third trial has just ended at Elkhart. He received three years in the penitentiary, and is fined $50. His first sentence was eight years. It was throught his instrumentality that Alice Titus, a young woman eighteen years of age, came to her death.

Charlie Harden, whose home is in Brown county near the "weed patch," is only four years old, yet can give the number of states and territories, name their capitals, give the number of counties and townships in each, the names of the principal cities in the world, and other feats of memory equally surprising.

Mrs. Ann Porter, who resides in Etna township, Kosciusko county, wrapped $840 in a handkerchief, then wrapped the handkerchief in a skirt and placed it in a drawer of her bureau. The money has disappeared. Several persons are suspected of the theft, and detectives have been employed to ferret out the guilty.

Samuel Meade, alias Sam Robertson, who recently got out of a case of forgery, was before Justice Huckeby at New Albany, on Saturday, on the charge of attempting an outrage on the little seven-year-old-daughter of Mr. George Shrader, and was held to bail in the sum of $500 to answer in the circuit court. In default he was committed.

The famous cheese case of Martin Murphy vs. Elisha Carr, brought from Clark county and which has been in the courts for four years, has been decided in the Floyd circuit court by special Judge Wolfe in favor of Carr. Murphy brought suit to recover $2,000 due for milk furnished Carr's cheese factory at Charleston. The defendant, on two trials lasting eight days each, found that the milk furnished was full of blood, hair, dirt and filth of all kinds, since which proof the sale of the cheese in that section has largely decreased. The cost in the case against Murphy will amount to about $2,000.

Another Well Developed Ear.

Texas Siftings.

Kosciusko Murphy, who is remarkable for his large, generous ear, has had a falling out with Miss Esmerelda Longcoffin, an Austin belle towards whom he had been suspected of entertaining matrimonial intentions. Somebody asked him, the other day, why he and Miss Longcoffin were not out buggy riding as much as usual, to which Kosciusko replied that he did not propose to pay buggy hire for any woman who called him a donkey.

"I can't believe that Miss Longcoffin would call any gentleman a donkey," was the reply.

"Well, she didn't come right out and say I was a donkey, but she might just as well have said so. She hinted that much."

"What did she say?"

"We were out riding, and it looked very much like rain, and I said it was going to rain on us, as I felt a rain drop on my ear, and what do you suppose she said?"

"I have no idea."

"Well," she said, "that rain you felt on your ear may be two or three miles off."

A Manly Religion.

Beecher's Sunday Sermon

Don't crawl before the dignitaries of heaven. I never crawl on my belly before God; I never say I am so filthy and sinful. I am not so. We are all sinners, but not criminals. I have no remorse because I do not love God enough. I don't love anybody as I ought. God is not a crabbed judge to say when he has heard a confession, "Open the prison door and shove him in." I go before God as a nobleman and say, "Nevertheless, I am Thy son." He has the best clothes brought out and the ring put on my finger. The true theory of life is to rejoice always.

Boom for Sorghum Cane.

The committee appointed by the National academy of sciences to investigate and report on the sorghum sugar industry, especially in reference to the methods employed and the results obtained in experiments made by Prof. Colliar during the past three or four years at the department of agriculture, have made a report. It approves the work done by the department and Prof. C., and declares sorghum to be a sugar-producing plant next to the sugar cane of Louisiana and the tropics; that it is so in actual sugar contents, and that it has a continental spread of variability and adaptation to various soils and climates of the United States.

The smallest baby in the world was recently born in a mining camp at Candelaria, Nev. The father is a miner and weighs 190 pounds the mother is a stout, healthy woman, weighing perhaps 160 pounds. The child is a male and perfectly formed as any human being can be, but upon its birth it only weighed eight ounces. Its face is about the size of a horse chestnut, and a ring worn on the little finger of its mother was easily slipped over its foot nearly up to the knee. In the opinion of the attending physician the child will live and prosper in good health, notwithstanding its diminutive proportions. The midget is so small that three of its size could play hide-and-seek in a cigar box.

Wanted to Pool.

Wall Street News.

A New Yorker, who had business in one of the mountain villages last week, was followed to the depot, when ready to take the train, by a native, who continually inquired:

"Are you an undertaker?"

"Oh, no."

"Didn't know but you was an undertaker looking for an opening here, and I'd like to pool with you. I own the graveyard here, and we could run the business to suit ourselves. Are you a doctor?"

"No."

"Didn't know but you was. I've got the best plat in town for a drug store, and I'd furnish the medicines and you do the doctoring, and we'd pool. Maybe you are a lawyer?"

"No, my friend."

"I thought if you was we could fix it all right, one of my brothers being the justice of the peace and the other the constable. I'd be the silent partner and sue every man in town to make business. Like enough you are a preacher."

"Wrong again."

"Wrong, I'm sorry. I've got a mortgag on the best church building here, and if you was only the right kind of a preacher we'd pool in, and in less'n three months we'd have the dead wood on every soul worth saving.

FROM WASHINGTON.

The Elections Committee will consider the case of Samuel Lee (Republican) against J. T. Richardson, the sitting Democratic member from the First South Carolina District to-morrow. Lee's case is said to be an exceedingly strong one, and the probabilities are that Richardson will be unseated.

Lowe, of Alabama, Greenbacker, recently seated in place of ex-Confederate General Wheeler, works with the Republicans, and will probably be re-elected by their aid. He says he hopes Wheeler will be a candidate against him again.

General Scoville, author of the temperance plank in the Ohio platform, is here. He says the Republicans will carry Ohio in spite of the recent unfavorable predictions.

Special Agent Chamberlain, of the Treasury Department, reports that the disturbed condition of the sugar trade is due to the artificial coloration of imported sugars, by which high grades are imported at a low tariff, and being refined, are exported with a large drawback to importers and refiners. The system is driving honest operators out of the business.

The House adopted the amendment to the Appropriation bill of equalizing the salaries of the Senate and House employes. The salaries of the Senate employes are about 20 per cent higher than those of the House, and many efforts have been made by the House to equalize by reducing the Senate salaries, but the Senate always resisted. McCold, of Iowa, argued for an increase of the House employes' salaries, saying they are maimed soldiers. Others favored making a strong fight to reduce the Senate employes even if it causes a long deadlock over the bill.

It is understood that Trescott will refuse to testify regarding his instructions without the consent of the State Department and the President. Blaine's enemies have been attacking him over the request made for $90,000 for secret service abroad, supposing that there was some dark business about the Peruvian affairs. It now turns out that the money was asked by Mr. Frelinghuysen for the purpose of watching American interests in the Panama Canal scheme.

William McCauge, L. Pease, Thomas Robinson, Mr. and Mrs. Bemis, Mr. and Mrs. Collins, and Mr. and Mrs. Watson, were regeistered in Paris yesterday.

At the conclusion of Cononel Ingersoll's argument in the Star Route trials this morning, Judge Wylie decided that the evidence offered by Mr. MacVeagh was not admissible at this stage of the trial. When he was satisfied from the evidence of the existence of a conspiracy, he would allow this testimony to be introduced. Judge W. concluded by saying that a person could only convict himself by confession, and could not even do that until the crime was first made out.

Mr. Merrick remarked that of course this decision would compel him to postpone the introduction of the testimony he had proposed, and Mr. MacVeagh was then excused.

The committees having in charge Representative Voorhis' bill, which provides for the collection of a tax of 50 cents on each emigrant who arrives in this country by vessel, will report it favorably. The money collected is to be paid into the United States Treasury to constitute a fund to be used under the direction of the Secretary, to defray expenses regulating immigration, for the use of emigrants, for the relief of such as are in distress, and for the return to the countries from whence they came of criminals, lunatics and paupers.

Guiteau has given up hope of the law, but hopes for Presidential clemency. He says he had no confidence in Reed's last moves, and told him he wouldn't succeed. He spends much time in reading the Bible, and takes but little exercise, saying he is getting lazy.

Mr. Helper is much troubled over the committee's unfavorable report on his bill for a commission to inquire into the practicability of a railroad to South America. He says the committee gave him no opportunity to explain his project, and treated him unjustly.

The Post Office Committee will probably report in favor of a postal card with a flexible flap, to conceal the message, to take the place of the present card.

"Johnny" Davenport is said to be discouraged about the authorship of the forged Morey Chinese cheap-labor letter. He has not been as successful as he hoped in solving the mystery.

Secretary Folger has as yet reached no conclusion regarding Doyle's case. Doyle's friends claim that his bonds were not counterfeit, but were printed from the genuine plate, and agree to tell how it was obtained and all about it if he is released.

Utah Cannon is still here waiting, unable to get his salary for the time served or his mileage. A report will be made from the committee to-day in favor of paying him off and letting him go.

It is understood that Secretary Folger has determined upon a change in the office of Superintendent of Engraving and Printing.

A number of new names have been suggested for Tariff Commissioners in place of Messrs. Wheeler and Phelps, but it is probable that nothing will be done until the Senate acts on those who stick.

Mr. Robinson's proposition for a delivery of the mail Sundays is not received with much favor at the department. The carriers are hard-worked, and porly paid now.

The Pacific railroads are making an effort to prevent the passage in the House of the bill which passed the Senate Friday, compelling the payment of State taxes on lands granted to the roads. They have heretofore only obtained patents for their lands when the bargain is made to sell them to settlers, thus avoiding the payment of millions of dollars of taxes. The bill compels the payment on all lands granted them, whether there is a prospect of sale or not.

The decision of the Pension Commissioner against the employment of female clerks among the thousand or more new ones to be employed is creating much complaint. Female clerks have been found in many cases to be quite as useful as the other sex and more worthy.

Guiteau is getting very anxious to communicate with the President, who, he believes, will interfere in his behalf. He offered the guard $50 to get a letter to the President but was refused.

Experts who have examined the plate furnished by Doyle's friends to the Treasury Department, are unable to determine whether it is a counterfeit or not. A grand pow-wow will be held over it soon by three experts, and a final decision reached.

The Senate amendment to the Army bill, fixing the age of retirement at 64, passed the House, 101 to 75, most of the Democrats voting in favor of it. Their object in favoring the extension of the time to 64 is to keep out Sheridan, whom they recognize as a more active Republican than Sherman, and hope by the time he gets in to be able to reduce the time to 62 years, so as to give Sheridan as little service as possible as chief of the army.

A bill was offered in the House today by Mr. Beach, of New York, permitting parties to dig for treasure on the Government ground at West Point. He does this at the request of three of his constituents, old residents in that vicinity, who believe that Captain Kidd's buried treasures rest within the Government grounds at West Point. The Commandant at West Point is willing to permit the men to dig if they desire, but Secretary Lincoln says if they should find anything, it would revert to the Government. It is hardly probable the bill will ever see daylight, as it is now buried under about 5,000 others.

Guiteau at his last interview with Reed, exacted a promise that he (Reed) would call on the President and urge a commutation of his sentence. He instructed Reed to shake his fist in the President's face and demand protection for him as a God's man, who saved the country and made Arthur President. Reed's last appeal for Guiteau has been placed in the hands of Justice Bradley, of the United States Supreme Court. It is practically the same as that made before Justice Gray and refused by him. There is no probability that a writ of habeas corpus will be granted.

The Boss Milkmaid From Coulson Bottom.

Helena (Mont.) Herald.

A Yellowstone dairy hand struck on his employer and quit work on the difference of $10 a month wages. Yesterday he rolled in through the bottomless mud on the westward-coming coach, and to-day was looking about town and inquiring the nearest cut to the Prickly Pear milk ranch.

"I'm the boss milkmaid of Coulson Bottom, I am," he explained to a crowd gathered about the foot of Broadway enjoying an after April shower sunbath.

"What's that I hear?" put in a corner listener, whose curiosity was touched by the rather queer remark.

I'm just what I claim to be, you bet your squeezers," replied the stranger, putting his muscular paws through what was taken for an exercise motion; "I kin strip more milk out of a cow in less time than any 'udder' man in these or any other parts, and don't any of you make the mistake to say I can't."

An idler suggested that he had milked cows to some extent himself when a youngster.

"Likely enough, but you don't 'pear to me to be a man much in practice now. Down at Coulson I handled fifty cows a day which went eight quarts to the head to the milking, and sold to customers 1,200 quarts every night and morning."

"Twelve hundred quarts of milk out of fifty cows? That strikes me as about twenty-four quarts to the cow," remarked one of the crowd.

"O, I'm no liar," retorted the stranger; "milk from the cow and milk from the can ain't always the same article, if you hear me talk. Down along the railroad grade it's one part of one thing and two parts of another, and the boss and the Scandenvas and the Yellowstone River all know it."

"That's a pretty thin story, stranger."

"Think so, do you? Well, it isn't near as thin as the milk that old reprobate I worked for at Coulson furnished the railroaders. He gets twenty cents for water for every ten cents he gets for milk. And the old fraud wanted me to work for $30 when I asked for $40, and I skipped the ranch and am up here for a new engagement."

The stranger stepped out toward the valley, repeating over again his boast of being "the best milkmaid of Coulson Bottom."

Behind the Veil.

From David Swing

Great and infinite in the beginning, the Creator must be equally wonderful in the end—that is, in that strange "Omega" beyond the tomb. Out of that cloud which surrounds the origin of our race there issued at last that order and peace we now call humanity. Our passing world sails like a ship at noon in a sunlit sea. It has journeyed away from its primeval clouds. Passing into the shadow of death man will emerge again, because progress is the most evident of all the processes of the Creator. The death and annihilation of man—the noblest of all created things—the death of this brilliant form of life at all ages, from a month or a year to three score and ten, the sweeping away of all the race at the age of thirty-five would indicate that the progress of man is to be resumed in some other scene than this. The immensity of the universe tells us how possible is another home for us all; and the millions and millions of years which enter into the scheme of the suns and planets remind us that man's stay on earth is too brief to be the all of life allotted to one whose Father fills eternity. It would seem that God would rather have his children in life than in death, would rather see their joy in paradise than their dust in a grave. Yes, He is the first and the last; but the last part is greater and more enduring than the first.

There falls upon the house a sudden gloom,
A shadow on those features fair and thin,
And softly from the hush'd and darkened room
Two angels issue, where but one goes in.

"Behind mountains," "overdark seas," "in the awful beyond," "behind the veil," "across the dark valley"—these are all terms which describe to us the journey we are all to make, but in the years around the feet there is plenty of sunshine, that of Christ and of all righteousness and charity, and as for all else God, the Author of the beginning, is the loving and wise Author of the end.

The Miracle of Nature.

Harper's Bazar

The luxury of a thread-and-needll tree! Wro can estimate the comfor of such helpfulness at one's very door? Fancy the delight of matron or maiden dwelling under such overshadowing!

Odd as it may seem to us, there is upon Mexican plains just such a forest growth. Imagine a "sewing bee" gathered under such fair foliage! No need of spools forever rolling hitl er and thither; no call for dainty reels, compactly wound with snowy thread, or purchase of "Milward's best." Is there a seam ready for busy fingers, or an appealing rent, just step outside the door of the much-favored Mexican house-mother, lay your hand upon a slender thorn-needle pushing itself persuasively from the tip of a rich dark green leaf, draw it carefully from its delicate sheath, slowly unwinding with your hand the thread, a strong, well-rounded fibre, already attached to the needle, and oh! so tenderly folded away by generous Mother Nature as to hold within itself possibilities of a long stretch of the cord.

"Travelers are enthusiastic over the resources of the maguey-tree; and of its beauty no less, telling us of "clustering pyramids of flowers towering above dark coronals of leaves."

The roots, well prepared, are a most savory dish; with its leaves may be made a "thatching fit for a queen," and no prettier sight can be met than the cottage of Mexican peasants so exquisitly crowned. The rich leaves afford material for paper, and from the juice is distilled a favorite beverage. From its heavier fibres the natives manufacture strong cords and coarse, strong cloth. No wonder the maguey-tree of tropical climes has attained a world-wide fame.

What Any Hoss Could Do.

Detroit Free Press.

At the Union depot the other day, an old man who had borrowed a match, then a chew of tobacco, then a postage stamp, and lastly besought the loan of a key to open his old satchel, came back the first time and said to the stranger he had most annoyed:

"My friend, can you tell me how many times the human heart beats per minute?"

"No, sir!"

"Can you tell me who first discovered the circulation of the blood?"

"No, sir!"

"Do you know whether the pulse should beat seventy or seven hundred times a minute?"

"No, I don't! All I know about the human system is the fact that if you bother me two seconds longer I shall exert a pessure of 5,000 pounds in the endeavor to raise you about six feet from the floor!"

"Just so—just so," growled the old man as he sidled off; "but don't try to pass that off on me for physical science. That's nothing but what any hoss could do!"

The Parisians Boycott Mrs. Mackay

[London World.

You may remember that recently Mrs. Mackay, the wife of the Bonanza King, incurred the wrath of the petticoated gazetteer of high life in the Figaio by refusing to invite her to her fetes. The gazetteer in question thereupon demolished Mrs. Mackay in the Figaro, turned up her nose at her vulgar manners, her flashy dresses, her ridiculously large diamonds, and finally declared that Mrs. Mackay could never aspire to elegance or chic. Thereupon Mrs. Mackay proclaimed that she did not wish to make any new acquaintances, that she had enough of people around her who were attracted by her nuggets, and that, for the guidance of suitors, she wished to have it known that she meant to give her daughter no dowry. Last Tuesday Mrs. Mackay gave a fancy dress ball, at which there were hardly three Parisians present. The manifesto had its effect. The consequence was that the swarm of American girls, each more eccentric, more elegant and more shrill-voiced than the other, did not amuse themselves so much as in the old days, when Mrs. Mackay did not put on airs.

Mr. Holden, the successor of Lord Frederick Cavendish in the House of Commons, began business as bookkeeper in a Yorkshire worsted spinning mill. He afterwards became a local preacher among the Wesleyans, but though prominent was never popular, being "strongly Puritanic, often bitter, and always stern." He is now a rich and prosperous wollen manufacturer.

Bishop Foss (Methodist) is one of the finest specimens of physical manhood in America. Tall, broad-shouldered, deep-chested, he has a complexion as fair as a woman's and a blue eye as clear as can be found in the mountains or on the prairies. He has always believed that no honest man can have too much gospel, roast-beef, conscience and air, and has by his personal life proved the soundness of his theories.

A Nation of Handsome People.

An American lady, who has spent some time in Hungary, writes enthusiastically about the beauty of the people. The men are simply gorgeous creatures—the handsomest in the world. The first of them she saw, the Captain of a Danube steamer, was "a very god in physique," and she soon found that he was only a fair specimen of the race. These grand fellows dress with taste magnificence. In describing one of them who visited her, she says: "He came in a robe as splendid as the robes in an Eastern tale. He wore the costliest of velvets, the richest of satins, and the rarest of furs. He wore a girdle of precious stones, and his superb mantle was fastened across his breast by large rosettes composed of jewels. I am willing to confess that I was impressed. Never have I seen a man so splendidly arrayed and so worthy of it. You can fancy how imposing a company of these nobles are on a state occasion. I attended a requiem mass at which the nobles were all present in this magnificence, and they were simply dazzling. Costly jewels are sometimes worn at the knee or adorn the tops of the high boots, which are always worn outside of the trowsers." The women are pronounced nearly a match to the men.

Grand Public Parade at Kendallville

TWENTY-TWO ELEPHANTS IN LINE—THE MAGNIFICENT PAGEANTS OF "LALLA ROOKH" AND "CLEOPATRA"—JUBILEE SINGERS—FOUR HUNDRED GAILY CAPARISONED HORSES—A MILE OF CHARIOTS, TABLEAU CARS, CAGES, ETC.

On Friday, June 23d. between the hours of 9 and 10 o'clock in the forenoon, Adam Forepaugh's Great Railroad Show will appear upon the streets of Kendallville in processional order. Our exchanges from the places where the establishment has exhibited, assert that in extent and magnificance this display exceeds all spectacular or show parades ever made by any exhibition in the United States.

The procession is led by the beautiful pageant illustrating the departure of Lalla Rookh from Delhi. The lovely princess, who is personified by the handsomest woman in America, and for whose services in this pagent Mr. Forepaugh pays the sum of is seen seated in a genuine East Indian Howdah, upon the back of a kingly elephant. Maids of honor, servitors, and all the pomp and wealth of an Eastern monarch's court, surround her.

Another most attractive and novel feature of the parade is the presentation, for the first time in America, of the fascinating Egyptian spectacle, "Cleopatra Journeying to Meet Mark Antony." The famous and beautiful queen is personated, seated in a magnificant barge ablaze with gold, and all the surroundings are in keeping with the account given by the most reliable historians of this remarkable regal journey. Then follow

TWENTY-TWO HUGE ELEPHANTS,

attached to chariots ablaze with gold and glitter; two martial bands enliven the occasion; the "Grand Bashaw," with his retinue of slaves, cupbearers, sultanas, etc., is represented, riding upon white camels and black dromedaries; upon a colossal chariot, designated as the "Car of India," a monster living lion is placed, and by his side sits a youthful maiden, with her hand resting on the head of the savage brute. A monster cage with glass sides and ends, is filled with anacondas and pythons, and in the midst of this wiggling mess of serpents the spectators behold an East Indian Snake Charmer dallying with the shining, slimy monsters.

TEN CEYLON ELEPHANTS

draw another chariot, followed by the "Car of the Seasons" and the "Chariot of Olympus," which is embellished with representations of the fates, furies, graces, nymphs, gods, heroes and men. Next the Leo De Westes' Hanovarian Stud of twenty-two performing stallions and ponies in elegant and elaborate trappings, followed by

are to be seen at intervals. A mammoth steam orchestra mingles its shrill notes with those of the bands, and at intervals are to be seen mardigras masqueraders in fanciful and mirth-provoking costumes.

An instructive as well as humorous feature of the pageant is the appearance of a real slave-singing band of old-time old plantation darkies. All were formerly slaves, not one of them has ever been away from the south, and, seated upon cotton bales, in a genuine southern mule team, this band of freedmen sing, as the procession moves, the camp-meeting melodies and songs of the slave cabins, as was customary in slavery days.

THREE GREAT BANDS OF MUSIC

are in position along the line of the cavalcade; droves of camels, diminutive ponies, ornate tableau cars, and nearly a mile of statuary-adorned and beautifully-embellished animal cages, all drawn by hundreds of plumed steeds, drivers uniformed, constitute some of the attractive features of this princely pageant. Our readers should reach Kendallville by nine o'clock in the forenoon, in order to behold this free-for-all holiday parade.

Mr Fountain, of Keyser township, has a two-year old short horn bull, that weighs seventeen hundred pounds. It was imported from Illinois. Mr. Fountain is justly proud of his success in raising fine stock.

—We have an interesting letter from Josiah Shull, which we will publish next week. We hope our readers and correspondents will be patient, and we will try and get even soon.

What Shall it be?

The COURIER has always taken the ground that the people of DeKalb county are too intelligent and too well bred, to tolerate, much less to enjoy personal articles of any kind. We have always advocated decency and decorum in all that relates to our intercourse with our fellow editors. But from numerous articles that have appeared in some of the other papers published in the county, we are led to infer that our course has not been appreciated by the other members of the press. In fact they seem to take special pains to pander to the lowest instincts of the least worthy of their readers. So to ascertain whether we are right in our judgment as to the tastes of these gentlemen, we ask the above question: What shall it be? Shall this campaign be a contest of vituperation and personal slush, or a fair and manly fight for the principles of party? Shall it be Chipmuck Cal, Schoolmaster Jim, Whisky Joe, Sunflower Charley and Daffodil Garrison, or shall we have a contest in which decency and a manly self respect, coupled with a respect for the opinions and feelings of our opponents, shall be at least an element in the struggle? We believe that an editor who cannot rise to a level with the people who patronize him is unfit to conduct a newspaper. He either lacks the ability and courage to do otherwise, or his instincts are too low to be of any service to society as it is at present constituted. In either case the only gracious thing he can do is to take himself out of a position in which the defects in his character, whether natural or acquired, are too glaringly conspicuous.

* * *

ALL our exchanges in the northern part of the state are speaking of the candidacy of J. W. Holcombe, of Valparaiso, for State Superintendent of Public Instruction. We are slightly acquainted with Mr. Holcombe, and believe him to be a man well qualified to fill this difficult position. He has had a great deal of experience in the work, as he was Mr. Smart's secretary during a portion of the time Mr. S. was superintendent, and is therefore well posted in the duties of the office.

Everybody's Going to Kendallville!

TO SEE THE HANDSOMEST WOMAN IN THE WORLD, AND 22 PERFORMING ELEPHANTS, 1,000 WILD BEASTS, COLOSSAL CIRCUS IN TWO RINGS, AND GRAND FREE PROCESSION OF INDUSTRY, AT KENDALLVILLE.

The Great Forepaugh Show exhibits at Kendallville.
FRIDAY JUNE 23rd.

In addition to a grandly great circus in two great rings, and a monster menagerie of 1,000 wild beasts, all transported by four great rail way trains, there is to be a great, grand, free procession on the day Forepaugh exhibits there. Every town in this county will be represented in this huge, highway holiday parade. In addition to this, the great pageants of "Cleopatra" and the "Lalla Rookh" will be presented in the show parade. This spectacle is described as being the most gorgeour ever seen upon the streets of an American city. The loveliest lady in the land has been secured to personify the beautiful Eastern Princess, Lalla Rookh, whom poets describe as "more beautiful than any of those heroines whose names and loves embellish the songs of Persia and Hindostan; more perfect than the divinest images of the House of Azor." In this gorgeous glittering, oriental pageant, Lalla Rookh is seen reclining in her sumptuous howdah, borne aloft upon the back of a ponderous and kingly elephant, the largest on this continent whose embroidered velvet trappings touch the ground; a fair young female slave sits fanning the Princess through the rose-colored veils, with feathers of argus-pheasant's wings, and the lovely troupe of Tartarian and Cashmerean maids of honor ride upon each side of the Princess upon small Arabian horses. Rajahs and Mogul Lords follow, accompained by Cavaliers in costly armor, mounted upon

"Steeds with their housings of rich silver spun;
Their chains and poitrels glittering in the sun;
And Camels, tufted o'er with Yemen's shells,
Shaking in every breeze their light-toned bells."

In keeping with the author of Lalla Rookh's description of this grand, glittering, lavish and luxurious spectacle, are seen the Guards of the Great Kedar Kahn, with their silver battle-axes and maces of gold, followed by the Great Nazir, or Chamberlain of the Harem, and the retinue of the Court of Delhi, mounted upon elephants, camels and Arabian horses decorated in oriental trappings, and bearing aloft the royal standards,—the entire scene recalling to the beholder the glories and the grandeur of the distant Indies; the whole forming the most magnificent, picturesque and realistic oriental spectacle ever presented in the New World, requiring the expenditure of a hundred thousand dollars in its preparation, eclipsing all displays of pageantry ever produced by any exhibition, and in itself worth miles of travel to behold. Remember, this superb spectacle is presented daily, between the hours of 9 and 10 a. m. and is a great, grand, gorgeous, free public festival for all to look at and admire.

Notice to Bridge Builders.

Notice is hereby given, that the Board of Commissioners of DeKalb county, Indiana, will, on

THURSDAY, JULY 27, 1882,

at 10 o'clock a. m., let to the lowest and best responsible bidder the building of a Howe Truss Bridge, about one-half mile north of the village of St. Joe; said bridge to be forty-five (45) feet long, and to be built on pile abutments.

Also on the same day at 2 o'clock p. m. said Board of Commissioners will let to the lowest and best responsible bidder the construction of a Howe Truss Bridge one and a half miles east of the town of Butler; said bridge to be fifty-five (55) feet in length and placed upon pile abutments.

Said lettings will take place at the site of the proposed work. Plans and specifications can be seen at the auditor's office. Successful bidders will be required to file a bond to the acceptance of the Board for the faithful performance of the contract. The right to reject any or all bids is reserved.

By order of the Board.
Attest: ALBERT ROBBINS, Auditor.

Stallions for Sale.

Pursuant to an order of the DeKalb circuit court, as administrator of the estate of George Clark, deceased, I will at Auburn, DeKalb county, Indiana, on or after Wednesday, July [illegible], 1882, offer to sell at private sale four valuable stallions, described below, with their bridles, halters, sulkies, blankets, etc., and also the stallion barn, situated in the rear of Allen's livery stable, being a part of the personal estate of said decedent.

TERMS: No bid received for less than the appraised value. One-third of the purchase money to be cash in hand, and balance at one year, with interest secured by note with personal or real estate security, waiving valuation laws and payable at First National Bank of Auburn, Indiana. Said stallions are,

First.—"Hildare," a beautiful dapple gray, six years old, weight 1,800 pounds, and is a full blooded, imported Norman. Was imported by Dunham, the celebrated importer of horses, of Dupage county, Illinois.

Second.—"Prince," a blood bay, imported Canadian Norman, eight years old, weight 1,500 pounds.

Third.—"Frank," a bay Mambrino, seven years old, weight 1,250 pounds, and is a fine roadster.

Fourth.—"Jim," a half blooded gray Norman, nine years old, weight 1,800 pounds, and has the finest herd of colts of any horse in northern Indiana.

Pedigrees can be furnished if desired. All these horses are tractable, sound in every particular, and sure foal getters.

The administrator will take pleasure in showing stock of any and all of the horses, and answer by mail or otherwise all inquiries about them. All are making the season and have all the business they can do. They can be seen at Auburn, after July 6th, next. Private offers are respectfully asked, and the confidence of such will be kept. The right to reject any or all bids is reserved.

—We hear that Peter Stutz will sever his connection with the Junction saloon, and open up a like business in Fort Wayne.

—Waterloo turns out a handsome ice wagon. Several citizens of this place patronize the company at that village.

—John Eckenberger has moved from the county farm to town. John had to work "over the hill" and in the city he does not.

—Dode Lanning is now stationed behind the counter of Mo & Mike's popular store. Dode is a good boy around a store.

—We doubt somewhat whether Job ever had more patience than the average juvenile who holds a fish pole over the banks of Cedar creek.

—Miss Eliza Stahl is teaching a successful term of school at Feagler's corners. She has established good a reputation as a teacher.

—The Auburn and Hogue bands joined together, Tuesday evening, and "dished out" more music than could be put in a collar box.

—John Hartman has moved to town and engaged in teaming. Also Mr. Smith, of Corunna, is doing a like business and resides here.

—The criminal docket for the next term of court will be large, judging from the unlawful transactions that have occurred recently.

—The Island Park Assembly, at Rome City, will open June 30, and close July 21. Arrangements have been made to make it pleasant for visitors.

—A large number of Germans were surrounding a sick cow belonging to Peters, in the south end, last Sunday evening. Obituary next week.

MARRIED.—By Rev. W. L. Meese, at his residence in this place, June 15, 1882, Mr. Thomas C. Stafford to Miss Celia Miller, both of Jackson township.

—In this issue the administrator of Geo. Clark's estate offers his stallions for sale. They are fine horses and will undoubtedly bring a good price.

—Will some fashion writer inform us what use the young ladies make of so many newspapers? Its impossible for us to supply the demand.

—E. P. Dickinson, M. W. Johnson and Herman Boozer, of Waterloo, were in town Sunday evening. Yes, the Auburn girls are rather good looking.

—With corn at seventy-five cents, and very difficult to find at that price, noone but a bloated bond-holder can indulge in the luxury of a corn dodger.

—A petition was circulated Tuesday asking for the pardon of Dr. Stough, of Waterloo, from the county jail. A large number of our citizens signed the paper.

—In the future we hope George, the teamster, will not get so infatuated over one evening's spark, as to leave the gate open and make a stock yard out of a town lot.

—We notice that an extra acreage of potatoes have been planted this year. They will be about 15 cents a bushel next fall, and our poor folks can make up for lost time.

—Through communication from T. C. Mays, esq., we learn that the people at Hot Springs are enjoying all kinds of vegetables. We wish Tom. would "telegraph" us a watermelon.

—Late advices from Russell Kansas, represent our friend Simon McEnterfer, and family as in a prosperous condition. Simon don't let the grass grow under his feet wherever he is.

—Bill Stahr put on his broad cloth and prepared to take in the convention at Fort Wayne, Saturday last. Sorry for Bill, and the convention, too, that the train wouldn't wait on him.

—Mental depression and all nervous diseases of whatever nature or cause, in old or young, male or female, cured by Dr. E. C. West's Nerve and Brain Treatment. Sold at F. E. Davenports.

—Every town in the county has a base ball club except Auburn. Even the Junction boys show a spirit of life and vim in the national game, and have a nine that's not to be "sneezed at"

—Miss Emma Stahl goes this week to spend a part of the summer with friends in Ashland Ohio. The COURIER joins her many friends in wishing her a pleasant visit and a safe return.

—The pictures in last week's Republican, the "handwork" of Bob McDougall, were taken from photographs of himself, and not wanting the public in general to be aware of the fact he left off the limbs.

—The ladies' social of the Presbyterian church, will be entertained in the basement of their church on next Wednesday afternoon. Strawberries, ice cream and cake. Mite 25 cents. Everybody invited. Secretary.

—The water tank, in rear of the cemetery, which the Wabash put so much work on last summer, is in a dilapidated condition. We are told, however, that another force of men will soon resume work again.

—Liberty-pole Jim will take a load to Kendallville to-morrow, the round trip costing but fifty cents. He will drive six plumed horses, and use the collateral he takes in measuring mouths with Forepaugh's giant.

—Little Walter Baker, at the Junction, fell last week and broke his arm again. This is twice that it has been broken in the space of three weeks, and this last misfortune will probably necitate the amputation of the limb.

—McDougall evidently has an itching for fame. He would like to be the Nast of the Republican. But his last job of engraving is too much like his last job of teaching, a label being needed in each case to explain just what the thing was.

—We are crowded for space this week again on account of matter from the doings of the old settler's meeting. In the future the COURIER will contain its usual amount of local matter and we hope our patrons will bear with us a little longer.

—Blank and pass books, memorandum and miscellaneous books at lowest prices, at the book store.

—Col. Watson was as busy as he could be at the elevators Monday. He was managing the engine and the grain department at the same time, but he has that peculiar faculty of taking advantage of his work and his services are almost equal to two men.

—A number of our citizens who enjoy the sport of "shooting on the fly" have been practicing with glass balls, thrown into the air from a spring trap. We have not learned who carries the belt, nor who the "huckleberry" is, but will find out some evening, and publish a score of the contest.

—The brick masons have finished their work on Culbertson's new residence, and started Monday morning for St. Joe, where they will erect a fine farm house. Picker & Bumpus are gaining quite a reputation as contracters and builders, and their work is highly spoken of by those who employ them.

—A young lad from Waterloo, working at the tailor trade in this place, came near being arrested and placed in the Till for running a span of ponies down Main street on the occasion of the old settler's gathering. Two young ladies were in the buggy with him, and it was a very risky transaction to say the least.

—H. A. Hoffman, is home from Bloomington for his summer vacation. Having been a teacher in the university during the year just closed, he very justly feels himself identified with the institution and will devote a part of the vacation to looking up DeKalb students who would like to take a course there. We hope he will succeed.

—We are reliably informed that Mrs. H. Bashelier and Cass Showers did not steal any articles of merchandise, but received them honestly and squarly. From the talk of our informant Auburn is on the verge of an interesting scandal suit, wherein some of our la-da-dah young men and business men will be the "shining lights."

—The agricultural department of W. H. Kiblinger & Co's. hardware, made a grand display-sale of mowers last Saturday. Twenty-five or thirty wagons were loaded with machinery, completly monopolizing the south half of Seventh street. The purchasers were all invited to partake of a free dinner and quite an interesting and enjoyable day was passed.

—Fourth of July, the day of America's independence, will not be recognized in this place as far as our information extends. Fort Wayne and other small towns around us are preparing to honor the day. It is a noticeable fact that public gatherings in Auburn, of late, draw immense crowds, and so it would be were our citizens to arrange for a celebration on this national holiday.

—Zeke Jones' team took a lively turn down Van Buren street Monday. They turned in on the sidewalk in front of Charley Klotz' residence, and running along, tore nearly every picket off his fence, tore Hugh Culbertson's fence and gate half to pieces, and brought up suddenly against a maple tree. Here they got loose, but were soon caught. No one hurt, but we understand, one of the horses was a trifle injured.

—John Davis, an old pioneer of this county, died quite suddenly at his home two miles north of town, last Friday. We are not much acquainted with the gentleman's life, only that he was a thriving, industrious farmer and an upright, honest citizen. He was buried in the cemetery here last sabbath, and a large number of his neighbors and friends formed the procession which followed the remains to its eternal resting place.

—H. S. Smith, of Union township comes down on the cut worms like death on his pale horse. He reports a total slaughter of fifteen thousand two hundred and fifteen on a five acre field in ten days time. He says he catches them with the branches and leaves of green elders. We suggest that Mr. Smith might find it profitable to set a few green elders in front of the Republican office. He might catch the "cut worm" that gets up the cuts for that illustrated paper.

—The Marshal has a large force of men and teams working the streets. The quality of dirt is about the same used last year (blue clay) and cannot be appreciated only in wet weather. It strikes us that the town board could make some arrangements to furnish gravel and have the labor and time of these men and teams result in some good. The Marshal is doing good work for the material furnished him, yet he could make a big improvement if he had access to a gravel pit.

—One blind man and one that wasn't blind, gave a street concert to a large audiance, last Friday evening. The main part of the performance was telling what they could do, and showing what they couldn't do. The songs were good enough, but the singer had a voice like a lake bullfrog. The bone rattler was a little above the average, yet if the blind man could have seen motions and jestures there would be a division in that company immediately. After stopping at the Cabin the next morning they headed for Garrett, where they gave another "grand free concert."

—Dr. Stough, of Waterloo, was sentenced last Saturday, by Judge Gresham of the United States Court, at Ft. Wayne, to serve one year in the jail at Auburn. The trial had resulted in his acquittal on the charge of receiving bribes, but he was found guilty of issuing false certificates of disability by which pensions were obtained. It is believed the president will pardon him.

—The lumber business being a trifle dull Bab Lewis considered matters and came to the conclusion that a crop of tomatoes wouldn't come amiss this fall. Accordingly he "took down the shovel and the hoe" and prepared a spot to set 'em in. The ground was nicely arranged, well fertalized and the plants received his undivided attention. Time rolled on and they were doing splendly, when a more experienced gardner chanced to pass by and informed Bab that he was cultivating rag-weed. Anyone who is in need of a hoe can find one near the center of a ten acre field west of his residence.

—Forepaugh's show exhibits at Kendallville to-morrow, and some from this place will attend. It is said by daily papers that he will go as far as Cleveland and then come back on the Baltimore when he will drop down on us and exhibit his trained elephants. It will be remembered when Forepaugh was here last that the rain fell in torrents, making matters in general very unpleasant. It will also renew the fact to many minds that Doc. Dancer ditched the lion wagon near the old jail, and many other "funny" incidents come fresh to us when we turn our thoughts a few years in the past.

—Taking into consideration the large crowd that gathered at the old settler's rally the bumming element was every quiet. We noticed a number who had taken one "old settler" too many, yet it didn't seem to produce the usual fighting spirit. The only row that came under our observation was the Marshal and Billy Edgington. The latter resisted when the officer undertook to arrest him and quite a struggle ensued. Billy was overpowered, however, by the Marshal striking him a powerful blow over the eye. He has had no hearing as yet, and will probably be held over to appear at the next term of the Circuit Court. He is stopping at the Leas hotel for the present.

—We hear that Tim. Rhodabaugh has jumped the town leaving his other half behind. After a brief courtship he won the confidence of Mr. Helm's daughter and they "jined." Tim. was very considerate, however: After he reached the Michigan pineries he "took his pen in hand" and informed his little wife that she would never see him more, and if she desired a divorce he would send her a draft on a New York bank for $10. These "hop-step-and-jump" marriages generally end in this manner, and we hope to see the day when girls and boys alike will endeavor to mate themselves as nature teaches them. Study the subject thoroughly, judge from hundreds of giddy marriages that surround you daily and there will be no occasion for unhappy homes nor divorce cases.

—The temperance people are working earnestly in the interests of the cause. "Blue lightning slingers" will have to conduct their business a little more in accordance with the laws, or otherwise they will be "pulled." Those who hold themselves up before the people as temperance advocates are firmly determined to have the sale of spirits on the sabbath day and legal holidays stopped. While the procession was following Mark Rush's remains to its last resting place, a Seventh street saloon had its doors wide open, and talk and tramping of feet could be plainly heard upon the outside. These things become monotonous with the other class of citizens and if our saloon men are brought before the circuit court and made to pay a fine they have no one to blame but themselves.

THE TRIUMPH DOUBLE-ACTING WASHING MACHINE OR STEAM BOILER.

This is without doubt the best Washing Machine in use, or in other words the only successful machine ever offered to the public. It is the best for the following reasons: Cheapness, ease, convenience and durability. It will wash any article of wearing apparel or other goods perfectly clean, and will wash 15 shirts in 20 minutes. It will wash its full capacity of towels and napkins in 15 minutes, and every other kind of goods in the same proportion; will wash woolen goods without shrinkage, or one article at a time. It does away with the common wash boiler and board. There is no wearing of fiber or breaking of buttons, and a child of ten years can turn it. This machine is a perfect bleacher, requiring nothing but soap and soft water. It is superior for washing bed spreads and quilts. All machines when properly used will last for years. They are made with copper boilers, and sold for $14. For county and township rights and machines, apply to Miss A. Garrison, at Mrs. Bitner's boarding house, near the Catholic church, Auburn, Ind.

—CEDAR CREEK CHURCH.—There will be communion services at the Evangelical Lutheran church at Cedar Creek Sunday June 25. Rev. Geo. A. Harter will deliver his farewell sermon that day. He has accepted a call to Trinity Evangelical Lutheran church, at Goshen.

—The Chicago Morning News is a large newsy paper, containg the most reading matter of any of its price we have seen. It is furnished by our popular book seller, M. B. Willis, at two cents per copy, or fifty cents per month. Try it.

—Before you buy a baby carriage or boy's wagon, see me and learn what I can do for you, as I have the largest stock and lowest prices.

M. B. WILLIS.

Personal.

Erve Scott had visitors over Sunday.

Al. Mackie, of Hudson, was in town over Sunday.

Clyde Moore is home again after an absence of several months.

—J. H. Ehlers is not expected to survive long at this writing.

Ike Horshler and Geo. Maxwell, of Butler, were in town yesterday.

C. M. Phillips, of Waterloo, was in town Tuesday on legal business.

F. Palmer, the genial hardware dealer at Garrett, spent Sunday in town.

Joseph Kirkpatrick, of Richland, made the COURIER his annual call this week.

S. H. Snyder is home from Ann Arbor taking a rest from the study of medicine.

We learn that J. A. McKay will move with his family from Auburn the coming fall.

Mr. and Mrs. Levi Jackson, of Butler township, attended the old settlers' meeting.

Mrs. Sade Ruffner has returned home and will probably remain during the summer.

Mr. and Mrs. C. Beugnot and Mrs. William McIntyre took a trip to Fort Wayne last Saturday.

D. B. Sordner, of Stafford, called in to see his old acquaintances of the COURIER last week.

W. L. Penfield and family came home Tuesday. They were absent attending the funeral his mother.

Johnny McKay left for Toledo, Saturday, and will assist his father in erecting a bridge near that place.

We notice Tom Cuppy on the streets this week. He is interested in the grain department of the Wabash elevators.

Mrs. C. S. Hare and her daughter Sadie are at Fort Wayne this week paying a visit to Mrs. Teeters, a sister of the former.

—We notice George Kuhlman, formerly county auditor at this place, is about the streets enjoying himself among his friends.

John Picker went to Churubusco Saturday to enjoy a fish on the lake there. Johnnie "don't swear" and of course he will catch one.

We noticed Hank Long, editor of the Kendallville Standard, among the crowd on old settlers' day. He forgot to come up and see us.

Jimmy McClellan is home again. We haven't felt of him, and cannot say whether he brought a gold mine home or not—guess not.

Mrs. D. D. Snyder has been suffering for some weeks with a boil in her ear, the effects of which has caused her much pain and annoyance.

Minnie Hoover, of South Bend, and her cousin Hattie, of Waterloo, were paying a visit to the families of Charles Haut and Isaac Hague this week.

Miss Lottie Henry, who has been going to school at the Academy, between here and Fort Wayne, finished her term Tuesday and will remain at home for the present.

J. J. Martin and family took a run down from Albion, Thursday last, to attend the old settlers' meeting and shake hands all 'round. "John J." has a host of friends here who are pleased to learn that he is doing well.

Dr. Elson will be absent next week Wednesday and Thursday, as he will be at Indianapolis attending the meeting of the State Dental Association. If there is anything to be learned in his profession, the doctor is going to know it.

Miss Jennie Cowan has closed her summer term of school at the Junction, and the little ones who were entrusted under her care advanced in their studies remarkably well.—Miss Anise has also proven a faithful instructor and closed her school, two miles west of town, honored by all interested.

Old Settlers' Meeting.

The fifth annual meeting of the Pioneer Association of DeKalb county met in the grove on Baker's land, at the north end of Auburn, on Thursday, June 15, 1882. Present, all the officers and executive committee, and also a large number of old settlers and other citizens of DeKalb county, estimated at over three thousand persons. The meeting was called to order by the president, Dr. J. H. Ford, at 10:30 a. m., and after music by the band and choir, the Rev. S. B. Ward, chaplain for the occasion, addressed the Throne of Grace. J. E. Rose, Esq., of Auburn, heretofore selected to address the meeting entertained the audience for nearly an hour with an interesting, instructive, and most appropriate address which was highly appreciated and complimented by all present. After a motion instructing the executive committee to report the names of officers for the ensuing year, the meeting took a recess until 2 o'clock p. m. for refreshments. The recess was most enjoyable, a great portion of the crowd remaining in the grove, renewing old or forming new acquaintances and partaking of each other's hospitalities and well-filled baskets, while others repaired to the houses in the town for similar enjoyments.

At 2 o'clock the reports of the several officers were read and adopted, and the executive committee reported the following named persons as officers for the coming year:

For president, Dr. J. H. Ford; vice-president, Wm. Henderson; secretary, W. H. Dills; biographer, D. Z. Hoffman; treasurer, Cyrus Bowman.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:

Butler township, P. Noel; Jackson, Wm. Carr; Concord, R. Culbertson; Newville, Jas. Platter; Stafford, C. B. Wanamaker; Wilmington south, P. B. Nimmons; Wilmington north, W. L. Blair; Auburn, J. R. Cosper; Waterloo, John Butt; Keyser, B. F. Moody; Richland, N. Griffith; Fairfield, G. W. Husselman; Smithfield, J. E. Thompson; Franklin, M. Waterman; Troy, W. B. Emerson; which report was accepted and adopted. Upon the request of several members, W. H. Dills, secretary, moved the adoption of the following amendments to the constitution of the society.

1st, That section 9 be amended to read as follows: "All who were residents of northern Indiana thirty-three years prior to any annual meeting of the society, and who are residents of DeKalb county, shall be considered members of the society."

2nd, "That the president and secretary of this society shall be members of the executive committee. The president shall be chairman and the secretary clerk of such committee," which were voted upon separately and adopted.

On motion, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted.

RESOLVED, That the thanks of this society be and are hereby tendered to the members of the band and choir for the music and singing rendered on the present occasion; and also to Mr. F. B. Straw for the use of an excellent organ.

RESOLVED, That J. E. Rose be requested to furnish the secretary of this society with a copy of his address delivered at this meeting, and the secretary request its publication in the county papers.

The following is a list of the old settlers reported to the biographer who have died during the last year:

NAMES.	BORN.	DIED.
Henry Feagler..	May 24, 1816.	June 16, 1881.
John Platter.....	Nov. 23, [illegible]	Oct. 28, 1881.

Sarah Strohl.....	Sept. 5, 1810	Sept. 30, "
D. Harding......	Sept. 12, 1802.	April 23, 1882.
John N. Miller ..	1814.	Jan. 31, "
Sarah Learned ..	April 30, 1818.	Sept. 13, 1881.
Lemuel Flint ..	April 6, 1798.	March 14, 1882.
Samuel Headly ..	Jan. 30, 1808.	July 22, 1881.
D. Stambaugh...
Eveline Houlton..	Feb. 29, 1807.	Oct. 13, 1881.

Among the notable ones present were Mrs. Maria Smith, widow of Francis Smith, who was the bride of the first marriage, by virtue of a license issued in this county, September 7, 1836. She is the daughter of J. J. Gunsenhouser, still a resident of Stafford township; and the last marriage license, issued June 14, 1882, was A. B. Countryman to Mary Gunsenhouser, a niece of Mrs. Smith. There were also present the second white child born in the county, now Mrs. John B. Moody; also the first white male child, James Platter, a nice little cherub of 225 pounds.

Taken all together—the pleasent weather, beautiful grove, the address, singing, large number present and the general hand-shaking and cordial greetings—the meeting was a decided success. It is expected now that the next annual meeting (with its enlarged membership) which will be semi-centennial anniversary of the settlement of this county, will prove the largest of any yet held, or that will be held for several years to come.

J. H. FORD, Pres. W. H. DILLS, Sec'y.

SAINTS WHO NEVER LEARNED TO PRAY.

BY OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

The waves unbuild the wasting shore;
Where mountains toward the billows sweep,
Yet still their borrowed spoils restore
And raise new empires from the deep.

So, while the floods of thought lay waste
The old domain of chartered creeds,
Its Heaven-appointed tides will haste
To shape new homes for human needs.

Be ours to mark with hearts unchilled
The change an out-worn age deplores;
The legend sinks, but faith shall build
A fairer throne on new-found shores.

The star shall glow in western skies
That shone o'er Bethlehem's hallowed shrine,
And once again the temple rise
That crowned the rock of Palestine.

Not when the wandering shepherds bowed
Did angels sing their latest song,
Nor yet to Israel's kneeling crowd
Did Heaven's one sacred dome belong.

Let priest and prophet have their dues,
The Levite counts but half a man,
Whose proud salvation of the Jews
Shuts out the Good Samaritan.

Though scattered far the flock may stray,
His own the Shepherd still shall claim
The saints who never learned to pray,
The friends who never spoke his name.

Dear Master, while we hear Thy voice,
That says "The truth shall make you free,"
Thy servants still, by loving choice,
O, keep us faithful unto Thee!"

RECOMMENDED TO MERCY.

"I say, Paul, what do you think? You know Deep Dell—"

"Why, Charlie, of course I do," interrupted a bright voice, as the impatient news-carrier, in the form of a restless lad of 14, clattered noisily into the quiet, sunny kitchen, and checked the important work of cake making with his abrupt inquiry.

"Well, you can't go there any more. The owner's come back, and stuck up bills all over everything, that trespassing won't be allowed. It's a shame, I think."

And Charlie sat astride of a kitchen chair and looked dolefully at his sister, as she put down the cake pan, and regarded him in turn.

"The owner of Deep Dell has come back," she repeated, musingly.

"Yes, and locked up all the gates, and stuck up notices that he will punish trespassing on the property. And, just as strawberries are just ripe," added Charlie, suggestively, at the throughful face of the girl, as she still considered the startling news of the 'squire's return, after so many years of absence.

The word strawberries aroused her.

"It's a shame!" she flashed out then, stamping a strongly-clad foot on the brick hearth as she poked her cake-pan into the oven. "And I shall not mind his notices. Notices, indeed!" she scoffed with a high head. "I've picked strawberries from Deep Dell farm ever since I was a little child; and I mean to pick them again to-day."

"But he'll punish tespassers," urged Charlie, with secret delight, thinking af the cake and strawberries for supper.

"Let him!"

"What would you do?" wickedly urged the spirit of mischief, rocking his chair.

"Let him!" laconically retorted Pauline, as she made things tidy about the kitchen, and reached up for a basket beside the dresser.

"But look here, Paul, you're the minister's sister, you know, and ought to set an example of—of—"

The boy floundered in a moral slough as the steady eyes of his sister settled on his face.

"If you say honesty, Charlie Kirk," she said, calmly, tying her sun-bonnet strings under her round chin, "you shall not have one berry—no, nor cake either. Minister's sister or not, I consider I have the right to these berries, when I gathered them years and years and years before he ever knew anything about them."

And she walked resolutely to the door.

"Well, if he runs across your bow," advised Charlie from the gate, watching her resolute face with satisfaction, "just put up your boarding nets and give him a broadside."

Charlie had naval aspirations for the next year, and was gleaning knowledge from a course of Marryatt's novels as a useful preliminary.

Paul trudged away in silence, pondering upon two subjects—the squire's return from his roving life, and the indignity he had put upon the village by his notices and barred gates.

"I will look out for my rights," she concluded, illogically, as she climbed the fence into the strawberry patch, "and the people can take care of theirs."

No thought of the squire's rights entered her incautious little head, as she filled her basket with his luscious fruit.

"David always brings home company on Friday evening," she soliloquized, as she picked industriously, "and whoever it is will enjoy these berries, I know."

She filled her basket evenly to the brim, and arose with flushed cheeks, disheveled hair, sun-bonnet hanging down by the strings tied under her chin, to find herself face to face with a stranger—a man who stood regarding her quietly.

Paul stood motionless. He must be a tramp, in that old brown coat, slouch hat, and dusty top-boots.

"If you please," he said, very politely for a tramp, "is this trespassing?"

Paul thought of the notice and the punishment attending the act, and was sorry for the man.

"It is," she said calmly "and you had better leave at once, for there is no knowing what the owner might do, if he caught you."

And she lifted her basket majestically.

"Is he so very hard, then?" asked the tramp, with humble deference to her manner.

"I fancy he is a —tyrant," replied Paul, superbly, "and means to institute reforms in all its severest and disagreeable phases at Deep Dell. So, my good man, you had better take yourself off."

With which advice the minister's sister went her way across the fence, down into the lane, and home to Charlie, waiting at the gate, and bracing a main yard, according to his idea of the thing.

"Well," he cried out eagerly, "did your enemy show himself?"

Paul lifted the lid of her basket.

"I saw no one but a tramp—a very gentlemanly tramp, I must say; and I advised the poor fellow to keep out of harm."

Charlie whistled a bar of "A Life on the Ocean Wave."

"Here comes David with a gentleman," he said, with sudden gravity. "I wonder who his Friday night companion is this time? Say, Paul, if it should be the 'squire!"

But the girl had fled within to her tea-table to see if the little maid-of-all work had watched the cake carefully.

Everything was right, and a daintier or better served table was never presented to hungry mortals than that to which the minister invited his guest within an incredible short time after Paul had disappeared from the gate.

Charlie was right—it was the 'squire.

The young girl bowed calmly to the grave, courteous man her brother presented, her eyes resting the while upon the dish of ripe, red berries, with an indignant thought of his barred gates and notices.

A puzzled look came into her face as the stranger talked on, and she glanced furtively at him only to meet his grave eyes fall upon her and to feel the floor rock beneath her feet.

"So they protest against my claiming my own," he was saying, in answer to the minister's report of the discontent in the village. "They will become obedient when they find out I am not a tyrant."

Paul could stand no more. She dared not look up as the minister helped his guest to the strawberries, but, with a hurried excuse for the cream (which was in a little silver mug beside the berries all the while), she left the room with eager steps.

She was gone so long that Charlie came to hunt her up, and found her disconsolate and miserable, on the back step.

"Oh, Charlie!" she cried. "He was the tramp!"

"The gentlemanly tramp!" and the boy sat down beside her, aghast.

"What shall I do?"

She was so wretched and pale that Charlie arose to the situation at once.

"I wouldn't mind, Pauline!" he said, consolingly.

"Oh, but I must mind! He is going to raise David's salary, which means so much for you, Charlie, and to repair the church. And, after all, he is right. I didn't see it until I heard him tell David his plans and ideas, and—and what does he think of me?"

Here a miserable little sob choked the pretty voice, and Charlie grew desperate.

"Just come in and have it out with him," he urged. Make a clean breast of it, and he'll have to be polite then."

But Paul lacked the courage to confess her fault, and only when the 'squire was a frequent guest at the cottage and a kind friend to the whole village, could she gain strength to speak, and ask for some little of the kindness he gave others and denied to her.

The strawberries were ripe again at Deep Dell, and Paul was walking sadly down the lane past the corner she used to climb so deftly, thinking not of the berries, not of Charlie away at college, nor of the cottage down in the village, but of her own unpardoned fault, which lay like a heavy cloud upon her, when a shadow fell upon her path, and looking up, she saw the 'Squire quietly regarding her. She paused humbly.

"Have you nothing to say to me, Paul?" he asked, in a strange tone. "After one long year, have no word for me?"

With a break in her voice that seemed a part of the tears that would come, Paul forgot her defiance, and thought only of the heavy heart she had carried so long, and made her confession then and there.

"The accused pleads guilty, and is recommended for mercy," said the 'squire, with a bright laugh; "but, Paul, I did not mean that." She look-ep so eagerly as he took both hands. "And if I give you free pardon for trespassing on my property and stealing my fruit, what shall I ask in return for the peace of mind you have robbed me of in this last year?"

Paul thought of Charlie's advice, "to have it out with him," and so said softly but earnestly:

"The heartache you have given me by your coldness."

She looked at him fearlessly now, smiling and flushing, and he crushed her hand.

"Will you hear your sentence?" he cried.

"Yes," she softly laughed.

"Then you are henceforth and forever to be mistress, not only of Deep Dell, but owner and manager of the heart and devotion of—"

"The gentlemanly tramp!" said Paul, saucy with happiness.

Bill Nye's Philosophical Reflections

Boomerang.

We find that no apology is due from us to Hon. William G. Le Duc, the great promoter of the cold tea vine. After years of study and attention to the agricultural department, he has succeeded at last in growing tea at the south, and we look back upon the cruel words we have said of him from time to time with unavailing regret. It is true that his efforts to grafty the dough-nut on the pieplant were a failure. He did not succeed, either, in crossing the vegetable oyster with the cove oyster so as to make a hardy bivalve that would grow in a northern latitude; but his tea move is said to be a grand triumph. While we may have spoken lightly of his enterprise, we had the utmost respect for him, personally, and although we never believed that the horse-rake could be bred up to a high moral plane, we still admit the scholarly mind of Mr. Le Duc and his wonderful genius as a statesman. All men are more or less prone to make themselves ridiculous in the eyes of the world, but they should not despair. They should not allow their keen sense of propriety and impropriety to intrude upon them, nor should they become discouraged because the public may jeer at their enterprise and hoot at their schemes.

Nature may frown upon the idea of producing a new and desirable domestic animal by the crossing of the cashmere goat and the hydraulic ram, and yet she may smile pleasantly upon the propagation of iced tea. The two ideas are widely segregated and the same principles do no prevail in the one case that might in the other. The world moves and civilization advances as the result of progressions in new channels, and things which may at first be sneered at may at last be looked upon as national blessings. These movements must be gradual and made by easy degrees, not sudden and in violation of known natural laws. In this way philosophical sequences or logical scoops are attained and humanity benefited. If we attempt to domesticate the battering ram and make a pet of him we fail, but if we make the domestic pump tributary to the new-milch cow, we thus largely increase the product of the cow without injury, and nature is not insulted.

Again, if we try to trace the origin of man downward to the brute creation through the monkey-wrench family, we find ourselves adrift on a mighty sea of uncertainty; but if we desire to restrain a setting hen from hatching out a croquet mallet, we know by experience that we should tie a red flannel rag around her tail and thus, by an interruption of her course of study, turn her attention to the duties which devolve upon her.

All these things are successes or failures, according to their degree of adherence to a known theorem, and men are philosophers or jackasses in proportion as they adhere to the internal clamoring of what is known as horse sense, or on the contrary to a vague yearning after a home in the insane asylum.

When Mr. LeDuc began in a practical way to promote the growth of a plant, and left off trying to kill the army worm, by rigid orders from the war department, he at once laid hold upon victory and we are not going to deny him the glory he has worked so hard to attain.

Natural History.

Detroit Free Press.

"What sort of a bird is this?"

"This is an English sparrow. He cannot carry off a lamb, like the eagle, nor is he provided with teeth and claws like the tiger, but he leaves his mark all the same."

"How did he get here?"

"A philanthropist brought him over from England."

"What is a philanthropist?"

"He is a cross between a lunatic and and an idiot."

"What did he bring the sparrows to America for?"

"Because he hated the country and wanted revenge. It wasn't enough for him that we have small-pox, yellow-fever, cholera, droughts, floods, cyclones, and forest fires and grasshopper plagues."

"What are the chief merits of the sparrow?"

"His beautiful voice and lovable nature. His song is so much sweeter than a file rasping over cast iron that people have died after hearing it."

"How does he employ his time?"

"In screaming, fighting, and voting early and often."

"Where does he build his nest?"

"In the cornices of houses. If he could have the use of 1,000 trees, rent free, he would turn up his nose at the offer. He couldn't damage a tree any, but he can make it necessary to paint a house every month."

"Of what is his nest composed?"

"Of everything he can handle, except old oyster cans and empty beer bottles."

"Does the hard-hearted citizen ever destroy these nests?"

"He does. When his family clothes line, or crow bar, or long-handled shovel is missing he pulls down a nest and recovers the lost article."

"What does the poor sparrow do then?"

"He rebuilds."

"Can he be discouraged?"

"If his nest was pulled down 15,000 or 20,000 times he might commence to feel down-hearted, but those who have routed him out 500 or 600 times have not seen him change countenance."

"What other birds does he agree with?"

"The buzzard and the polecat. He is too proud to take up with every stranger who comes along. He has driven away our robins and bluebirds, and larks and chickadees, and even the hens are looking for another opening."

"Would it be wicked to kill one of these sparrows?"

"Awful wicked. The philanthropist would raise such a howl that the killer would have to skip the country. Besides, you can't shoot them, they won't be poisoned and no one ever yet trapped one. A man down in Ohio thinks a blow with a barn door might fetch them, but it is yet an untried experiment."

"That is all for this time. Let us now lay away our books and sit on the steps and listen to the ravishing melody of the sparrow's evening song."

The "Year Without a Summer."

The weather of the present month revives chilling memories of the famous "year without a summer" of 1816. There are old people still living who remember it well and all its dreary incidents. There was a sharp frost in every month, and so disastrous was it to the crops that the farmers used to refer to the year as "eighteen hundered and starved to death." January was mild as was also February, with the exception of a few days. The greater part of March was cold and boisterous. April opened warm, but grew colder as it advanced, ending with snow. In May ice formed half an inch thick, buds and flowers were frozen and corn killed. Frost, ice and snow were common in June. Almost every green thing was killed and the fruit was nearly all destroyed. Snow fell to the depth of three inches in New York and Massachusetts and ten inches in Maine. July was accompanied with frost and ice. On the 5th ice was formed of the thickness of window glass in New York, New England and Pennsylvania, and corn was nearly all destroyed in certain sections. A cold northerly wind prevailed all summer. Corn was so frozen that a great deal was cut down and dried for fodder. Very little ripened in New England and scarcely any even in the middle states. Farmers were obliged to pay $4 and $5 a bushel for corn of 1815 for seed for the next spring's planting. The first two weeks of September were mild and the rest of the month was cold, with frost, and ice formed a quarter of an inch thick. October was more than than usually cold, with frost and ice. November was cold and blustering, with snow enough for good sleighing. December was quite mild and comfortable.

LINCOLN'S MOTHER.

Interesting Story of Her Death—The Love Borne by the Statesman for His Aged Parent—The Log-Cabin and the Days of Poverty—The Last Sad Scenes.

Washington Republican.

The following interesting chapter is from the historical novel, just published at Stutgart, Germany, by Dr. Theadore Canisius and entitled "Abraham Lincoln," and translated for the National Republican by Miss Eda Canisius, daughter of the author. Dr. Canisius was an intimate friend of President Lincoln, and has come into possession of many interesting facts relating to the Lincoln family which would tend to make him a faithful biographer.

Unfortunately Abe was not allowed to follow his own inclination. The summer season again called him from his studies. Not only was there work in abundance in the woods and fields, but the state of his mother's health became more and more hopeless so that he was again compelled to perform the hardest work of the household, which his sister could not accomplish alone. The noble-hearted Mrs. Lincoln had became the shadow of her former self. Pale and emaciated, she glided about the house and when she attempted now and then to perform with weak and trembling hands some little task she felt as though the exertion had exhausted all her energies. She seemed like a moving corpse, and only her strong will appeared to shield her body from total dissolution. She would not yet depart from her loving ones, and—she lived. But how miserable that life during the whole of that summer! What a torture it had become to her! How many sleepless, feverish nights succeeded each other.

At last she could no longer even move about the hut to direct and superintend the household affairs. For days she lay prostate on her bed, with eyes closed, only now and then lisping feebly a few words, yet whatever she uttered in such sad moments was filled with tender care for her family. Even in the occasional feverish wanderings of her mind her thoughts lingered on that which her laborous existence had formed the very essence of her life, and disclosed the once untiring activity of a worthy, excellent, and industrious house wife. On warm sunny days Father Thomas would carry the weak and now feather-light sufferer into the shade of a tree in front of the little house, where Abe and his sister prepared with loving hands a couch of pillows and bedding. There Mother Nacy often sat for hours together, the chills creeping through her frame even in the glowing sunheat. Even then she looked with a faint smile toward her husband, who worked in the adjoining field, who cast at intervals a careworn and anxious look toward his suffering wife; or her eyes followed the flight of birds that seemeg to ascend to a higher world, to that far unknown land toward which her soul was striving, for Mother Nancy was about to close her earthly existence, although she struggled against her approaching dissolution.

How beautiful in such moments, the sunlight transformed the mild countenance of the parent and dying woman! How distinctly was it then revealed that a pure, God-fearing soul was departing this life! The quiet and pious expression of her face was truly spiritual, the beautiful, eloquent eyes were clearer than ever, and over her entire figure was poured that holiness with which the nature of a just person in the last hours of life, like a presentment of eternal happiness, is endowed. And when Sarah, who so early had to take the housewife's place, left the hut and her work now and then to attend her mother's wants—when Abe awkward and slovenly as he was, crept with sorrowful face toward the sufferer's side, and looked with his large intelligent eyes tearfully upon invalid, often plucking shyly but tenderly at the pillows upon which she rested, overcome with grief, bent over her powerless and emacited hands, mingled the scalding tears with his burning kisses—even then she had a smile for them, and no worldly anxiety was visible in her pale, sweet face; for as Heaven shed its glorious light over her features faith and hope filled her heart and robbed the thought of death of its horrors.

A lovely autumn day was drawing to an end. The sun had just disappeared, behind the tops of the forest trees; the ether, with its light, motionless clouds, glowing in rosy hues and shed a soft, golden light over the cabin of the Lincolns. It was yet daylight, and the little family formed a quiet and sad group before the house. Legrand, who durning the first stage of Nancy's illness had repeatedly called at the house of our settlers, now wandering among the Indians of the Far West. No one was present but the father, the suffering mother, and her two children. It was Sunday evening, too. Abe had already, on many a Sabbath, undertaking his mother's holy office of reading the Scriptures to the pious and goodly family. Now, again, he sat upon a log near Mother Nancy, the old family Bible upon his knees, reading the Gospel in a soft but clear voice. His little sister beside the roughly-improvised couch of the mother, looking dreamly into her pale face and sunken eyes, while one of the thin hands of the patient woman rested upon the daughter's curly head. Father Thomas leaned against the tall sycamore, where mighty branches shadowed the log-cabin and the sorrowing little group. His broad chest, across which his arms were folded, heaved and betrayed the feelings of the husband. He gazed motionless into his wife's almost transfigured coutenance, over which at that moment the evening cast a roseate hue. At time his lips moved convulsively, as if unable to repress the anguish that cramped his heart. His tearful eyes expressed the terrible grief and awful solicitude of that plain but deeply-feeling pioneer. Mother Nancy's earthly moments were numbered. This Thomas could not disguise from himself. He saw it by the momentary, light, scarcely perceptible convulsions of the emaciated body; by the change that had taken place in the last hour in her beautified, gentle face; by the eyes that became more and more glanced, and now and then lit up with an expression of love and anxiety for her dear ones.

"Stop reading, Abe," he murmured, trembling with apprehension; "it worries your mother."

"No," breathed Mrs. Lincoln, in broken sentences, "it seems as though angels—were singing psalms—as though the entire glory—of the other world were disclosed to me—yes, thus—thus I always wished to die—the blue heaven above me, you at my side—and God's words on my lips. Your hand, Thomas."

The husband bent over his wife and took her right hand, which she was unable to lift.

Abe had been silent. He now looked into his mother's face, hastly closed the Bible and sprang up from the log.

"Gracious God! my mother is dying!" he stammered, and reeled, pale and trembling, to her side, while Sarah uttered a cry, and, falling on her knees, buried her face, over which the tears were streaming, in the lap of the dying woman. But Abe embraced his mother and held her in his arms as though, poor boy, he could in that way stay the soul of the so dearly loved mother.

"Don't cry," she whispered: "is not death a relief to me? I am prepared—I feel that I shall remain with you even when I am gone. I shall pray for you in Heaven—and shall see you all again. Be virtuous, Sarah. Remain honest and true, my Abe—honor and love your father—he will bring you up as Christians—I can die contentedly—and you—Thomas—"

"My Nancy, my wife!" stammered the strong man now thoroughly overcome.

"I have been faithful to you," she continued, in a feeble tone, "and you have done your duty. Thanks for all your kindness to me! And now—God be with—you all"—

The noble woman endeavored to utter a few more words of love, but they were lost in an unintelligible murmur. One more glance she cast on all around her, and then her beautiful eyes, formerly so radiant with love, became dim, the lips trembled for the last time. Death had come to her like sweet sleep; serene and holy transfiguration lay over her quiet features; a smile hovered around the lips. Life had fled; but Nancy Lincoln resembled a softly-sleeping one over which the last faint rays of the sun shed their mild rosy hue. The children fell weeping at the feet of the lifeless body. Thomas Lincoln still retained the now cold hand within his own.

"Let us pray, children," he muttered in deepest agony, "that God may not forsake us in the hour of our greatest trial and need—you have no mother now!"

Superstition in Paris.

Letter to Boston Journal.

A curious instance of the force of superstition occurred in a street in our quarter the other day. An aged woman who had no friends or relatives had lived for a quarter of a century in a small room, reached by a spiral staircase, at the extreme top of the vast house inhabited by at least 100 families. One morning the venerable woman was found dead in her bed and the agents of the Funeral Company were sent for to prepare the body for burial. They came with the humble bier, which is the last bed, before the grave, of the poor; and with the simple pine coffin. Next day the funeral was to take place—i. e., the body was to be carried by two-men to the cemetery. To their surprise they found that they could not get the bier, encumbered with the the coffin, down the spiral staircase. Every effort was in vain. But communicating with the tiny room in which the woman had died was another tenement, which had an entrance opening on the main staircase of the house. The bearers of the bier applied for permission to pass through with their ghastly burden, but the occupants, an elderly lady and her daughter, refused. Never could they permit death to cross their threshold in such a form. The bearers of the bier then went down stairs, sought the intervention of the Commissary of Police. That functionary came, and requested the mother and daughter obligingly to waive their superstition, and to give right of way through their room. But they were as firm in their refusal as before. The Commissary knew of no law by which he could insist, in such circumstances, upon the violation of domicile; so he said to the professional funeral men: "You must take the body out through the dormer window on the roof, and from thence have it lowered to the street." The services of half a dozen firemen from a neighboring post were called in, pulleys were rigged, the coffin was securely fastened to the bier ropes, and after some hours' work the body descended slowly to the street. A crowd of 3,000 or 4,000 persons had collected to witness the operation. As the bier touched the sidewalk, the bearers appeared at the street door and took up their burden. A fireman swung aside the ropes; the throng parted to right and left; the men removed their hats; the women crossed themselves, and the journey to the cemetery began. No attempt was made at remonstrance with the recalcitrant tenants who would not yield a passage—it being considered that they had an unquestionable right to their opinion.

From a Russian Railway Carriage.

Galenger in Russia.

A dead flat, hardly broken at distant intervals by a wave of the ground, by some long, low ridge, or small, scrubby knoll; interminable, monotonous woodland; not primeval forest, but more young birch and fir, stunted and rugged, with here and there a bit of rough clearing, a patch of course pasture. Anon, great rye fields, stretching beyond man's ken, checkered here and there by more or less abortive attempts at wheat, barley, or potato crops, the ground as a rule, without hedge, fence or wall—nobody's or everybody's ground—open to the inroads of cattle; a sandy, salty, to all appearance, irreclaimable soil; a backward slovenly civilization; the cattle neither well bred nor well fed, everywhere a sense of loneliness; only at vast distances dog-houses and barns mostly untenanted; horses, cows, sheep, turkeys and geese in flocks, unattended; and, further off, straggling towns and villages, with high-domed churches and tall factory chimneys; and near the stations great piles of wood, solidly ranged in rows of logs of different sizes and various colors, as high as houses, and not without some architectural pretensions and some artistic attempts at quaint, tasteful patterns.

JOCOSITIES.

There is a face that haunts me ever,
There are eyes mine always meet,
As I read the morning papers,
As I walk the crowded street,
Ay! she knows not how I suffer,
Hers is a world-wide fame,
But till death that face shall greet me—
Lydia Pinkham is her name.

It is all very well for health journals to tell people who are restless and unable to sleep at night to place the head of their bed toward the north, but it does no good unless you take the baby to the other end of the house and place his head towards the south.

It rather disturbs the unities for a lover to hear his girl talk about etherialized friendship, the gossamer wings of love, the thin and permeable texture of affection and that sort of things, and see her sit down and eat a big hunk of roast beef, four biscuits and an apple pie.

"Does the world miss any one?" queried a disconsolate maiden of some thirty-six summers and eight moons. "The world will very likely continue to "Miss" you," said her younger sister. "As for me, I shall be a 'Mrs.' before the cherries are ripe." Oh, the depths of sisterly affection.

"Then, papa, are you the devil?" His offspring's logic was too much for him, and he slipped out of the room without answering.

These Oakland girls are getting to be too innocent for anything. "Where have you been all day?" thundeerd a stern parent to his daughter, as she slid into the house one night after supper. "Why, pa, I have only been fishing with George." "What, alone?" "Oh dear, no, sir. George took his dog Ranger along as a chaperon." Papa drops dead in an apoplectic fit.

The Pope.

British Medical Journal.

Leo VIII. is a thin, ascetic, and delicate man, liable to slight temporary ailments, and with too sensitive a nervous system for all the brain work he has to do. He is, in consequence, often tired and depressed, and unable to receive the many visitors who throng to see him, and it is well known that he dislikes receiving all and sundry, being in this respect just the opposite of his predecessor, who had the greatest pleasure in seeing his audience-rooms crowded with visitors. He is not, however, suffering from any organic disease, is free, just at present from even temporary indisposition, and is probably quite as fit to bear his confinement to the Vatican and its grounds now as he was at the date of his election.

No Excuse for Drowning.

New York Herald.

The general ability of human beings to be drowned on slight provocation does not seem to be justified by the weight and structure of the ordinary physique. A man attempted yesterday to swim across the East river with hands and feet tied. He did not succeed, but as he started from a Fulton ferry pier and drifted almost to Governor's Island it seems unnecessary that any one with hands and feet free should drown. Of course the expert, while not merely floating, kept himself from sinking by moving his tied limbs. If he could thus keep his head above water no novice at swimming need fear drowning while he can have two hands and two feet in motion.

FROM THE WIRES.

Louisville, Ky. dispatch:

The steamer Evansville, en route from Evansville to Bowling Green blew up this morning near Calhoun, fatally injuring her mate, Owen Gilmore, and a fireman, and scalding nine or ten others. No passengers were injured. No particulars.

The most horrible tragedy that has ever occurred in Chicago was reported to the police Saturday. Chicago has not been wanting in terrible occurrences; but the crime of to-day overshadows them all. An unhappy mother, driven to desperation by the burden of domestic difficulties, poisoned her entire family of four children, and then partook of the fatal draught herself.

In a humble home at 51 Finnell street resided the family of Casper Seyboldt, a German by nativity and a journeyman baker by occupation.

His family consisted of his wife Mary, aged 35, and four children. The eldest of these was Matilda, aged 12, and the others were Anton, aged 7 years; Annie, aged 2½ years, and Agnes, aged 3½ months. The father, Caspar Seyboldt, worked at his trade in Kimball's bakery, 401 South Clark street. His occupation kept him at work all night, and it appears from what could be learned this morning that his absence from home made his wife melancholy. Her neighbors hav thought her to be partially demented, but like her husband, were of course utterly unprepared for the awful crime of to-day.

About daylight this morning Caspar Seyboldt emerged from the work-room in Kimball's bakery, 401 South Clark street, and wended his way towards his home at 51 Finnell street. He arrived there shortly after 5 o'clock, and was met at the threshold by his wife, who had been waiting for him at the door. She had a wild look in her eyes, and was wan and pale to an extreme degree. He asked her what the matter was, and she replied that she had poisoned the children and herself, and that three of them were dead. With an exclamation of horror the man rushed by his wife into the house, and there, to his horror, saw the three youngest children laid out on a table cold in death. Their hands were crossed, and in each the maniac mother had placed with strange fancy a bunch of flowers. The eldest child, the girl Matilda, was writhing in horrible agony in a bed in an adjoining room, and, after pointing out the terrible sight to her husband, the mother sank to the floor herself in convulsions. The screams of the husband and father soon attracted the attention of the neighbors, and they came rushing into the house. Some of them were at once dispatched for a physician, and they soon returned with Dr. Moe. When he arrived the mother had joined her murdered children and crossed to the other shore. He at once pronounced the eldest girl beyond the help of medical skill. He had not been in the house ten minutes before she was also dead. Mr. Seyboldt was almost frantic, and he was beside himself with grief all the morning. The scene at the house was indeed a sad one. The little 3-and-a-half-months old baby, with its little hands folded over its tiny breast, and the flowers which the lunatic mother had placed between them lying there, looked inexpressibly sad. All of the faces wore expressions of the most acute pain, because a death by strychnine is the most horrible of all deaths that can be experienced, except that caused by fire.

Shortly after midnight a masked mob of 100 appeared at the jail in Lawrence, demanded the keys, and when refused burst in the door and took from the cell Peter Vinegar, Isaac King, and George Robertson. They took them to the bridge and hung them. All three were colored, and their crime was the murder of Daniel Bausman a week ago yesterday. Bausman was a farmer from Ohio, who arrived in Lawrence the day before with a large sum of money, the proceeds of the sale of his farm. The negroes found he had the money and got a common prostitute, the daughter of Peter Vinegar, who enticed Bausman to the vicinity of the ice-houses. While he was enjoying her embraces he was knocked in the head with a hammer, and killed. The body was then thrown in the river, where it was found next day. The men were captured, and yesterday confessed. The mob seemed to sprin from the ground, so quickly did they come, and after being assured their victims were dead left in the same mysterious manner. Their is much excitement, but no attempt will be made to discover the lynchers' identity.

A London cablegram, June 9:

Walter M. Bourke, Galway landlord residing at Rahasan, was shot dead Thursday, when returning from Gort. His escort, a soldier, was also killed. The murder occurred at Adraham, seven miles north of Gort. Mr Burke was riding in front of his dragoon escort, when a volley from rifles was fired at them from behind a stone wall, and both fell dead. Mr. Burke was a magistrate and the [illegible] for the late crown solicitor for Mayo. He was a barrister by profession, and had amassed a fortune in India. He possessed two estates in Ireland, one at Curraleagh, and the other, the largest, at Rahassn. After returning from India he contested a seat in parliament for Mayo against Mr. Nelson. He had had several disputes with his tenants, and had recently left London to carry out evictions. He took an active part in the prosecution of Father Conway some years since. A few months ago he entered the Church at Carraro armed with a repeating rifle while mass was being celebrated. The priest ordered him to leave the church and he escaped by a side door in order to avoid being mobbed. Mr. Bourke was not a relative of the late Under-Secretary Burke. Gort bears the character of being one of the worst places in Ireland for rent disputes. Bourke recently informed the authorities that he knew he would be shot. When the news [illegible] London his brother went into the [illegible] of the commons and accused [illegible] and Biggar as being the the [illegible] thereof.

St. Louis, Mo., special.—The robbers of the Brookfield Bank were overhauled about sundown last evening, some twenty miles from Brookfield. A fight ensued, in which one of the robbers was wounded. It is believed in Kansas City that Jim Cummings or Bill Morris, formerly of the James gang, was the leader of the robbers.

Kansas City, special.—The bank robbers, four in number, were surrounded in the woods, about thirteen miles northwest of Kirksville, at 6 a. m., and finding resistance useless, surrendered. They were taken to Kirksville, and from there will be taken to Brookfield at 2 p. m. under a heavy guard. Two of the prisoners are recognized as Fox and Morris. The other two will not give their names. Friends of the robbers are congregated at Kirksville, and say the prisoners shall not be taken to Brookfield. A fight is looked for.

Charleston, S. C., dispatch:

The negro, John Johnson, 17 years of age, who outraged Miss McDowell at Rockhill yesterday, was lynched this morning.

Indianapolis, Ind, dispatch:

A furious storm raged last night, causing a great rise in Pogue's run, which flows through the city, and under the union depot, causing it to overflow, and damaging property to the extent of $100,000, not reckoning minor losses. Early this morning a platform over the run east of the union depot gave way, precipitating fifty persons into the raging flood. Six or more of those who were on the bridge are supposed to have been drowned. The bodies of Tom Daily, Mattie Geldermann, John Manny, and John H. Scoville, of Colorado, have been recovered. The culvert under the depot, through which some of them were swept, is 400 feet long. The search for bodies is still going on.

SARATOGA, N. Y., dispatch:

William Miliken, of Boston, Mass., was literally torn to pieces by a black bear that he recklessly attacked at Lake Piseco, in the Adirondacks, last Saturday. Mr. Milliken was enjoying himself in the North Woods hunting and fishing with a party of business men which included W. Wilkinson, of Birmingham, Conn., and Messrs. Dixon, Fountain, and Watson, of Philadelphia. A guide named James Shires was also present. They had four dogs with them, and they struck the trail of a bear, which they followed up. The guide warned them that bears were ugly at this time of the year, and it was very hazardous to attack one singly. Milliken announced he was not afraid and could get out of the way of any bear. He followed the dogs closely, and they found two big bears and three cubs in a few minutes. The bears attacked the dogs and soon tore them in pieces, while Miliken fired at them in vain. The shaggy monsters then gave their attention to their human assailant, and in a very few minutes literally tore him to pieces. The guide rushed to his rescue and was badly lacerated, but not fatally injured; Watson brought his trusty rifle to bare, and shot the male bear dead, while almost simultaneously Fountain and Wilkinson dispatched the female. The cubs were captured alive. The male bear weighed 400 pounds and the female 300. The remains of the unfortunate Mr. Milliken were brought out of the woods by his companions and forwarded to Boston. He leaves a wife and three children. This is the worst tragedy which has occurred in the Adirondacks for many years.

I Will Not.

[London Telegraph.]

A certain Dean of Chester was called upon to perform the wedding ceremonial for a pair of happy lovers. The position of both parties was of the highest rank, and the guests who were bidden to the church were of the most fashionable and exalted. The day arrived, and with it the hour. The edifice was packed, and all was in readiness. The Dean expectant awaited the coming of the bride, and the groom, with his best man, was in the vestry.

The hours passed on, and still the bride did not arrive. After a long delay she drove up to the church door, and with her bridesmaids swept up the large middle aisle towards the altar. In the meantime the groom advanced to meet her, and, receiving her half way, escorted her to the dean. After the opening words of exhortation the Dean turned to the man and asked him the usual set of questions, whether he would have the woman for his wedded wife, etc., etc., to which he answered, "I will." The question being in turn asked of the woman, to the astonishment and amazement of all she distinctly said, looking the groom in the face, "I will not!" The next moment she said in a low voice. "Mr. Dean, no one can more regret the words I have just uttered than myself, and if you dismiss the congregation and take me into your vestry-room I will apologise, and at the same time fully and satisfactorily explain what may seem to all my strange conduct." The Dean seeing that she was in earnest, in a few words dismissed the bewildered congregation and directed the bridegroom to await him.

The congregation having departed, the lady and Dean being together, she said, "I can not tell you how bad I feel. I had loved my fiance truly and devotedly, and had looked forward to a life of perfect happiness and joy. This morning, as you know, I was late at my marriage ceremony, but it was not through any fault of mine. I arrived as soon as I could. Instead of receiving looks of love and words of full happiness from my future husband, he paralyzed my beating heart by saying, when he met me half way up the aisle, 'G—d—you! If you expect to begin life this way, by keeping me waiting for you, you will find out after you are my wife!'" My decision was instantly made. I have been told that, sooner than suffer unhappiness through my own actions, it were better to renounce even at the alter a union that would bring misery and grief thereafter. Had I turned back, he would have followed me; and there would have been a scene, and he might have persuaded me to return and marry him. It also might have looked like temper, and I had fully time during your few words of prayer to make up my mind. I know that I have disappointed friends, my family, but no one more than myself. Do not ask me to reconsider his late action. Inform my would-have-been husband of my determination and let me go." The Dean, seeing she was resolved, could not but approve, and gently led her through the church back to her anxious parents, not as a smiling wife, but as a woman whose present is shattered and whose future is blighted.

Fighting Women.

Lumberton (S. C.) Special.

St. Paul's township was yesterday evening the scene of a deadly hand-to-hand coflict between two young women, Jane McKellar and Frances McNair, in which the victorious one sent a dirk into her rival's heart. It seems that for a long time there has been a bad feeling between the two women, although they had lately as much as possible avoided each other. There was a young gallant in the case, and it said that Frances McNair had won his affection, although at first he seemed to have preferred the other. During the last three days hostile messages had passed between the two women, the exact tenor of which has not leaked out, although important and sensational developments are looked for before the officer gets through with the affair. At any rate, whether by appointment or not, the two women met last evening in a secluded dell, not far from the main road, and began to settle the trouble between themselves.

Jane McKellar was the larger and more muscular, though her antagonist, while spare, was lithe and quick of motion. They fought each other like tigers, and finally Jane McKellar succeeded in throwing her small but plucky opponent, and, with her heavy knee pressed in the stomach of the prostrate woman, grasped her by the throat with the fury of a tigress, and well nigh choked her life from her.

Finally, by a last, terrible effort, Frances McNair, who had been wriggling upon the ground like a serpent, in agony, gave a sudden twist of the body, forcing her antagonist to lose her seat and fall sideways to the ground. Before she could recover herself, Frances, with great agility, got on her feet, and with a cry of hate and revenge, drew a bowie-knife and plunged it into the heart of Jane Kellar, who died with one grasp. Then, on sight of the gaping wound, the victor in the flight fell in a swoon across the dead body, where she was found. A party had followed them, but too late to prevent the terrible tragedy.

A Boston Experiment.

W. M. F. Round in Christian Union.

The Oriental Palace coffee house is a Boston notion, and one to which temperance reformers and capitalists may well turn their attention. In one of the busiest parts of Washington street there is a very showy building, with plate glass windows and much new paint, where the attractions of the corner gin palace are all set forth—minus the gin. Entering from the street one finds a long bar, at which nothing stronger is sold than most perfectly prepared maleberry Java coffee, and such edibles as usually tempt the patrons of the more spirituous lunch counter. Coffee is sold at two, four and six cents a cup, according to the size of the cups. In the same room with this coffee bar are billiard and pool tables, where the games are furnished at about 33 per cent. lower prices than in the liquor shops. Smoking is allowed and the daily papers are furnished gratuitously to those who wish to read. In another part of the building is a concert hall, where entertainments are given twice a week to the patrons of the house. There is a room for small games, checkers, dominoes, chess, etc., which can be used on payment of fifteen cents an hour. I visited the coffee house at eleven in the morning, and found it full of patrons. Full of young men, many of whom would have been lounging in pool and bar rooms if they had not been there. That the institution is a success is clearly shown from the fact that no less than eighty gallons of coffee are sold there every day, and that the place is not empty of patrons from morning till night. This is a common sense move in the temperance reform. It pays for itself as it goes, and its benefits are already so manifest that similar cafes are to be put up in different quarters of the city.

Among the contributors to the porcelain department of the Paris salon this year are three American ladies, namely, Miss Baker, Miss Robbins, and Miss Dana.

CHURCH NOTES AND NEWS

The Baptists in the South number altogether 1,715,704, of whom 974,100 are white, and 741,694 colored.

The Church Missionary Society (Anglican) reports its largest annual income this year. It is $1,060,000.

The planters of the Sandwich Islands have unanimously declared in favor of the prohibition of the importation and sale of spiritous liquors.

The present number of Presbyterian churches in New England is twenty-four—New Hampshire having six, Vermont and Rhode Island one each, Massachusetts nine, and Connecticut seven.

Under the guidance of Professor Harper, of Morgan Park Seminary, Chicago, 400 ministers in thirty-five States and of thirteen denominations have, within a year, taken up the study of Hebrew.

Another effort has been made toward the reconciliation of the Roman Catholic and Greek churches. Bishop Strossmayer, of Austria, has written a letter to the Russian Holy Synod on the subject.

Bishop Granberry, of the M. E. Church South, was a Confederate chaplain in the late war, and in one of the seven-day battles around Richmond, he was wounded in one eye, while attempting to minister to the wounded.

A Protestant society held its anniversary this year in the Mairie of the First Arrondissement, Paris, which is part of the church, from the belfry of which was tolled the signal death-knell of the victims of Black Bartholomew.

The late James Vick was a member and a trustee of the First M. E. Church in Rochester, and was the Superintendent of its Sunday-school for twenty-five years. He had also been superintendent of the Hedding mission school since its organization.

At the recent meeting of the General Synod of the Church of Ireland, it was stated that the temperance movement in the past four years had had unprecedented success. The temperance society now counted 60 000 members, or more than one-tenth of the whole church.

The British and Foreign Bible Society continues to be remarkably prosperous. Since its organization it has circulated 94 000,000 copies of the Scriptures in 246 languages and dialects. The Earl of Shaftsbury, who is in great demand as chairman in May anniversaries, is president of the society.

Baptist missionaries in Burma are required to impress upon their disciples the idea that baptism means immersion, and this strict adherence to the matter and the elevation of the form of the rite into such importance is giving them trouble. At the meeting of the Baptist Bible Society in New York last week, the Rev. A. T. Rose, of Rangoon, reported that great injury was being done in converting the heathen over there, because, while the word 'immerse' was used in translating into the Senacular, it neglected to use it in the English edition.

If you feel drowsy, debilitated, have frequent headache, mouth tastes badly, poor appetite and tongue coated, you are suffering from torpid liver, or "biliousness," and nothing will cure you so speedily and permanently as to take SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR or MEDICINE.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

The cheapest, Purest and Best Family Medicine in the World.

An EFFECTUAL SPECIFIC for all diseases of the Liver Stomach and Spleen.

Regulate the Liver and prevent Chills and Fever, Malarious Fevers, Bowel Complaints, Restlessness, Jaundice and Nausea.

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common as bad breath, and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons' Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your Appetite, Complexion, and General Health.

PILES!

How many suffer torture day after day, making life a burden and robbing existence of pleasure, owing to the secret suffering from Piles. Yet relief is ready to the hand of almost any one who will use systematically the remedy that has permanently cured thousands. SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR, is no drastic violent purge; but a gentle assistant to nature.

CONSTIPATION!

Should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache.

FOR
NERVOUS DEBILITY

BY YEARS OF USE!

A valuable Discovery and New Departure in Medical Science. A positively effective Remedy for the speedy and permanent Cure for organic weakness—the deplorable disease resulting from indiscreet practices or excesses in youth or at any time of life—by the only true way, viz: Direct Application acting by Absorption, and exerting its specific influence on the Vesicles, Ducts, and Gland, that are unable to perform their natural functions while this disease pervades the human organism. The use of the Pastille is attended with no pain or inconvenience, and does not interfere with the ordinary pursuits of life; it is quickly dissolved and soon absorbed, producing an immediate soothing and restorative effect upon the nervous organizations wrecked from vicious habits or excesses, stopping the drain from the system, restoring the mind to health and sound memory, removing the Dimness of Sight, Confusion of Ideas, Aversion to Society, etc., etc., and the appearance of premature old age usually accompanying this trouble, and restoring the vital forces, where they have been dormant for years. This mode of treatment has stood the test in very severe cases, and is now a pronounced success. Drugs are too much prescribed in this trouble, and, as many can bear witness to, with but little if any permanent good. There is no nonsense about this Preparation. Practical observation enables us to positively guarantee that it will give satisfaction. It has been in general use for several years and we have thousands of testimonials from patients, as to its value, and it is now conceded to be the most rational means yet discovered for reaching and curing this very prevalent trouble, that is well known to be the cause of untold misery to so many, and upon whom quacks prey with their useless nostrums and big fees. The Remedy is put up in neat boxes, of three sizes. No. 1, (enough to last a month,) $3; No. 2, (sufficient to effect a permanent cure, unless in severe cases,) $5; No. 3, (lasting over three months, will restore those in the worst condition,) $7. Sent by mail, in plain wrappers. Full DIRECTIONS for using will accompany EACH BOX.

Send for Sealed Descriptive Pamphlete giving Anatomical Illustrations and Testimony, which will convince the most skeptical that they can be restored to perfect health, and the vital forces thoroughly re-established same as if never affected. Sold ONLY by Chautauqua Course; Or, C. L. S. C.

[Written for the COURIER.]

Through a personal invitation and earnest request of the editor of the COURIER, I have consented to write a sketch or outline history of the C. L. S. C. (Chautauqua Literary and Scientific Circle), and also a partial list of topics and subjects contained in the Chautauqua Course for the columns of the COURIER, and for the benefit and interest of its many readers.

As an introductory to the above subject, I shall state the discovery of the northwestern part of New York state, where Chautauqua is situated, and the means through which it received its renown and reputation as a place of resort, and a fountain from which floweth an unceasing stream of wisdom and knowledge to supply and nourish the mental faculties of humanity all over our land and country.

The original name that was applied to this lake or its outlet was, "Tchadakoin," which was inscribed upon a leaden plate, which the Indians by stealth obtained from the French who had traversed a portion of country lying south of Lake Erie, as far as the Miami river. From general history we are informed that a company of explorers, consisting of two hundred and four soldiers and fifty-five Iriquois Indians left the southern shore of Canada, and sailed down the rivers and lakes, arriving at Chautauqua county, N. Y., July 16th, 1749, and there established its name. The word "Chautauqua" has been spelled in various forms and ways by different tribes and races, and was only known as a common portion of country until the year 1874, when a high and lofty idea germinated in the mind of an eastern divine, Rev. J. H. Vincent, D. D., then of New York, but now of Plainfield, N. J., and also in the mind of a western man, of Akron, Ohio, viz.: Lewis Miller Esq. These two sages ascended to the lofty plains of Chautauqua and there organized and established a Sunday-School Assembly and launched forth the great Chautauqua idea by fitting up a school, yea, a university for the revelation and study of the Bible doctrines and the advancement of natural science, art and literature. In the assembly, ministers are instructed how to preach and expound the sacred law, enabling them to advance the work of God's church with speed and rapidity. They also instruct Sunday-school teachers and workers in the best methods of instructing and training the minds of the people and revealing the Bible doctrines and preparing them for the future duties that will devolve upon them. Thousands upon thousands who have visited this renowned place of resort do only know the real value and information that can be obtained at these annual meetings, and can realize that its foundation was laid by wise men, and its growth and widespread influence as being wonderful and miraculous in all of its departments. Although to unnumbered thousands who are unable to attend these annual meetings, this association has provided for them by organizing various classes, which they may join and become a member, and by so doing, receive many rich ideas that drop as "diamonds" from the pens of the most noted and able writers of the present day and age of the world, and which may be gathered and treasured by our mental faculties, by employing and devoting our spare moments in this direction.

The most noted, popular and successful of all classes organized at "Chautauqua," is the C. L. S. C. class, which gives its members a "college student's" general outlook upon the world and life and also develops the habit of close, connected, persistent thinking and promotes habits of reading and study in art, science, nature and in secular and sacred literature in connection with the regular duties of daily life.

The course of study prescribed by the C. L. S. C. continues through a period of four years, and requires of its members an average of forty minutes reading each week-day to enable them in nine months to complete the required reading for the year, and granting them a vacation of three months during the summer season, although many of its members read more than the above specified time. The reading course of each year begins with the first of October and ends with the last of June of the following year.

The first class of the C. L. S. C. was organized in November, 1878, designating them as the class of 1882, classing them for the year in which they would graduate, which is announced for August 12th, 1882. At present there are four classes with the following membership, viz: "class of 1882," eight thousand members, "class of 1883," nine thousand members, "class of 1884," six thousand eight hundred, class of 1885 not yet published. These classes are so arranged that they read the same books, topics and subjects each year, whether it be the first, second, third or fourth year's reading of the four years course.

Take for example the class of 1885, organized last year instead of beginning October 1st, 1881, with the same studies which were perused in 1880-81 by the class of 1884, will fall in with the class of 1884, and take for their first year, the second year's reading of the 1883 class. The first years reading of the class of 1884, will thus in due time become the fourth years reading for the class of 1885. Anyone may by applying to Rev. J. H. Vincent, D. D. at Plainfield N. J., obtain circulars and information in regard to the C. L. S. C. and a blank sheet containing ten questions which must be filled out by applicants for membership and be returned to him, and if approved be registered as a student C. L. S. C. and are continued on condition of success in their examinations. If they complete the required reading of the prescribed course in four years, and pass a satisfactory examination they will be granted a diploma by the association. The annual examinations are held at the house of the members and in writing. Memoranda sheets are forwarded to the students who fill them out, and by their written replies the committee on examination can judge whether the students have thoughtfully read the required topics or not. Members should attend the annual meeting at Chautauqua, but attendance there is not necessary to graduates in the C. L. S. C.

To defray the expenses of correspondence, monthly reports, etc., an annual membership fee of fifty cent fee is required of its members. It is also estimated that the required books will not cost each member more than five or six dollars a year. As I have been a member of the C. L. S. C. for the past two years I will here state the subjects and topics that have been read by its members, and also the authors and prices of each book. The Chautauquan is a magazine containing seventy-two pages, and is published from October to July, is devoted to the promotion of true culture and is the organ of the C. L. S. C. in which almost one-half of the required reading is published, and all members are requested to take it, as it reduces their expense of books almost one-half. Price of Chautauquan $1,50. The course of study for 1880-81, comprised readings on the following subjects or divisions published in the Chautauquan viz. 1. "History of early Civilization." "History of the World." "Origin of Nations, and Conversations on Creation.' In books of ancient biography, Cyrus and Alexander, 80 cents. "Church History," by J. F. Hurst, D. D. 50 cents. 2. Literature. Art of speech, vol. 2. L. T. Townsend, 50 cents. "Ancient Classics." Chautauqua text book No. 25, 10 cents. "Tongue of Fire," Wm. Arthur, 35 cents. "Hypathia." Charles Kingsley, 15 cents. English history and literature, Vol. 2, 80 cents, and also other subjects of equal interest and importance. The course of 1881-82 comprises reading in history, literature, science and philosophy, art and religion, and have the following topics annexed to each, viz. 1. History, "Man's Antiquity and Language," Dr. M. S. Terry Chautauqua text book No. 29, 10 cents. "Outlines of General History," J. H. Vincent, D. D. Ch-text book No. 35 20 cents. Mosaics of History, by Arthur Gilman A. M. in Chautauqua readings from Mackenzie's Nineteenth Century, 15 cents. 2. Literature. Art of speech, vol. 4. L. T. Townsend D. D. 50 cents. History of Ancient Literature, Oriental and Classical, J. D. Quackenbos, A. M. $1,00. English History and Literature. vol. 8. 50 cents 3. Science and Philosophy. Readings concerning mathematics, geology, chemistry, laws of health, mental science and moral philosophy, published in the Chautauquan. 4. Art. Outline Lessons on Art, Miss Julia R. B. Forest, Chautauqua text book, No. 32 10 cents. History of art, Miss Forest, $1,50. 5. Religion. God in history and religion in art, Chautauqua. Also other subjects not mentioned above but equally as good. From above statement of prescribed course for the past two years you will observe that my required reading has cost me $10,15; including membership fee $11,15. We could not attend any other school of learning that would take us over the same course of study for ten times the above expense, and give us the same advantages for obtaining wisdom and knowledge as the C. L. S. C. offers to its members. By attending a college a student may receive a better idea of many technical terms in nature and the sciences, and yet if the student fails to realize and establish the fact it profits him nothing. The C. L. S. C. endeavors to present to its members the plainest and richest statements of literature and the various sciences in all of its prescribed course of reading, and if any student fails to thoroughly master any point in reading, he can obtain the desired information by sending his query to the editor of the Chautauquan, Rev. Theo. L. Flood, A. M. Meadville, Pa., and he will answer it in a section of the Chautauquan which is reserved for the above purpose. It is the object of the C. L. S. C. to offer to those who have not had the means to attend college and obtain a good education, the privilege and opportunity of educating themselves, and becoming wiser in the arts and sciences, and to be able to engage in the active duties of daily life. If we closely examine the reports of many of its members, we learn that this circle has on its record students of all nations, tribes and races, as well as ministers, college graduates and those whose education is of a limited character, and these all searching after wisdom and knowledge. This circle has members in all the states in the Union, in Alaska, Mexico, Canada and South America, and across the Ocean in China, Japan and India, yea in almost every nation of our habitable globe. Many other features could be penned concerning this great "Chautauqua course" but I deem the foregoing remarks sufficient for the present time, and shall in concluding say to the readers of this sketch who desire to become more familiar with this great Chautauqua movement, to come and join the ranks of the C. L. S. C. and by partaking of its rich feasts of knowledge and wisdom, be more enabled to prove yourselves a help to the nation, an honor to your country and a blessing to society.

Wabash College.

This excellent institution of learning has just entered on the fiftieth year of its work. It has a reputation for thorough work, second to none in the country. The ability and high standing of its faculty, the character of work done, and the favorable location should be considerations to which those who expect to attend college should give their full thought. Many young men in this county, we are aware, expect to attend a college somewhere and take a more or less thorough course of instruction. To such, we say, give Old Wabash a trial. Write to the secretary, John L. Campbell, at Crawfordsville, and obtain full information as to the merits of this institution. 22-4t.

Cancers Cured.

A. O. Espy is having great success in the treatment of cancers and cancerous tumors. He has treated quite a number of cases in our town and vicinity and has not failed in a single instance. Parties afflicted or having symptoms of these dreaded diseases would do well to consult Mr. Espy. Residence on North Jackson street, Auburn, Indiana. 23-3w.

A Word to Mothers.

Mothers should remember that it is a most important duty at this season to look after the health of their families and cleanse the malaria and impurities from their systems, and that nothing will tone up the stomach and liver, regulate the bowels and purify the blood so perfectly as Parker's Ginger Tonic, advertised in our columns.—[Post. See other column. 24-4t.

New Photograph Gallery.

Call on J. M. Rice & Son, second door east of the postoffice, and see their new instruments and pleasant location. They are prepared to do all kinds of work in the picture line. Enlarging done to order to any size desired. They have a ground floor gallery and it is very easy to get to. They solicit your patronage. Remember the place, second door east of the postoffice. tf.

Surprise Party.

There was a pleasant surprize birthday party at Uncle David B. Olinger's, June 17. The ladies of the Cedar Creek Valley concluded to have a day of rest and pleasure. They came down on the old gentleman like a hawk on a June bug, with a suit of clothes from head to foot, excepting a shirt. I suppose they thought it is warm weather and he did not need any at this time. Mr. Olinger is sixty-nine years old. He is young. Mathusaleh was only nine hundred years older than he. I hired him to take me to the capital of North America, Garrett, to see the sights and arrived at his home at eleven o'clock and he was taken into the room where the ladies were waiting that brought the suit of clothes, to-wit: Mrs. W. Teeters, Mrs. J. Loveland, Mrs. S. Feagler, Mrs. J. Clark, Mrs. A. Bolinger, Mrs. Mary Walborn, Mrs. J. Cupp, Miss Tillie Smith, Mrs. Cal. Olinger, Mrs. G. W. Olinger, Mrs. T. Cochran, Mrs. Joe Cochran, Mrs. P. Miser, Mrs. A. Rakestraw, Mrs. D. Swihart, Mrs. J. S. Olinger, Mrs. D. B. Olinger and Mrs. Sol. Olinger. Cost of suit fifteen dollars and five cents, the amount of other presents and names to-wit: Mrs. M. Houston, of Auburn cash; Mrs. Lew. Bowers, of Auburn cash; Mrs. F. Norris, of Richland township spoon holder; Mr. W. Norris, cash; Mrs. Eli Shull, pair of slippers and two pair of socks; Mrs. N. Askew, cash; Mr. and Mrs. E. Olinger, cash; Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Burns, of Wilmington township handkerchief. Mrs. Mike Good, of Noble county and Miss Sarah Bratton, of Bluffton, made their appearances in due time to save the union by bringing in the flying artillery in the shape of material to make a splendid shirt. The cost of these articles and cash were $5,65; total amount $20.70. The next in order was prayer by the Rev. William Burns, of Wilmington township, and the next trying the suit of clothes on, splendid fit. Next dinner in splendid style, first table 19, second table 20, third table 18, fourth table 21, total 79. Mr. Editor I have heard of the tables groaning under the heavy loads of good victuals, there was none here they were made of good material and loaded with the best the country can afford. Talk about the preachers eating the yellow legged chickens, if they can beat this neighborhood I would like to know how they would do it. The old chickens and young ones, pullets and roosters were cooked splendid, and frosted cakes and pies and other things to numerous to mention. By the time all got around the table and finished eating it looked as though there had been a tornado, and if there was any groaning done it was after dinner. W. TEETERS.

Surprise Party.

The sixth day of the present month, being the sixty-sixth birthday, of our esteemed friend and neighbor, Mrs. Alsina Glasier. Her children determined to surprise her. Every thing possible was done in secret. The eventful day arrived, and to make the surprise more complete, the old lady's son-in-law, Mr. Milton Carnahan persuaded her to accompany him to Spencerville, on a shopping expedition, Mr. Carnahan properly delaying the return until evening. Then judge of her surprise, to find the house brilliantly lighted and rapidly filling with guests. Taking in the situation at a glance, and quickly recovering from her surprise, she presided over the occasion with her usual grace and cordiality. The old lady surrounded by her children, grandchildren and a large concourse of friends, all wishing her many returns of this most happy day, really presented a beautiful and touching sight. The St. Johns Cornet band, delivered the most excellent music of which they are master. The Hogue Orchestra being in attendance, mirth and music ruled the hour, and all went merry as a marriage bell. At ten o'clock, light refreshment of ice cream and cake was served, Mr. and Mrs. Carnahan flitting around among their guests, contributing to their enjoyment as only a kind host and hostess can. At twelve o'clock a delicious supper consisting of six courses, was served on plates, eighty-four guests partook, and ample justice was done the good things set before them. Mr. W. H. H. Carnell, delivered the presentation speech, and was replied to in a few well chosen words by Mr. John Hall. The occasion is one long to be remembered, and was equally enjoyed by old and young. At two o'clock, after expressing their best wishes and hoping this happy old lady, her children, grandchildren and friends might live long and enjoy many such occasions, the guests departed well pleased to their several homes.

WARM SPRINGS, June 12, 1882.

EDITOR COURIER: By your request I will write to you concerning my home in the west. I am pleasantly located on the north bank of an ever flowing mountain stream, and surrounded by snow capped mountains, which of course was a novelty to me at first, but it soon became old. The climate here, tempered by the cool air from the mountains, is delightful, and the atmosphere being so clear and transparent, that small objects can be seen at a great distance and seem but a mile or two away. In this country large tracts of land are yet open, upon which hundreds of horses, sheep and cattle feed during the summer season. In the fall they are turned into the fields where they are fed on hay during the winter. Agriculture is also carried on quite extremely. Oats, hay and potatoes are the chief products. Irrigation is generally neccessary, owing to the porous character of the soil, scarcity of rain and rapid evaporation in high altitudes. In some seasons, however, crops grow without irrigation along the streams. Most of the rain falls in June and July and is soon absorbed, but as the streams all have their sources in the mountains every valley can be easily irrigated from these. The Utah Northern R. R. which is already completed as far as Butte, is to be finished through this place in July, the most of the work on this road is done by men from Utah. I have enjoyed splendid health since I came out here, and think by fall I will be fattened up. JOSIAH SHULL.

"Up in a Balloon."

The writer of the following, in the Steuben Republican, has been there some time during his rugged existence. Do not understand us that he has been "up in a balloon, but that he has joined hands and gone through the tingling ordeal of being mated:

"There's a plot in Fort Wayne to have a couple married on the Fourth of July up in a balloon. The event has already been extensively advertised, but we have no idea that the affair will come off as per bill-board announcement. The groom will weaken at the last moment, and beg to be excused, or get through a motion for adjournment to some church where he can have the ceremony performed with his feet on the ground. The fact is a man needs about all the nerve and gall he's got to go thro' the trying ordeal afoot, without being slung up in a basket and married neither in the heavens above, the earth beneath, or in the waters under the earth. He'll find it will take all the moral courage and stamina he's got to be married in a cathedral instead of a basket tied to a bag of gas. Then again, even if the groom doesn't lose his grip and is willing to risk his neck in the insane project, the minister will, likely enough, demur and hem and haw around a good deal, and talk about tempting providence, and flying in the face of danger, and he will want to get excused, or change pulpits with some other brother or argue that some one else would be a better man in his place. No, this Ft. Wayne balloon marriage will hardly come off on schedule time. If the groom don't kick, the preacher will, and the whole thing might as well be called a draw. But it will be no fault of the lady in the case. Not much. She will be right on hand with her gloves buttoned and her dress hooked up in the back. Women never back out on such occasions. She might jump fourteen feet at the sight of a mouse, but she won't shy the least at a balloon when there's the ghost of a chance of her getting married in it. Women are made of sterner stuff.

The Mails.

The postoffice department has at last become self-sustaining, and the estimate is that it will pay its way and have a surplus of about $2,000,000 at the end of the next fiscal year. The fact shows that postage is too high and ought to be reduced at once. Reduce letter postage to two cents, and do away with newspaper postage entirely. Suppose such changes should reduce the revenues of the department. What of it? Let the deficiency be made up out of any money in the treasury, not otherwise appropriated. Whose money is it? The people's, to be sure; and it is far better to take a few millions of it to increase the circulation of newspapers and reduce the cost of correspondence, that to pay it out, as is now being done, to enrich a set of ring masters who live by preying upon the treasury of the country.

Always Refreshing.

A delicious odor is imparted by Floreston Cologne, which is always refreshing, no matter how freely used. 4t

Torturing Teams.

The following will apply very appropriately to some of our teamsters, and also to a certain fellow who drives his turn on the sprinkler line:

The season of the year when a few Wabash teamsters make a display of their brutal instincts by whipping their horses has arrived. It might be well for Marshal Burrier to keep his eyes open and take in these fellows for cruelty to animals. Every day horses attached to over-loaded wagons pass the Courier office and the poor brutes, having all they can do to drag the burden on level ground, struggle painfully up any little ascent which may be in their road. If they do not pull the enormous loads their taskmakers flay them with their "blacksnakes" until they are driven with wild pain and fright. Horses appreciate kind treatment. When they are well fed and properly dealt with, they pull every pound they can stand, but let an ignorant driver undertake to force them to exert themselves by swearing and using the whip, and they are sure to balk or lunge forward without accomplishing anything toward moving the load. The great trouble with these men who do most of the ranting in this city is, that their animals are poorly fed. Many of the beasts are walking skeletons, and though they may be willing to work, they are unable, from sheer weakness, to do that which is expected of them. Their barbarous masters seem to think that they can exact the same amount of service from a half-starved animal that they would from a strong, high fed horse, and when the creatures do not pull according to the notions of the teamsters, the lash is resorted to. The matter is one which deserves the attention of the authorities. In some cases the treatment of the brutes is outrageous, and the fellows who affect to be "horsemen" and to openly brag of what their teams have done, ought to serve a term on the chain gang. The Courier, now that the attention of the officers has been called to the subject, will watch with interest the effect of the warning upon the owners of teams.—[Wabash Courier.

A Summer Visitor.

What with April frosts, chilly spells in May, and other abnormal meteorological phenomena, the seasons of the year 1882 are in such a confused state, that anything which may be interpreted as a sign of their regular sequence is welcome on that account alone. This is one reason why we are glad to receive the summer number of "Ehrichs' Fashion Quarterly." Another reason is, that the book is full of interesting matter, and is decidedly the most agreeable melange of literature and fashion that has been issued from the press in a long time. The costumes illustrated are sufficiently diversified in style and cost to enable every lady reader to suit both her taste and pocket; and a host of well-executed wood cuts serves to show each fair subscriber the last sweet things in bonnets, the latest efforts in parasols, the prevailing styles of fans, and so on, through the entire range of that delightful science which the fair denominate "Shopping."

The purely literary features of the magazine are excellent. Eben E. Rexford's poem, "The Patter of Little Feet," has a tender pathos of which the greatest of our poets might have felt proud. "The Editor at Home" discusses current topics with a quaint humor in which a strain of earnest purpose is unobtrusively apparent; and a charming illustrated story, entitled "Hard Times" enchains the reader's interest from end to end. Nor is purely instructive literature neglected. The lessons in China-painting are continued, and a beautiful design for a tile is illustrated, with full directions for execution; an illustrated article on outline embroidery introduces a pleasing occupation for summer afternoons; and the laws and methods of archery and lawn tennis are described in a brace of well written articles.

Altogether, we think the "Fashion Quarterly" is a success. Its cost is only fifteen cents a year, and if the publishers propose to give for that price four books of equal merit with the one before us, they quite deserve the success we wish them. The magazine is issued by Ehrich Bros., Eighth Avenue, New York.

New Photograph Gallery.

Call on J. M. Rice & Son, second door east of the postoffice, and see their new instruments and pleasant location. They are prepared to do all kinds of work in the picture line. Enlarging done to order to any size desired. They have a ground floor gallery and it is very easy to get to. They solicit your patronage. Remember the place, second door east of the postoffice. tf.

THE Western Union Telegraph Company has declared a quarterly dividend of 2½ per cent. payable June 15, after the payment of which a surplus of $1,693,081 will still remain.

The House refused to change the existing law on the subject of counting electoral votes for President and Vice President, which practically settles the matter for this Congress.

Gladstone has agreed to an amendment to the repression bill, by which evicted tenants who re-enter their holdings shall not be punished, unless the re-entry is effected by force.

A BOSTON dispatch reports numerous counterfeit $10 Treasury notes of 1875 (greenbacks) in circulation there. They are so like the genuine that it is almost impossible to tell the difference.

MR. KELLY has introduced a bill in Congress to abolish the internal revenue taxes on tobacco, snuff and cigars. If the bill should pass it would cut off about $45,000,000 of [illegible] taxes.

Oppressive plans against the Irish secret societies [illegible] by the new criminal investigation department. Investigations pursued in America are made the basis of the projects.

THE police of London made a big find the other night. They discovered in a stable four hundred bayonet rifles, twenty-five boxes of pistols, and one hundred thousand rounds of ammunition, intended for clandestine transportation to Ireland.

HON. HORATIO C. BURCHARD, the Director of the United States Mint, reports the gold product for 1881 at $34,700,000, and that of silver at [illegible],000. Colorado leads the list, with California second, while Nevada shows less than $9,000,000.

THE four captured bank robbers who raided Brookfield, Mo., recently at noonday, were yesterday sent to the State Prison for twenty-five years each. Such prompt work is something new for Missouri, and encourages the rest of the world to have some hope for civilization in that State.

JUSTICE BRADLEY, of the Supreme Court of the United States, denied the application of Guiteau for a writ of habeas corpus, holding that the court of the District of Columbia had full jurisdiction of the case, and that there were no reasons for granting the writ.

THE New York committee [illegible] for Russian Jews has been obliged to notify the European committee that no more can be [illegible] at present. Eighty vicious or incurably idle Jews have been sent back to Europe as a warning to the European society not to send such people.

THE purpose of the [illegible] Prohibitionists, as declared at their recent State Convention, is to get control of the Legislature in order to submit a prohibitory amendment to the people. They will make independent nominations in every Legislative district where the regular candidates refuse to give a pledge to support such an amendment. The fight will also be carried into the Congressional elections.

[illegible] passed by the House of Congress provides that a duty of fifty cents shall be paid for each passenger, not a citizen of the United States, who shall come by vessel from any foreign port to any port within the United States. The proceeds of this duty will be used in caring for sick and destitute immigrants and sending back paupers and felons.

It is rumored at St. Louis that the visit of President Roberts, of the Pennsylvania Railway, to that burg last week is fraught with interest to railroad men. It is intimated the project of building another bridge across the Mississippi was discussed, earnestly, and that the Pennsylvania Company, Baltimore and Ohio, Chicago and Alton, and Indianapolis and St. Louis Roads are participants in the enterprise.

THE Chicago News shows a singular coincidence which occurred recently in that city. "Being children's day, christening was in order, and a father and son each marched into a church bearing in his arms twins for baptism. Twins are not uncommon in this glorious climate; in fact, nearly every family here has more or less of them; but the appearance at the altar of a father and son, each presenting twins for baptism, does not happen oftener than once in a month or so."

THE new army retirement law takes effect on December 1, next. Twenty-three officers will then be retired. About forty-five would have been retired under the sixty-two-year provision had it become a law. Among those who will be retired on December 1, next, are Surgeon General Barnes and Major General McDowell. Among those granted a year or two more of active army life by the provisions adopted, are General Sherman, Quartermaster General Ingalls, Assistant Quartermaster General Ekin, Chief Engineer H. G. Wright, General Geo. W. Getty and General H. J. Hunt. General Sheridan will, unless he dies, command the army yet, and for several years, too.

Miss Lillie Wagner, of Tiffin, Ohio, while returning from church Sunday evening was so frightened by an approaching thunder-storm that she dropped dead. Miss Zingler, of Dubuque, was terrorized by the hail-storm of Friday night, fell in a paralytic fit, and died Sunday evening.

The household goods of the Brookfield Bank robbers were sold at auction on the streets of Kirksville and almost everything brought enormous prices. One robber was either a doctor or well advanced in the study of medicine. He had a fine medical library, apparatus, and all complete, including the skeleton of a child.

Cairo, Ill., was invaded by a wind and rain storm Sunday afternoon, resulting in serious damage to property. Roofs suffered severely and trees were laid low. Twenty box cars in the Illinois Central yards were overturned. Metropolis was also visited by the storm. Boats in the river were injured and the steamer Jennie Walker sunk.

Fuller particulars of the Iowa cyclone disaster show the destruction is more widespread than at first reported. The storm traveled nearly three hundred miles through the center of the State, everywhere killing, maiming, and destroying. The death list has been increased at Grinnell, Malcom, and other points. Governor Sherman has issued a proclamation calling for aid for needy sufferers, and already subscriptions are pouring in.

Michael Davitt arrived at New York at 7:30 o'clock Sunday morning, and was immediately driven to the Everett House. The Germanic, upon which he took passage, was detained by fogs and icebergs, and the committee of reception failed to meet him at the proper place. To the members of the press he explained the status of affairs in Ireland, and his plans for a two weeks' lecture tour in America.

Mr. Pierce, President of the National Butter and Egg Association, has recently made an extensive tour in Northern Iowa, principally to guage the outlook for dairy products. Pasturage, he finds, has been affected by the unseasonable weather, and a favorable spell is much needed. The season's output of butter will be large, but prices will not be changed unless there is an increased export demand. Farmers in many sections have given up wheat-growing, and attend solely to stock-raising and dairy farming.

On Friday Captain David Allen forced open the door of the Zion A. M. E. church at Jeffersonville, and took therefrom all of the benches, they being the property of Captain A. Howard, in the absence of Elder Tucker, the pastor of that church. As a consequence, services in that church will have to be postponed until the Elder and his congregation can raise sufficient funds to buy new ones.

Daniel H. Weaver, who mysteriously disappeared from Madison on May 18, thus accounts for his absence. He came to town seeking work, was decoyed to the stateroom of a steamboat, was knocked on the back of the head and remained insensible, or but semi-conscious, until he reached Evansville. There he got off the boat penniless, the money he had on leaving home being taken by his unknown assailant. Weaver is a young farmer of good character, and his story is believed.

A Preliminary Caucus.

Harrisburg, Pa., June 21.

One hundred and eighty delegates have arrived. A caucus to determine action will be held this morning.

The Republican caucus was called to order in the State Library room, at noon, by Alexander P. Brown, of Philadelphia, and Judge Fetterman, of Allegheny county was made president.

Judge Jessop offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the State Executive Committee, when organized, be requested to issue a call for a new convention under new rules to complete the State ticket, with full power to take such action on the ticket already nominated as shall be for the best interests of the Republican party of the State.

He believed that unless something was done towards patching up the grievances of the Independents, the Democrats would carry the State, both on the Legislative as well as on the State ticket. He said the charge that nominations in this convention were dictated by one man would have to be met. He denied it also, but yet the Independents made the charge, and it was believed in many places. He was in favor of a new convention out and out. It was no sign of weakness on the part of this convention to endeavor to heal the breaches in the party.

M. Huey, of Philadelphia, spoke in the same strain.

Mr. Carnahan, of Allegheny, opposed the attempt to placate the Independents.

Congressman Fisher favored the completing of the present ticket, which he believed would sweep the State.

After further interchange of views, General McCleary offered the following as a substitute for the resolution:

Resolved, That this convention proceed to complete its ticket by the nomination of a Congressman-at-Large, and that we recommend the Republican State Committee to adopt all honorable means to harmonize the Republican party so as to secure success in November.

It was carried with only a few dissenting votes.

A resolution, empowering the State committee to fill any vacancy occurring upon the ticket, was adopted.

On the first ballot Marriot Brosius, of Lancaster, was nominated for Congressman-at-Large. The vote was as as follows: Brosius, 161; Lilly, 25; Todd, 17; Jacobs, 29.

Lincoln, Neb., June 21.

A mass convention of anti-monopolists is in progress in this city to-day. The purpose is to centralize the anti-monopoly power of the State and organize for action in the approaching political campaign. The representation is not very large, and so far there is a dearth of enthusiasm.

The State Druggists' Association meets to-day. About 100 of the members of the trade are now on hand.

Yesterday William Robom, Lewis Salemna and Barto Santmeyer were killed, and Jacob Baker and Frank Patterson seriously injured, by the falling of a bank of earth and stone at the Mt. Vernon cotton mills, in Baltimore county.

Emigrant Horrors.

Erie (Pa) Dispatch.

On Thursday night about 800 German and Irish emigrants passed through Erie for the West. They were packed in like cattle, and many of them were suffering dreadfully from the overcrowded state of the cars, dirt, tobacco smoke and the hundred other discomforts that these poor people have to endure. One unhappy woman sat with a dead baby pressed to her breast, refusing all consolation, and resisting all efforts to get it from her. She had left the old country to join her husband, who had only preceded her a few months, and the baby, straggled and poisoned by the reeking atmosphere of the cars, had sickened and died. Its little life went out at noon, the reporter was informed, but at the late hour of the train's arrival in this city she was still holding it in her lap, and gazing out of the car-window with a wild look, piteous to behold.

A Rich Soil.

Wall Street Daily News.

"How is soil in Kansas?" asked one of the group as the traveler passed.

"Richest in the world, sir," was the reply. "I know a New York State man who went to Kansas several years ago with only $15 in cash, and he is now worth $20,000."

"Whew! What did he raise, principally?"

"I believe it was a check, sir; but they couldn't exactly prove it on him! Think of a soil that will raise a bank check for $190 to $19,000, and a backward season at that!"

FROM WASHINGTON.

Much interest is felt in the Maine campaign. It is expected that the Democrats will endorse the Greenback nominations, and a strong fight be made, though the Democrats admit that the chances are against them.

The Republicans are delighted at the result of the North Carolina convention yesterday, and say they are sure of six members from North Carolina in the next Congress.

The President has confirmed the verdict of the court-martial in the Flipper case, and West Point swells are happy. Flipper was the only colored officer in the army, and the military snobs who compose the rank of under officers, were bound to to see him out, and did. The charge against him was the misappropriation of funds and conduct unbecoming an officer.

The Ways and Means Committee have decided to hold a meeting Tuesday next to talk about the date of adjournment. Kelley hopes to get the Internal Revenue bill up before that date, and test the sense of the House upon it. If it passes, he will interpose no further objection, and it is probable the date of adjournment may be fixed at about July 15.

The President is somewhat embarrassed to find satisfactory parties for the Tariff Commission who will accept. The expression of those who have accepted leads to the belief that the work of the commission will be more satisfactory than anticipated.

An active opposition to Robeson is developing in his district, and the indications are that [illegible] may be returned in his stead.

Mr. Bigelow, counsel for Mason, called on the Presidennt to-day, and presented a plea for the pardon of Mason. The points presented were presented to the Supreme Court.

President Garrett, of the Baltimore and Ohio, confirms the report of a new cable to be laid, to be operated in connection with the Baltimore and Ohio Telegraph. Work will begin soon.

The indications are that the star-route cases will run well through the Summer, with little prospect of serious results to Dorsey or Brady.

The figures from the Patent Office show that 250,000 patents have been issued by that office, against 150,000 in England during a much longer period.

General Rosecrans, speaking of the Garfield-Chase letter furnished by Mr. Schuckers, says he believes them to be genuine, and that Garfield was "an untrue man;" and his course shaped with the hope of being able to succeed Rosecrans in command of the army.

The Consular reports indicate that the failure of the Tobacco Monopoly bill in Germany will prevent a large influx of tobacco-workers from that country which would surely have occurred immediately upon the passage of the bill.

General Chalmers, of Mississippi, is here. He says if the Republicans make no nomination in his district, he is sure of an election, and frankly says he will have nothing more to do with the Democrats.

It is expected that the combination of Independents and Republicans in North [illegible] will [illegible] in the election [illegible] to succeed Ransom.

The International Revenue Bureau has information that the whisky men are little troubled over the failure of the bill in the Senate, as it really was of little advantage to them in its amended form. The result of the failure to extend the bonded period indefinitely, however, must, they say, be very disastrous, unless Congress can be persuaded to consider it next session and pass the bill as passed by the House this session. Whether it will do so is very doubtful, as it will be a short session. No immediate result is expected, because many distilleries in Kentucky close soon, feeling the season to be ended. Treasury officials say the amount that will be forced out of bond during the year in the [illegible] whisky section will be little over $1,000,000. This will not seriously damage the trade, but if no measure of relief is granted by next session the result will be very serious to the distillers, as it will force very large quantities of whisky to be [illegible] and sold a any price that can be had.

In the House this afternoon Mr. Aldrich [illegible] for a larger appropriation for the Calumet river, the River and Harbor bill giving but $20,000. He showed that the business of the [illegible] as much as other harbors which received a much greater sum. As it is now it is impossible for vessels to get in with a load. The [illegible] navigable fifty miles if properly treated, and is being lined with manufactories up as far as Hamilton, Ind., yet practically nothing is being done to give boats an opportunity to get in with material for them. This improvement is badly needed to make the harbor a refuge for vessels driven past the [illegible] in storms. He moved to amend by making the sum $100,000 instead of $20,000, but the amendment was lost by a vote of 21 yeas to 52 nays.

Nothing is yet determined regarding successors of Wheeler and Phelps on the Tariff Commission. The President's private secretary said this morning that the President still had great difficulty in finding proper persons willing to accept.

Senator Don Cameron has left the city ostensibly for New York, but is supposed to have stopped off at Philadelphia to fix up the plan for the new convention. Nearly all of the Stalwart newspapers in the country are advising a new convention, and Senator Mitchell says the report that the President has so advised is probably true.

President Garrett is here arranging for a fast mail on the Baltimore and Ohio to Chicago and St. Louis.

Opposition to the confirmation of the Tariff Commission is oozing out in the Senate, and the general belief is that the nominations will be confirmed without great opposition.

Lawyer Reed's latest motion in Guiteau's behalf is still in the hands of Justice Bradley, Reed's denial notwithstanding. It is probable there will be a decision next week.

It is said the Grand Jury has found another indictment against General Brady, the alleged Star Route ringster.

A petition has been offered in Congress from the colored people of Kansas, asking that lands in the Indian Territory be thrown open to them.

During the consideration of the River and Harbor bill, Mr. Clark, of Missouri, offered an amendment increasing the appropriation for the Missouri river $20,000. Mr. Holeman, of Indiana, opposed, and offered an amendment reducing the appropriation to $100,000. Messrs. Clark and Clardy spoke earnestly in favor of the increase and Messrs. Page and Holman opposed. Mr. Holman withdrew his amendment and Clark's was voted down. The appropriation of $1,000,000 for the Missouri river was passed.

The talk of the President visiting Chicago seems to be entirely without foundation. Private Secretary Phillips says that there is no probability of the President going, as he finds it impossible to get away anywhere. The talk of a visit to Long Branch is also untrue. He will remove to the Soldiers' Home soon, and remain until the adjournment of Congress, after which he has no definite plans.

The number of bills and joint resolutions introduced in the House and Senate this session is 9,000, and will probably reach 10,000 before adjournment.

Congressman Kelley is attempting to get another consideration for the bill correcting the error in the tariff law on woolen knit goods. As the law now stands, the closing up of the manufactories in this country is inevitable.

A deal of interest is felt in Pendleton's attempt to get a consideration of his Civil Service bill, as the real object is an attack upon the Republican Executive Committee's assessment circular.

Guiteau takes his situation coolly. He still professes a belief that the President will come to his rescue at the last moment. Mr. Hicks, his spirtual adviser, says he believes he will go to the gallows without flinching.

Congressman Kelley is much disappointed over the result of the Republican caucus last night. He thinks the determination to cut out so much of his bill reducing the internal revenue a bad move. He says the income of the Government is dangerously large, and thinks that a large proportion of the internal revenue should be abolished. The bill as agreed to by the caucus, however, is all that could be got through the Senate.

Lawyer Reed says petitions are being prepared in all parts of the country, asking delay in the Guiteau case, and an examination by a commission of insanity experts. One was presented to the President from Boston, signed by a dozen officials of the Insane Asylum.

Government officials find great difficulty in enforcing the Chinese bill. The passport system is difficult to apply to the Chinese, as all look alike, and it is impossible to specifically describe them except as to height.

Census statistics just published show that there are 4,000,000 persons in the United States over 21 years of age who are unable to write. The number is equally divided between white and colored.

It is claimed for linseed that it is more similar to milk in composition than any other food used for stock, and on that accout is much more desirable for young animals.

Cucumbers and mellons that have been grown in beds for tansplanting should not be set out until after the 5th of June, or until surely out of danger of cold nights which check their growth.

Steeping corn in a strong solution of saltpetre twenty-four to forty-eight hours before planting is said to be a protection against mice, squirrels and worms. Copperas in strong solution is also recomended. As a protection against worms, mix half a pint of boiling tar to each peck of corn; stir briskly, so as to give a thin coating to each kernel.

Mr. Bradley, an English writer, recounts an account kept of a pair of birds bringing caterpillars to their nest to feed their young. The calculation made on the count showed that one brood consumed no less than 500 caterpillars in a day. This would dispose of 15,000 a month, and if there were a hundred such nests in a township, the death of 1,500,000 caterpillars would contribute to the life of some 300 birds.

Dandelions are becoming more and more popular. The seed is sown at any time in the spring when the ground can be made ready. The seed is small and delicate, and will not come up well on land that is rough or lumpy, and it is at all times slow in germinating. After the plants are well up thin out, to stand two or three inches apart in the rows. The tops are used for "greens," and the root for root beer and medicine. The yield is from ten to twenty bushels to the square rod, and the price varies from twenty-five cents to one dollar per bushel.

A compost made up largely of soot or wood ashes, with plenty of pulverized hen manure and a little sulphur, is highly recommended by some gardners who have tried it for strawberries that have had their roots partly eaten by the grubs. Some recommend stool or hill culture as making it easier for one to hunt out and find the grubs. The grub usually works but a short distance under ground, and is easily found by one who knows how to hunt. The middle of a warm, sunny day is a good time to look for the grubs, as the leaves from the affected plants will soon make themselves known by their drooping appearance.

Preserving potatoes for the table in summer by slightly heating the surface and thus destroying the eyes was recently suggested in the New England Farmer as a method worthy of experiment. Mr. J. G. Adams, Greene county, Penn., writes the New York Tribune that the plan is practiced in his country to a considerable extent. The eyes are destroyed by simply pouring scalding water over the tubers, which are then immediately dried and put away, when "they will keep indefinitely." Mr. Adams says he knows whereof he speaks, for, being engaged in the grocery business, he has bought and sold potatoes treated by this process repeatedly. It is not too late for housekeepers to give the germ-destroying process a trial the present season

Dancing the Csardas.

Lady Walderglade's Travels.

The Hungarians dance for their very lives. To them the practice of the terpsichorean art is no mere languid and graceful undulation of the figure, but a perfect wild abandon of mirth, and they whirl and spin, and gyrate with the velocity of dervishes, until their long black locks stand out straight, and their faces are ablaze with heat and excitement. Watch them as they preform the csardas—their national dance—to the strange, wild harmony of the cziganok! Watch them as they balance themselves backward and forward while adapting their subtle movements to the measure of the animating strain.

The csardas is essentially pantomimic, and describes by mute action the "unquiet course of true love." The music is at first slow, and the couples walk up and down the room together in a stately manner, and affecting to have made each other's acquaintance and fallen victims to the tender passion, the music grows more lively, and "the courtship" begins in earnest. The lover advances toward his inamorata, she coyly responds, and they spin round together for a few seconds, when, as if thinking she had given him too much encouragement, the maiden retires pouting, whereupon he approaches, but this time she turns her back upon him and dances off in a contary direction.

Following her, however, he overtakes and seizes her round her waist, and away they go again whirling deliciously, until she manages to extracte herself from his grasp. Shy and friendly by turns, now encouraging her partner and now retreating with offended dignity, the lover at length becomes chargined at her caprices, turns his back upon her, with indignant gestures, till the maid, with signs of repentiacne, seeks reconciliation. The music grows faster and faster; the lovers, in the ecstacy of reunion, whirl and twirl madly, nor do they stop until both are quite giddy and out of breath, when, retiring from the scene, another couple takes their place and the performance begins again.

A Wild Man of the Sierra Nevada.

Bodie Free Press.

The wild man of Lake and Bloody canons was in town on Monday. This is his first trip out of the mountains since last December. He has grown much older in appearance since he was last seen and his hair is nearly white. It is said that this man lives in a cave that is entered by a winding, dangerous passage, over one hundred feet in length. Upon this occasion he wears a huge overcoat made from the skin of a brown bear, a buckskin pair of pants and a fur cap. This fierce-looking individual always goes heavily armed and talks as little as possible. He always has a few dollars when he comes into town. Where he gets his money and how he lives are mysteries no one has yet been able to solve It would not be safe to insult him in his mountain haunts.

Taken up by the subscriber at my home, one-half mile south of Hopewell church, in Jackson township, on June 16, 1882, a two-year-old colt, sorrel, with light mane and tail. The owner can have same by calling on me and paying for this notice.

16-3w. MRS. REBECCA MAURER.

Notice to Tax-Payers.

For the convenience and the saving of expense to parties owing delinquent taxes, I will be at the following places at the time named herein: St. Joe, Monday, July 10; Newville, Tuesday, July 11; town of Butler, Wednesday, July 12; town of Waterloo, Thursday, July 13; town of Corunna, Friday, July 14; town of Garrett, Wednesday and Thursday, July 19 and 20. Any one living at or nearer any of the above named places than they do the county seat, can meet me at the time specified and pay without incurring collector's expense. Please avail yourselves of this privilege. L. J. MILLER, Treas.

Auburn, June 27, 1882. 3w.

Stallions for Sale.

Pursuant to an order of the DeKalb circuit court, as administrator of the estate of George Clark, deceased, I will at Auburn, DeKalb county, Indiana, on or after Wednesday, July 12th, 1882, offer to sell at private sale four valuable stallions, described below, with their bridles, halters, sulkies, blankets, etc., and also the stallion barn, situated in the rear of Allen's livery stable, being a part of the personal estate of said decedent.

TERMS: No bid received for less than the appraised value. One-third of the purchase money to be cash in hand, and balance at one year, with interest secured by note with personal or real estate security, waiving valuation laws and payable at First National Bank of Auburn, Indiana. Said stallions are,

First.—"Hiklare," a beautiful dapple gray, six years old, weight 1,800 pounds, and is a full blooded, imported Norman. Was imported by Dunham, the celebrated importer of horses, of Dupage county, Illinois.

Second.—"Prince," a blood bay, imported Canadian Norman, eight years old, weight 1,500 pounds.

Third.—"Frank," a bay Mambrino, seven years old, weight 1,250 pounds, and is a fine roadster.

Fourth.—"Jim," a half blooded gray Norman, nine years old, weight 1,500 pounds, and has the finest herd of colts of any horse in northern Indiana.

Pedigrees can be furnished if desired. All these horses are tractable, sound in every particular, and sure foal getters.

The administrator will take pleasure in showing stock of any and all of the horses, and answer by mail or otherwise all inquiries about them. All are making the season and have all the business they can do. They can be seen at Auburn, after July 4th, next. Private offers are respectfully asked, and the confidence of such will be kept. The right to reject any or all bids is reserved.

—The Courier office was packed with pretty school mams Saturday, who were figuring out the way to pedagogue honors.

—Cannon & Co. have been painting the cornice of the court house and jail. It is an unhandy job, yet the work is well done.

—C. F. Mosier, of the Bristol Banner, was nominated by the republicans of Elkhart county as a candidate for the legislature.

—A suburb town near Chicago, has been named Garfield, and $300,000 have been subscribed to locate locomotive works there.

—Now if some enterprising "forefather" would establish a wood yard, there would be "millions in it" for him next winter.

—The lectures upon Jesse James don't pan out very well. The audiences, in most places, are small and not appreciative.

—A drunken corn doctor, of the "Mickey" persuasion, was directed out of town Saturday, where corns are more abundant.

—Doc. Cowan has purchased a new horse, and the old black mare will be fitted for the rounds at the N. E. I. A. Ass'n. this fall.

—Auburn has only one "culled pusson" within her borders. How many towns with a population of 3000 can can say the same?

—Trade will be somewhat dull until after harvest, but the boys "always pay up" at this time, you know, and we can stand a few weeks of idleness.

—Those of our citizens who attended Forepaugh's show at Kendallville, praise the performance highly.

—At the dispensaries of justice, over which Messrs. Walborn and Ober preside, matters have been dull this week.

—The court house officers stand four democratic and two republicans. After the election there'll be no republicans there.

—Jefferson Grube is still pushing the fanning mill business. A look at his well-filled store room would convince any one.

—Wouldn't it look a little more manly if one of our prohibition temperance "workers" would pay up his last campaign saloon bill.

—Fresh fish in the market. They seem to have lost their "flavor." The meat is hard and dry, and they are not what they "used to was."

—It is easy enough to set up ∴∵ a job so it will look like a fly had ∴∵ settled down on it casually. There might be quite a spec., in trying it.

—If China should really retaliate and shut us out, what a confounded barren ideality the Fourth of July would be without fire crackers.

—A tire came lose on one of Decker's wagons while he was passing through town Tuesday with a load of household goods. It caused some delay.

—The price of stave splints has been raised to two cents a bunch. Even at these figures they are the cheapest kindling in the market.

—Waterloo has a good brass band. The boys don't furnish the ordinary music so difficult to understand, but play the popular pieces of the day.

—The young folks of Waterloo, use our streets for pleasure driving. We are not altogether certain whether it is our level roads or our dandy boys that bring them down here.

—Our citizens do not seem to hanker after pleasure resorts and flat-car excursions so much this season as they did a year ago. Few, if any, have made the "round trip" as yet.

—Now let the town dads make some laws, regarding the firecracker nuisance. It is well enough to fire them on the 4th, but before or after this day it should not be tolerated.

—Surveyor Foltz showed us some fine specimens of mica. It was found in a large stone on the farm of George Pepple, north of town. Specimens of this size are rare hereabouts.

—The warm weather has wilted the Auburn correspondence of the Butler Record. Its a pity that old Sol didn't boil down on him several months ago—its a relief at this late date, however.

—The "Immortal J. N." is pushing himself toward us. We would be very much obliged to him if he would send a dispatch ahead, so our business will call us out of town the day he arrives.

—The American people would do a more providential act by sending money to the Iowa sufferers, instead of "firing it away" on Fourth of July rallies.

—We have neglected to say that Mr. Lobmiller is engaged at C. C. Shaffer's furniture store. Mr. L. has had large experience and certainly understands the trade.

—The Edgerton Herald says, "that a tablespoonful of saltpeter dissolved in a bucket of water and sprinkled on cabbage will destroy the worms without injuring the plants."

—The Montreal Herald building was gutted with a fire last week. The printers escaped in their slippers. They ought to "stick to the rule" and left their slippers under the rack.

—The postoffice and grocery store at Wawaka was burglarized last week. A man named Harry Millin was arrested, and a large lot of the stolen booty found at his residence.

—If about two-thirds of our citizens would either repair or build new sidewalks, the transaction would be more generally appreciated than a free excursion to some pleasure resort.

—If our memory don't deceive us this is about the time of year when cannons go off in the county treasurer's office. Coop Ralston's absence may alter matters this year, however.

—There is a piece of road, on south Jackson street, from Samuel Swihart's to Mr. Ensley's that never has any work put on it, and its the best sixty rods of street within the corporated limits of Auburn.

—Rev. J. F. Winters is now pastor of the Reformed church in this place. He also preaches a part of the time in Springfield township, Allen county, and in district No. 2, Concord township, in this county.

—Dr. Houghton, of Spencerville, whom Jacob Baltz beat so terribly a short time ago, is said to be in a doubtful way to recover. There have been no arrests made as yet. Baltz and his pal should suffer the consequences of the law.

—J. M. Zent is now agent at the Wabash depot.

—Don't fail to secure one of those dollar mirrors at the Book Store.

—Corn is worth eighty cents a bushel wholesale, and oats fifty cents. It is expensive to keep stock in town.

—When the Garrett boys walk down the Baltimore to this place they say, "We're going down town," and after taking a few schooners they go up town again.

—The Columbia City papers complain of their business men not having the enterprise to advertise, and the consequence is that the most of the dealers go to Fort Wayne to make their purchases.

—Our saloon men did not open the back doors last Sunday, but the boys took time by the forelock and got their flasks filled Saturday night. It was a little more quiet than usual on the streets Sunday.

—Angola, according to the local papers, will only have preaching in one of the three churches in a short time. That must be a terribly wicked town. Auburn has seven churches and each have services regularly every Sabbath.

—The temperance meeting that was announced for Waterloo, Friday next, has been postponed to a more convenient season, so as to allow all who wish to go to Rome City to attend the temperance meeting there.

—We were shown a pair of sewed double decker shoes made for Buck Allen, at Billy Little's shop that were a fine piece of workmanship. Buck has got a foot like an "eartquake" but he takes pride in showing the shoes.

—Go some where and honor the day of Americas independence. Don't get drunk and make a public jackass of yourselves, but "hook on" to a "gal" with a white dress and carry a camp chair on the other arm for her convenience.

The Elm tree that stands in the center of Thirteenth street, between Main and Jackson, is certainly a beauty. Its branches reach from one side of the road to the other, and it is the most exact and properly shaped tree that we have ever noticed.

—The new school house is going up gradually. The building will be twenty feet larger than it was originally, makikg one of the finest structures in the state when completed. Parties from Butler have the contract for laying the brick.

—Through a special invitation the writer gazed upon Bab Lewis' tomato patch, and we have come to the conclusion that it is lawyer Shaffer who don't know the difference between tomatoes and rag-weed. Bab has got the best garden in town.

—Samuel Ralston, esq., has withdrawn from the cares and toils of business life. He retires with the honors of a shrewd and energetic man, and now in his old days of grey hairs and worn limbs the Courier wishes him much comfort and enjoyment.

—How doth the little rooster-roach, around the sanctum roam. He eats our paste and drinks our ink, and makes himself at home. But editors should not resent, the pretty creature's whim; their able pens were never meant to put a head on him.

—The most dilapidated, rickety, old side walk on Main street is along the Knoor property. If the owner of this real estate has not style enough to either repair or build a new one, it is the duty of the town board to have the marshal do so.

—When hard times overtake a man; when he has been unfortunate or indiscreet in his business matters; when he is generally down at the heel, in debt and out of money, nothing will get him out of the suds so easily as to sit down, twiddle his thumbs and complain.

—The strawberry crop in and around this place seems to be somewhat short. If a man wants to let a quart of this delicious fruit melt in his mouth he must put up sixteen cents, while they are quoted at towns surrounding us for eight and ten cents. Why this difference?

—The sun fish brigade covered the banks of Cedar creek again last Sunday. If the marshal would walk down there with a double-barrelled shot gun, loaded with "cannon balls," he might induce some of those youngsters to be a permanent member of a thriving Sabbath-school.

—The sidewalk in front of the court square is now dirty from the stamping of horses feet. Ladies with trains are obliged to elbow their way through the crowd on the opposite side, or hire a cheap boy to carry the rear end of a dry goods store over the most public walk in town.

—Those who want to speed their horses can find a good piece of road, nearly eighty rods in lenght and free from crossings, on South Jackson street. The inhabitants may "kick" a little about raising the dust, but you can inform them, in a polite and pleasing way, to "pull down the blinds."

—Quite a sensation is being had at Treaty, near Wabash, wherein a reformed temperance clown named Wm. Wohlgamuth has fallen in love with Mrs. Emma Malloy and proposes to leave his wife, family and home, and make stringent efforts to wed Emma. Mrs. Malloy is going to have the fellow arrested.

—Blank and pass books, memorandum and miscellaneous books at lowest prices, at the book store.

DIED.

J. H. Ehlers, a prominent druggist of this place, died last Thursday. We have not had time to get a correct statement as to the cause of his death, but we are of the opinion that it was occasioned by close confinement to business and hard study. Mr. Ehlers was thoroughly educated in his profession, an honest, peaceable citizen and by zeal, industry and good management accumulated considerable property. He was a prominent member of the Baptist church, and labored earnestly for its growth and prosperity.

Harvest.

From interviews with several farmers we learn that the golden grain will be harvested about the fifteenth of July. The fields generally throughout this county, that were well fertilized and planted, give indication of a promising crop. There are some, however, that will fall short of the average, owing to the fact that the ground was not in a condition to produce anything. Since the recent rains corn is doing spendidly and our farmers look forward for an average crop. Oats appear well and in fact all kind of grain and vegetables look thrifty.

The Fourth.

The 106th national anniversary of America's independence will receive its usual honors next Tuesday. There is no doubt but that many accidents will take place on that day as has been invaribly the experience of the past—however, the Courier hopes they will be few, especially in the villages of DeKalb. The largest portion of our citizens anticipate "taking in" Fort Wayne, to see the "fire works" and hear the bands send ringing thro' the air,

> The star spangled banner,
> O, long may it wave,
> O'er the land of the free, and
> The home of the brave.

There are lots of advantages in Wayne, where the festive youth can find "fun" and the gray-haired granger have a day of recreation and enjoyment. The railroads will furnish half fare tickets.

A Vicious Horse.

Last Monday morning while James Everly was riding one of Clark's stallions to Corunna the saddle turned, when near the stave factory, and Jim. "took a tumble." After he had wiggled himself in standing position he proceeded to "thump" the horse because the saddle turned; but the animal wouldn't have it that way and resented the blows. During the battle the stallion got Mr. Everly's thumb between his ivories and amputated the same with "neatness and dispatch." Jim. postponed his Corunna trip, and is now giving his time and attention to a deceased member of the right hand.

Potato Bugs.

The festive little animals are crawling about the potato vines in job lots, doing their annual mischief. The gardner, with a tin pan and a hickory club, is gathering them in, yet they do considerable damage after a fellow is willing to swear that he's got 'em all. Potota bugs don't stay single and are getting down to the Indiana style of doubling up. It will be seen by the following that they understand the "catch:"

> A tender young potato bug
> Sat swinging on a vine,
> And sighed unto a maiden bug:
> "I pray, won't you be mine?"
>
> Then softly spake the maiden bug,
> "I love you fond and true,
> But oh! my cruel-hearted Par
> Won't let me marry you."
>
> With scorn upon his buggy brow,
> With glances cold and keen,
> That haughty lover answered her.
> "I thing your Par is—green."

They jumped the country.

Explanatory.

We have been informed, in an indirect way, that one or two of the boys feel somewhat hurt over the item in last week's Courier regarding the stolen goods. We stated several weeks ago that the articles were stolen and we were threatened with prosecution if we did not rectifiy our assertion. We don't wish to uphold anything but veracity and virtue, neither do we care to misuse or trample down those who have been so unfortunate as to slip from the honored path of life. In the sense of manhood, free from partiality and the duty of an editor we recalled our incorrect statement, and if the writer of that item harmed the feelings of a single individual, we humbly beg their pardon. We were just as innocent of any personal point as was Mary's little lamb when it trotted into the school room.

Farmers, Read.

We learn by the Wabash Courier, a reliable and out-spoken paper, that a gang of theives and swindlers are preambulating the country selling sulky plows. In Wabash county a large number of farmers have been duped from one to five hundred dollars. One Cahill is the manager of the gang and is said to be a fraud "in the first degree." It is not necessary for our farmers to deal with traveling swindlers. Auburn has three first-class agricultural houses namely, Ensley & Harter, Snyder & Culbertson and Kiblinger & Co. These firms are headed by gentlemen of ability, honesty and uprightness, and send out agents who can be relied upon for truthful statements regarding the machinery they offer for sale to the innocent tiller of the soil. We hope our rural readers will remember this warning and deal altogether with home tradesmen.

Taken In.

The Courier has time and again insisted upon its readers to "steer clear" of all kind of gaming sharks; but it seems as though our good advice is not appreciated nor adhered to very closely. One day last week a minister of the gospel was waiting for a train at the Junction, and, we suppose, being divided from his flock became weary and lonesome. He laid aside his "Godly morality" and interested himself in the tricks of some three-card monte men who were also waiting for a (sucker) train. The divine said it was beyond his comprehension (and we think it was) to see through the game. He was induced to stroll to the woods, and there beneath the shade of some huge oak tricks were shown him that the heart must believe when the eye is deceived. He became so interested that he wagered his gold watch and, of course, the light-fingered curs "raked it in." We could not learn his name, but are told that he came from the Buckeye state, and the people over there will please join in prayer, after which they may sing, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

Let 'im Swing.

Charley Guiteau will dance a double jig between heaven and earth to-morrow. When Booth assasinated Lincoln the democratic party had to shoulder the responsibility, and he was followed and slain in a short time after the deed was committed. Guiteau, a stalwart republican, shot Garfield and this "great" party have kept him for a year, during which time money, talent and every other means have been used to set the villian at liberty. We hope these truths will be considered by the former voters of this organization.

—If the demand for the Courier keeps up its present rate we will have to employ a full-grown Coon to pull off the edition. Each week, for some time past, we have been obliged to send half sheets to our exchanges, which, we know, is not highly enterprising, yet it beats none at all considerable. We will endeavor, however, to run our list in full size, if we have to start a paper factory to accomplish our end.

—During the "heated term" the stream of water, coming from the town pump hardly ceases. As fast as one party gets his supply of God's beverage another is holding out his hand for the cup to quench the "raging thirst." Probably there is no well in the country that supplies the amount of water the "town pump" does.

—A crowd of men congregated in front of the postoffice Saturday evening and held a spirited argument in regard to the tight-rope performance to be given by Charles Guiteau, tomorrow, at Washington. We are sorry to state that the cowardly assassin had one man in the party who thought it would be a gross injustice to hang him.

—There was a festival at Erick Chapel, Allen county, last Saturday, for the benefit of the band at that place. Ice cream and other refreshments were served. They cleared about $15. The following are the names of the members of Erick Chapel Band: W. H. McCrory, leader; J. L. Grub, 2nd E flat; Oliver McCrory, 1st B flat; Wm. Muller, 2nd B flat; Frank Yahney, 1st alto; Joseph Garman, 2nd alto; Chas. Nettlehurst, 1st tenor; Oddie Yahney, 2nd tenor; Frank Garman, baritone; Sellie Viberg, trombone; Geo Garman, tuba; Geo. Warner snare drum; John Hensinger, base drum.

—Within the past year the people have been tormented with dead beat insurance agents, lightning rod swindlers and now the country is infested with patent cement men, who have been getting in their work on quite a number of the citizens of other counties. We warn all the readers of the Standard against these pests, who deserve to wear striped clothes in the States prison, and do honest work the balance of their natural life time.—[Kendallville Standard.

Died.—On Saturday, June 24, at his residence in Fairfield township, Henry Bickel, aged 58 years, 1 month and 16 days. He was buried at Fairfield Center Sunday last; Rev. F. F. Christine, of Waterloo, preached the funeral sermon. The attendance at the funeral was among the greatest ever known in that part of the county as the deceased was an old resident, well known and highly respected.

—The temperance congress meets at Rome City this week, June 29 and 30, and July 1. Among the speakers who are expected, are Hon. Wm. Baxter, Dr R. T. Brown, G. W. Bain, Samuel Dickie, Emma Molloy, Hon. Gilbert DeLaMatyte and others. We understand there will be reduced rates on all the trains by which Rome City can be reached.

—The Wabash Courier says: "A subscriber writes us that he has discovered an almost infallible remedy for heaves in horses. It consists of one peck of pulverized clay mixed with a half bushel of bran, and divided into three doses. The remedy possesses the merit of cheapness if nothing else."

—The Republicans had a meeting in the soldiers hall Monday evening. We don't know exactly what the "dodge" was intended for and wasn't interested enough to go over; however, a "cordial invitation was extended to all." Mr. Hubbell, delivered an interesting address.

—Dr. Shepherd makes his next monthly tour to Waterloo next Tuesday and Wednesday, July 4 and 5, and proposes to meet any of his friends and patrons desiring to consult him in Auburn, Monday afternoon, July 3.

—Before you buy a baby carriage or boy's wagon, see me and learn what I can do for you, as I have the largest stock and lowest prices.

M. B. Willis.

"PUT YOURSELF IN HIS PLACE."

ALICE CARY.

O men who are good, who are honored and great,
Be kind to your brothers of lowly estate,
If masters, then be not in tasking severe;
If rulers, then rule men in love and not fear;
And if ye be fathers, wise, learned and strong,
Lead the little ones tenderly, slowly along;
Ere you sneer at the humble, or punish the base,
Pause and think for a while, "Put yourself in their place."

Fair lady, so haughty; so chaste, and so cold,
Kept safely from harm in love's sheltering fold;
Ere you turn from your frail, erring sister with scorn,
Think how she was tempted, and how she was born;
Her ruin may date from a smile or kind word,
The first that her poor, hungry heart ever heard,
Then pause, ere you taunt her with sin and disgrace—
How if you had been tried? "Put yourself in her place!"

Proud man, who the white robes of ermine enfold,
As you weigh others' sins in the balance you hold;
Ere you crush the last spark in a heart doomed to bleed,
Let mercy come in for a moment and plead;
Ere you sentence "for life," a poor brother to dwell,
With the ghosts of the sin that shall people his cell,
Think why you are honord, and he in disgrace,
What is hid in your heart? "Put yourself in his place!"

"Put yourself in their place!" Yea, have mercy on all
Who through love or through hate, good or evil shall fall;
Who knows, in the light of a judgment divine,
Which soul shall be whitest, the sinner's or thine?
Fear to judge lest you stand at the heavenly door,
To see harlots and publicans go in before,
While you cover with guilty confusion your face,
And cry when too late, to be put in their place!

A BORN ARTIST.

From the summer in which the Barberrys took a young artist to board with them, who, when he went away, presented his paint-box to the admiring boy who had followed him about from dawn until dark, peace fled the Barberry residence. Fences, barn-doors, halls, goodness knows what! bore the trace of figures, trees, cows, and buildings in all colors of the rainbow. When scolded, Barberry, Junior, only replied, "Well, then, give me canvases and paint-brushes. I want to be a painter."

"What kind of a business does thee think painting would be for a man?" asked Quaker Grandmother Barberry. "To sit twiddling thy fingers all day at the easel! If thee doesn't want to be a farmer, we'll 'pentice thee to thy uncle Charles, the hatter. That's light and easy, and thee is delicate."

So the Barberrys, taking counsel together, decided that grandmother had a "call to speak," and placed Dudley with the hatter.

He worked patiently enough, but painted more than ever in the evenings, for Uncle Charles was liberal, and he had a little money of his own in those days.

On Christmas he came home, and was received kindly, and found his little cousin Clara in the house—an orphan in a black frock, whose parents had been lost at sea.

The child liked the boy very much, and he painted her old doll's face into new beauty for her, and put a red flower on the back of the doll's chair.

She admired his work very much as he admired that of the artist who had given him his colors. He was a hero to her, and a genius, as well as the kindest boy living.

Wandering about the house one day he found a great pottery pie-dish, and forgetting its purpose, spent a whole bright morning painting upon it a splashing but spirited likeness of his mother's favorite geranium, which stood in a pot on a stand.

It was a wonderful success in the eyes of little Clara; and, indeed, it was not bad, for a little practice goes a good ways with a born artist, and a winter of study without a master had greatly improved the young fellow's work.

"You're a great, great artist, Dudley," said Clara. "I think you will be famous someday. I've read the 'Lives of Famous Painters.' The big brown book in the case in the parlor. When you are grown up, Dudley, you will remember what I say."

She was 13, Dudley was 16. He lifted up his head from the work and looked at her.

"If ever I am, Clara," he said, I hope I shan't have to remember you. I hope you'll be there where I am. I never knew anybody before who understood me."

A voice sharp and shrill with anger broke in upon the pleasant talk—Aunt Martha's voice—"Gee-rusalem! Dudley has spoiled the biggest pie-dish!"

That afternoon Quaker Barberry whipped Dudley. That evening the boy did not come to supper. Later on, when the moon had risen, little Clara, who had gone to her own room to cry, heard a tapping at the window. She opened it and looked out. Dudley stood there.

"Clara," he said, "tell me—do you think it was right that I should be whipped at my age?"

"Right!" sobbed Clara. "Oh, it was wicked—very wicked!"

"No one shall ever do it again," said Dudley. "Clara, I am going to be a great artist. It's in me, I know, and don't forget me, Clara; I'll come back; and, oh, Clara, I cannot bear to leave you."

"Leaning over the sill, the child put her innocent arms about the boy's neck."

"Don't go away," she said; "it would break my heart!"

And he kissed and her and ran away.

There was sorrow in the house on Christmas morning, and the pie went uneaten, for Dudley was gone, and he had left a little note in which he declared his intention of returning no more.

He never did come back. His mother, who loved him more than he knew, shed bitter tears as Christmas day came around each year. The father, who had flogged him, grew old repenting it. There was a general impression in the family that Dudley had not been a good boy, but the doubt as to his fate softened their thoughts of him. Probably he was dead. Poor old Grandmother Barberry believed that he had starved to death.

When Clara married—yes, I mean it—when Clara married the consumptive young clergyman from Bristol, and went away, she went up to the garret to look for a winter cloak, and found there the pie-dish yet brilliant with its geranium. And she sat down on the floor and cried over it, and remembered the innocent child love she had given the painter, and then, wiping her eyes, carried the dish down stairs and put it into her trunk. It was a souvenir, if a melancholy one, of the past.

"If he is not dead, he must have forgotten me," she said to herself. "He is 25 years old now if he lives."

And, though she highly respected the Rev. Jacob Bird, she sighed once or twice even on her wedding-eve.

Settled in Bristol, she was happy. She liked the people she met. One day somebody saw the pie-dish. It was an artistic lady, who had gone to take her hat off in the spare-room of the the parsonage.

"What a lovely plaque!" she cried. "But why don't you have it glazed? It will be spoiled."

The pie-dish, promoted to plaquehood, was glazed next week, and on its back was painted the name of the boy who, from the Barbary point of view, had spoiled it.

The Rev. Jacob Bird died young. He was good to his wife while he lived, and she mourned him; but there had been no romance in their courtship, and they had never been congenial.

The widow recovered her placidity soon and lived contentedly on her small income, amid a circle of attached friends. The last survivor of the Barberry family—Dudley's mother—came to live with her, and Mrs. Bird had pulled two gray hairs out of her curly black hair, when the great bazar of St. Susan's Church took place, and a committee called to beg her to contribute something.

"I have a plaque," she said. "It was painted long ago by somebody who must have become a very great artist if he lived, I think. I'll give the plaque. The more I see of art the better I know that it is good, and there are associations with it that make it painful to aunt to see it."

The committee expressed their thanks, and the "pie dish" went to the fair, where it was greatly admired.

Now, Dudley Barbery had not starved to death on the road, as his grandmother always believed. He had sold his watch, had lived until he found his old friend the artist, had become his pupil, and had gone to Italy with him.

While unknown to the people of his little town, he had made a name in the great world of art. He had made a moderate fortune also, and one day he went back to his home, expecting to find all the Barberry's there—a little older, of course—and to become the pride of the family.

Instead, he found the house occupied by strangers, and was told that his parents were dead. His informant was a stranger, who did not know who he was, and who thought she spoke the truth, and he did not stop to ask questions of those who could have told him the truth.

The woman had also told him that Clara was married, and he left the town that night, feeling at once guilty and ill-used.

He made his way to Bristol soon after, and was taken, rather against his will, to the ladies' bazar at St. Susan's Church, where some pretty girls besought him to buy pincushions at prices that would have horrified even a Duke.

Among the prizes were a Topsy doll with one arm, and an original poem by an unknown lady.

At, last, roaming about among the stalls in the bewildered manner peculiar to single gentlemen at fairs, he saw a pretty figure, and a pretty face framed in a widow's cap, standing at a table, and over her her head, suspended against a dark drapery, an object which startled him.

Could it be? Yes it was. He knew every stroke by heart.

He stopped and gazed at it. The lady turned toward him.

"Shall I have the plaque taken down?" she said. "Would you like to look at it closer?"

"Thank you," he answered, looking at her oddly. "I can see it very well, and I should like to buy it, though it interests me rather as 'an old acquaintance' than as a work of art. I once spoiled a pie-dish something like that style. It must be imagination, I suppose; but I could swear that was the dish itself."

Then he paused, for the widow clasped her hands, looked at him with her eyes full of tears, and answered, "Oh, Dudley, it is the dish! How could you use your poor old mother, and all of us so badly? And what a great beard you have grown!"

The "plaque" went home under the arm of its purchaser; on the other rested Mrs. Bird's little hand. Of course, you can imagine the rest.

The famous artist is no longer a bachelor. Clara is his wife. His happy mother makes her home with them, and the greatest treasure of their household is the "pie-dish."

Models for Artists.

New York Tribune.

A slight figure flitted in at the door of the Academy of Design the other day and disappeared into an inner room. She had a rosy face and bright eyes.

"That is one of our models," said the Professor, rolling his eyes at the door. "A great change has taken place in public opinion concerning the use of living models," continued the Professor, willing to talk. "Ten years ago there was an outcry against it. People said it was scandalous. Posing being a new thing, it was hard to get a model of either sex. Now you can get hundreds, and engagements are made weeks in advance."

"What pay do they get?"

"When the life class was first established we had to pay $1.50 an hour; now the regular price is fifty cents an hour. Models pose from twelve to twenty hours a week. They are changed every two weeks so as to give the students a change of subject. Men are better models than women, as they are less easily fatigued."

"How long does the model stand without resting?"

"An inexperienced one only twenty minutes at first. Stand in one position five minutes without moving a muscle and you will get some idea of how tiresome it is."

"Do they show much embarrassment?"

"So much that the muscles are as rigid as iron, and they become drenched with perspiration. But after posing two or three times the embarrassment wears off. It becomes merely routine business."

"Do many make it a profession?"

"There are several men who do nothing else. They pose here at the Academy, at the Art Students' League and in private studios. Most of our female models are young women who work in workshops and factories. They receive small wages and think it a great piece of fortune if they can earn $10 a week extra by posing. They invariably give fictitious names.

"Some curious bits of romance have come under my observation," the Professor resumed, after a pause. "A pretty little brunette came in one day and asked for an engagement. She was in straitened circumstances, but did not disclose her history. She was so sweet-tempered that she became a great favorite. I have never seen any one so ambitious to earn money. She would pose eight hours a day. It made her grow pale with fatigue, but she would not give up. Well, it turned out that she was a married woman. She belonged to a good family in New Jersey, and was a mere girl when she married a Japanese, the son of an ex-Minister from Japan. The husband spent all his money, was thriftless and earned nothing. She had to keep him. She frequently posed for artists in their studios. A richly dressed lady came in one morning and inquired for her. The model, she said, was her niece and she intended to make the heiress to her property if she could be found. After a two days' search the model was traced to a private studio, where she was posing for an artist and his wife. This was the last I heard of the pet model.

"It is always the whip of necessity that drives people to posing. One day a woman of refinement made an application. She was handsomely dressed, wearing a seal skin sacque and a silk dress. Her face was pale and careworn, and she said she had not had enough to eat. Her story was that she had married well, her husband having an income of $6,000 a year. When he died the fortune they possessed took wings. She said she had tried copying and other methods of earning a living, but she had not met with success. Her figure had always been admired for its grace of outline. Why should she not pose?"

"Do you have any boys for models?"

"One of the best subjects we have ever had was a young boy. He had a form like Apollo. His father was a down-town banker, who was ruined by the panic of 1873. This model, whom I met in the street yesterday, has now a responsible position as a bank clerk. One of our students posed last winter. He was from Maine, and had to depend entirely upon his earnings. This young man is one of the most promising in the academy. All kinds of people drift in—people you would never dream of. One of the handsomest models is an itinerant Methodist preacher. He has the form of a gladiator."

Mrs. Douglas's Tea Cups.

St. Louis Globe-Democrat

A story has been going the rounds of the press lately attributed to Mrs. Senator Bingham—if any historian can remember such a senator—that infringes too closely on the life of Mrs. Stephen A. Douglas to be let pass unmolested. The tradition-tellers and the legend-lovers of Washington have always remembered the pretty and graceful ways of Mrs. Douglas, and never ceased to hold her up as the model of a statesman's wife. Her tact and her amiability were boundless, and although when she married the Little Giant she was very young and much his junior, she adapted herself to the position from the start so thoroughly that no wife of twenty years' experience in public life could equal her. For every friend, for every constituent, for every enemy, of Senator Douglas she had just the right thing ready to say, and, with her wonderful memory for names, faces and places, she was never without some personal inquiries to make of each stranger. Her social instinct was as marvelous as the gift of second sight, and when she accompanied Mr. Douglas on his famous journey through the South to visit his mother, there was not a person encountered in all that tour that she could not have recognized at sight and called by name, had they entered her parlor a year later.

Mrs. Douglas's popularity was wonderful at that time, and her face and winning ways made friends right and left for the Senator, at that time a candidate for the presidency. At one of her receptions in Washington a great, shy, awkward constituent from the most rustic region of Illinois, presented himself in Mrs. Douglas's doorway, sent up there from the Capitol by the Senator who had assured him that his wife would be delighted to see him. The visitor was anything but a parlor ornament, a rude, unpolished son of the prairie, unused to any of the ways of society, but a power in the politics of his home, and a man whose influence could be of vast assistance to Mr. Douglas. Entering the room gave him a nervous chill, Mrs. Douglas's pretty greeting threw him into a fever, and her inviting him out to the refreshment-room completed a case of palsy. Ignoring his trepidation, she chatted away to him herself, paid no attention to his stammering refusals, and poured out the tea in some miraculously little cups of egg shell Sevres. Grasping the fairy calyx in his fingers for a first sip, the delicate bit of Sevres was crushed to pieces and the hot tea poured in a stream over Mrs. Douglas's silk train. With a gay laugh the lady said: "How brittle they are! just look at mine," and with a mighty effort she broke another cup between her fingers. Reassured the constituent drew his breath and found himself at ease, while that incomparable hostess talked to him; asked about his mother, his wife and his children, all of whom she remembered so well and called by name. That man went home to work for, vote for and swear by Stephen A. Douglas, and way back of his political convictions lay the pieces of those two broken teacups.

DOGS.

Some Valuable Animals—Canine Stories.

Detroit Post.

The smallest and most perfect toy dog in Detroit is Dr. Brooks' black-and-tan, a gift from the popular actress, Miss Mary Anderson, and weighing not over two and one-half pounds. The smallest black-and-tan in the world is believed to be the property of a Chicago lady. This atom weighs from one pound to a pound and half at its heaviest. Its skin is like the finest silk, its eyes project like marbles, its legs resemble leadpencils, and its feet are the most perfect and curious things alive. It reposes in a basket lined with gold and cardinal satin, wears a collar studded with diamonds and emeralds, with "Baby Mine," its pseudonym, inscribed on a gold plate tipped with a gold bell, and is fed from a saucer of Dresden china. The finest English pug-dog, which is English only by an improvement in the cross—the breed being Holland Dutch—is owned by Mrs. Edwin A. Poe, of Philadelphia. George is an imported dog, and is valued as a prize-winner. The dog known as Salisbury, the winner of fifty-six cups and first prizes, stands without a rival in the world as an English mastiff. In size he resembles a young calf, is a perfect fawn color, magnificent in proportions, kind and intelligent disposition. This dog is owned by a Mr. Padelford, Yonkers, N. Y. The finest bull-dog is white, the winner of first prize at London, Eng., Lowell, Mass., and Pittsburgh, Pa., and valued by his owner, James Mortimer, of New York, at $10,000. The finest English street in the world is conceded to be Mr. A. H. Moore's pure Laverick dog Thunder, valued at $10,000. The best pointer is presumed to be King Bow, the winner of the many first prizes, and owned by Dr. Saunders, of the Detroit Kennel Club, who has some of the finest young setters in the country at his dog farm in Pamtramck. Bow is a beauty! He is a son of the famous Rackett, now owned by James A. Goodsell, proprietor of the New York Daily Graphic. Goodsell bought Rackett of James E. Long, Detroit, paying for him $500. Bow and Sultan are by odds the two handsomest and best trained dogs in the Detroit Kennel at the present time. Mr. Long has sold many valuable hunting dogs Coin brought $600, and a young dog, Bluestone, son of Rackett, brought $300, while Coin the second was sold for $500.

Perhaps the most useless dog, next to a cast-iron specimen, is the Dalmatian hound, or the spotted coach dog, which runs like clockwork between the wheels of a carriage or the fore legs of a horse, and the most artificial of animals, rarely having any intelligence other than the instinct of race, and no affection. A story is told of a London dog vender, who sold one of these animals to a gentleman, who in a short time returned with a perfectly white animal. "Oh, I forgot to tell you," said the former owner, looking him over, "an umbrella allus goes with that dog. I see you've been a wetting of him!"

A very good story is told of a coach dog that was nearly eaten by a huge Newfoundland which was disgusted with the creature's airs. The owner of the coach dog picked him up, took him home, and selected a large white bull dog from among his pack he painted him to exactly imitate the coach dog. Then he walked out with the innocent looking dog at his wheels, and put himself directly in the way of meeting his enemy. The Newfoundland saw him, and said to himself, "Confound your impudence; I'll finish you this time," but the result was so different from what he anticipated, that we draw a curtain over his tangled remains.

Dr. Royce contributes the following to a late number of the American Field: "Do dogs think and reason? has often been asked. Cases enough have been cited to prove the affirmative, but additional proof will serve to make the fact still stronger. A day or two since a fine young beagle, belonging to the Detroit Kennel Club, thrust her head through a picket fence. The space between the pickets was smaller below, and when she made an effort to withdraw her head she found herself fast. She set up a most piteous cry, which attracted a couple of boys, who went to her rescue. They were on the side of the fence where the head was, and after trying to get her out, but not succeeding, were about getting over the fence when Grace, a beautiful pointer, came bounding out of the kennel, and taking in the situation at a glance, rushed up to the imprisoned beagle and putting her forepaws above her, lifted her up and out of the trap in a very graceful and human way, as handily as a mother could have extracted a child in like condition. Grace has always been noted for her high order of intelligence. The beagle, after finding herself free, expressed her thanks in a doggy way, while Grace walked off quite modestly, as much as to say, "I have only done my duty."

How to Talk to Children.

Brockton Gazette.

One day I sat in a car seat on the Saugus branch of the Eastern road, behind a pale, careworn lady who was taking a little boy from Boston to Malden. As the little boy was of a very inquiring mind, and everything seemed to attract his attention. I could not help listening to some of the questions.

"What is that article?" the little boy commenced, pointing to a stack of hay on the marsh

"Oh, that's hay, dear," answered the careworn lady.

"What is hay, auntie?"

"Hay is hay, dear."

"But what is hay made of?"

"Why, hay is made of dirt and water and air."

"Who makes it?"

"God makes it, dear."

"Does he make it in the day time or the night?"

"In both, dear,"

"And Sundays?"

"Yes, all the time."

"Ain't it wicked to make hay on Sunday, auntie?"

"O, I don't know. I'd keep still, Willie, that's a dear. Auntie is very tired."

And after remaining quiet a moment little Willie broke out:

"Where do stars come from, auntie?"

"I don't know; nobody knows."

"Did the moon lay 'em?"

"Yes, I guess so," replied the wicked lady.

"Can the moon lay eggs, too?"

"I suppose so. Don't bother me!"

A short silence, when Willie broke out again:

"Benny says oxins is a owl, auntie; is they?"

"O, perhaps so!"

"I think a whale could lay eggs—don't you, auntie?"

"O, yes I—guess so," said the shameless woman.

"Did you ever see a whale on its nest?"

"O, I guess so."

"Where?"

"I mean no. Willie, you must be quiet. I am getting crazy."

"What makes you crazy, aunty?"

"Oh, dear! you ask so many questions."

"Did you ever see a little fly eat sugar?"

"Yes, dear."

"Where?"

"Willie, sit down on the seat and be still, or I'll shake you. Now, not another word!"

And the lady pointed her finger sharply to the little boy, as if she was going to stick it through him. If she had been a wicked woman she would have sworn.

There are eight million little boys like Willie in the United States.

Kalakaua at Home Again.

London Standard.

A correspondent sends us some extracts from a letter describing the reception of King Kalakaua on his return from Europe to his home in the Hawaiian Islands. It was written by Count Robert von Oehlhaffen, a German nobleman, His Majesty's personal Adjutant, who, after alluding to the preparations for bringing all classes of persons from the various islands to Honolulu to greet the King, says: Thousands of faces gazed eagerly at our craft, and strained their eyes to detect the King and suite among so many passengers, and as the steamer passed dock after dock this living, moving, swelling ocean of humanity swept on and on, equestrians and pedestrians mixing like Indian jungle. The military bands played the Hawaiian anthem, and many an eye was filled with tears. His Majesty and suite were now transferred to a smaller steamer, and as we stepped ashore 20,000 voices shouted their welcome. People lined both sides of the street for two miles; garlands, ferns, and wreaths of flowers adorned every male and female. The streets were thickly covered with greens and shrubs, flags were hoisted, and every window was graced with the Hawaiian flag, all church bells ringing at once. His Majesty and suite entered the state carriage, drawn by six sprightly bays, and as he passed the lines of spectators hurrah after hurrah rent the air the military, presenting arms, the band playing the anthem, the different Masonic and other lodges giving their signs of welcome, all uncovered. The children sang hymns, the public shouted "Aloha," throwing their hats into the air, and others discharging fire-works; every street crossing was adorned with an arch of triumph, covered with flowers, mottoes, frescoes, Chinese lanterns, crowns and flags. Slowly only could the carriages move. The gates of the palace gardens were most tastefully and artificially decorated. Shields in all different national colors, with the names of countries visited, were suspended from the main arch. All national colors united in one bunch, with the Hawaiian on the top facing each column, His Majesty's portrait in life size being in the center. Thousands of persons followed slowly, steadily and orderly behind standard bearers in national costume. The military were in their new German uniform, the school children were dressed in white, with red sashes, bearing mottoes and standards. One had a representation of the two hemispheres on it, with "Kalakaua, our Circumnavigator;" another, "Hail to the Chief who in triumph advances;" another, "Lives there a man with soul so dead. Who never to himself has said, This is my own, my native land." At last the King ascended the grand staircase of the palace, where his Queen and sister awaited him. The whole palace road, steps and veranda had been strew with roses, and works of love done by the household servants greeted him everywhere. His Majesty kissed his Queen, and his sister, and tears of joy streamed down her royal cheeks—a sincerer, truer, heartier welcome cannot be imagined. These Hawaiians are a tender-hearted, loving people, and vie with each other in their love for one who so richly deserves it as their King, Kalakaua.

All's Well That Ends Well.

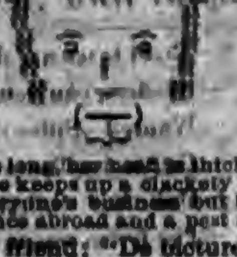
Edinburgh Courant.

"All's well that ends well" would be a very appropriate title for a little romance of real life which ended happily in Paris Saturday. The Son of a rich gentleman residing in the Faubourg St. Germain had fallen desperately in love with a pretty, amiable, but dowerless girl. The course of true love ran smoothly enough as long as the young man's father was not aware of what was going forward; but when his consent to the marriage was asked he flatly refused to give it. A last meeting took place, vows of eternal constancy were interchanged, and the lovers separated. The young lady, deeply affected by the parting, took the rash determination to drown herself and her sorrow in the Seine, and about twilight on Saturday she attempted to carry out her intention. A gentleman walking along the quays at the time saw her struggling in the water, and without a moment's hesitation plunged in to the rescue. The would-be suicide was saved, but the most curious part of the story is that the gentleman who saved her chanced to be the father of the man she loved. The denouement of the affair can be easily guessed. The stern parent's inflexible resolution to refuse his consent to the union gave way under the emotion he felt at the drowning incident. He conveyed the poor girl home, sent for his son, told the delighted young people that they were free to take each other for better or worse, and that the wedding might take place as soon as the young lady had recovered from the effects of her immersion in the river.

"Drink," says an exchange, "weakens the system, but strengthens the breath."

JOCOSITIES.

We find this remarkable work of art with the accompanying quatrain, in the Watertown Times. It is entitled "Nobody's Darling."



Her face is long, her head is thick,
Her tongue keeps up a clackety click,
Minds everyone's business but her own,
Is a nuisance abroad and a pest at home.

When a lawyer was once stating his point for the twelfth time, the Judge interrupted him by saying: "You have made that point eleven times already." "True, Your Honor," was the lawyer's reply, "but there are twelve men on the jury."

"Ma, are you going out?" "Yes, dear; why do you ask?" "Don't you want to stay and see the fun?" "Why, Willie; what do you mean?" "Why, I heard pa tell Maggie that when you went away that they would have a regular picnic."

"It's my last resort, my last resort," murmured a dejected looking individual as he braced himself against a lamp post last night. "What's that?" inquired a sympathetic bystander. "Home," was the mournful reply, "home, sweet home."

Advertising Schemes.

Business men are bored to death with every conceivable scheme for advertising. The number of snide schemes by which they are plucked of money for which they see no return, is astonishing.

Young, middle aged and elderly men are every day after business men to get their cards for a hotel register, that even commercial travelers do not read, or to give their cards, costing from $5 to $10 for some gorgeous frame to be hung in the postoffice or placed in a hotel, or for a programme that nobody reads, or for a new paper to be sent to everybody free, like a poster, and only worth as much, or to the genius who gets up a card with a bit of sandpaper on it to be posted in saloons or on cigar counters, or catchpenny cards with a dozen firms represented.

The demand upon business men is constant to patronize these schemes, and hundreds of dollars are paid anually without the reasonable hope being indulged in by the men who pay the bills, that these cards and signs ever do their business any real good.

The advertisers of the United States, men and firms who have expended tens of thousands of dollars in experimenting as to the best and cheapest method of reaching the eye and ear of the public, have always settled down to the conclusion that this method is through regular newspapers.

Advertising pays, but giving away to every applicant who has a catchpenny scheme does not pay.

A newspaper goes to a regular reading constituency, and every paper averages about eight readers to each subscriber, and the highest rate any publisher will ask, will be cheaper than the snide schemes alluded to above.

Papers that are given away have no more character or value than a handbill. The place to make known business advantages is through the columns of a generally circulated and regularly published newspaper.

The Room Where Mrs. Arthur Died.

Chicago News.

Mrs. Arthur's room in her beautiful New York mansion, in which she died, is never disturbed; her needle is still threaded and sticking in a bit of delicate embroidery in her work-basket, undisturbed; nor will her husband allow any one to change the room in its furniture arrangements. There is the little rocker beside the standard work-basket, and the little negligé crocheted slippers. There stands her desk, with ink dried on her pearl-handled pen, which she had hastily put aside from some interruption, never to use again on earth. Her favorite books are placed in a tiny case, with a marker in one of them, just as she had left it. On the table are placed each morning, by orders from the President, a bunch of her favorite flowers. Even her favorite perfumes are in the toilet bottles at her dressing-case, and in the wardrobe hang her dresses. This room is bright and sunny, her former maid keeping it neat, and arranging the flowers in the vase and attending the canaries in the window, but never altering the places of the furniture, the books, etc. This room is a place where the President takes much comfort in reading and meditation, and they who know, say that the bit of needlework has been many times wet with tears by the husband.

Sandwiches in Connecticut.

Burdette.

They are four inches thick each side and lined with apparent traces of ham. The assay also shows some indications of butter of the Queen Anne period, but not in paying quantities. They can be reduced by strong acid or intense heat, but can not be crushed by friction. As food they are not nutritious but are perfectly harmless. Professor Doremus, who has subjected them to a careful analysis, says there is not enough ham in 2,000,000,000 of them to endanger a two-year-old baby with trichinae.

FROM THE WIRES.

Des Moines, Iowa, dispatch:

Up to midnight last night, when your correspondent left Grinnell, the result of the cyclone showed forty-one deaths in Grinnell and twenty-one at outside points. It will be increased to more than one hundred. The wounded number over 200. The deaths will be increased at Grinnell, probably thirty among the injured. In Grinnell 148 houses were destroyed, and [illegible] valued at nearly $1,000,000. Most of the residences are a total loss of everything they contained, the occupants saving only the clothes they had on. The total loss of dwellings will reach 200. The sufferers are homeless and want relief. Societies are being formed over the State. The extent of the storm was from seven miles west of Grinnell to fifteen miles southeast, and fifty rods wide, wherein every building and animal was destroyed.

Burlington, Iowa, special.—Saturday night, at Mount Pleasant, twenty-eight miles west, the hurricane was very destructive. Two storms met over the town at 11:30, and, accompanied by rain and hail, broke in fearful fury, demolishing entirely the Baptist Church, which cost $25,000, lifting the spire from the Presbyterian Church high in the air and inverting it. The point struck the sidewalk in front of the church and was driven into the ground many feet.

The towers and roofs of all the churches in the place are off and otherwise damaged. Nearly every business house in the city was unroofed and damaged, and the public square is filled with tin roofs, rooled into bunches like wads of paper.

The rain damaged much merchandise and lasted but forty minutes. Three hundred dwellings are unroofed and damaged. Not a single chimney is left standing and thousands of trees were twisted off.

Three large brick school houses are in ruins, but the college buildings escaped, being protected by the grove of trees in the campus, which are all down. Only two persons are reported killed—a mother and son named Scott, who live near the city. None seriously injured in the town.

The Insane Hospital, with 600 inmates, in the track of the storm, was not damaged. The loss at Mt. Pleasant is about $150,000.

Fifty freight cars standing on a side track one mile east of Mt. Pleasant were blown on the main track, and a C., B. & Q. freight collided there, wrecking them completely. Engineer A. M Parmater was slightly injured.

Leavenworth, Kan., special. — A terrible cyclone struck this city shortly after midnight, Saturday, following a day and evening excessively sultry. The cloud came from the northwest accompanied by vivid lightning, and was distinctly heard approaching when several miles away. The velocity of the wind was seventy-two miles an hour when the cyclone struck the city. Awnings, roofs, trees, and buildings were carried, filling the streets with debris. The [illegible] just completed at a cost of [illegible], was wrecked, [illegible] halls, churches and residences were more or less [illegible]. At Mount St. Mary's Academy [illegible] south of the city [illegible] was blown through the roof into a dormitory occupied by thirty girls, and four were killed—Mabel McGanathan, Ida Golden, Annie McDonald and Mary Austin—and a number were injured. The building is damaged $50,000. Not much damage was done in the surrounding country.

From various points come reports of the disaster from the cyclone, starting southeast of Gowrie, in Webster county, and sweeping over Boone, Story, Marshal, Jasper, Poweshiek, Mahaska and Henry counties. There appears to have been three or four distinct storm-clouds, two of which came from the northwest and northeast, and united just north of Grinnell, and swung off to the southeast.

Relief funds are being raised briskly. This city has sent $2,000 cash, and more is coming. Fifteen thousand dollars has been raised, also, for Grinnell College. Twenty-five thousand is wanted. Hon. J. B. Grinnell goes to Chicago to-day to get help for his people, who do not yet actually realize their absolute need. They want money, clothes, and food, having absolutely nothing.

The sufferers at Malcom are equally needy, and in a worse condition, as their town is small, and local aid is restricted.

Send relief funds for Grinnell to Hon. R. M. Haines, Chairman of the Relief Committee.

The following appeal for aid has been furnished the Associated Press, with a request for its publication in all the papers in the country:

TO THE PUBLIC.—After two days and nights spent in traversing the track of the tornado that swept over this State with such fatal fury on Saturday night last, having reports from scores of the reporters of the Des Moines Register and Associated Press sent to all parts of it at the time, the condition of the stricken people is so urgent and so needful of instant and generous help that I send this appeal to the people of the United States in their behalf. The tornado [illegible] tion through the thickly settled portion of Iowa some 150 miles in length and an average [illegible] in width, extending from a point south of Ames, in the center of the State, and swept in the shape of a crescent to South English, in Keokuk county, in the southeastern part of the State. Within the names known, fifty-[illegible] dead and 500 wounded, half of the latter [illegible] hurt, and probably a fifth of them fatally. Over 300 families have had their homes totally destroyed, and there are now at least 1,300 homeless and in want. The loss in property will exceed $2,000,000, and may reach $3,000,000. In the town of Grinnell some over $400,000 in property was destroyed, on none of which was a cent of insurance, as in the case of fires. It will take at least $300,000 to put the people there beyond need and distress. It will take $100,000 at once to put the wounded people in condition to be cared for. It will take 1,000,000 at the lowest to keep the sufferers from want, and to help them to put the humblest of roofs over their heads.

Grinnell is a town of New England people, a trifty, intelligent people, and with the lowest rate of crime and illiteracy in the State, and the highest rate of intelligence and morality. The rich towns of the East may well help these sons and daughters of New England in the [illegible] and need of the utter calamity [illegible] upon them so cruelly by [illegible] the air, which has [illegible] destroyed 160 [illegible] and mutilated [illegible] people, many of whom [illegible] and all of whom must be [illegible] months, and wiped out [illegible] half a million dollars in [illegible] property.

Iowa College has [illegible] buildings destroyed, its 400 [illegible] homeless, and has suffered [illegible] in uninsured property.

The fury and [illegible] calamity were as [illegible] their mightiness of strength [illegible] and power were cruel and complete. Many people were left of their houses not a splinter as large as a finger, not a shred of furniture, [illegible] silk, and hundreds have no clothing left, except the night clothes they had on. Cases of exceptional horror add exceptional pathos to the piteous whole. Women in pregnancy were killed outright, others forced to premature delivery, and little children with both parents killed, and left maimed and wounded themselves. Every condition exists that most tenderly appeals to the pity of the human heart. The wounds inflicted by the debris that filled the air like chaos, by the electric balls of fire that seemed to traverse every inch of space, and that exploded with fearfully fatal effect, will many of them defy all skill and nursing, even with the tenderest care. The fury of the storm, which was clearly of electric origin, and which, indeed, may be described as having been electricity itself, precipitated in chaos, may be understood from the statement that, in various places, it took up in its greater spirals, or funnels, houses a thousand feet high, and took up and carried large herds of the cattle through the air for thousands of feet and dashed them down dead in heaps. Many thousands of cattle, horses, hogs, and other animals, now lie in the track of the tornado already rotting, and adding, in the hot weather, the horror of putrefaction to the foul and pervading odors that are being given off by the millions of tons of decaying matter left in the wake of the storm, the unspeakable cruelties that it inflicted, the pitiless woe of its coming in the night, when the dead were not known, and wounded could not be found, and the piteous state in which it has left hundreds of families, before prosperous, may not be described in words, but once known to generous hearts, must command the instant sympathy of the liberal and immediate help.

Remittances may be made to Hon. J. B. Grinnell, at Grinnell, or the Mayor of Grinnell.

I write from the knowledge of two whole days and nights spent on the scene of desolation and among the dead and wounded, and tell the facts of the multitude of horrors simply as they are, feeling that they will themselves best appeal to the country and most effectually aid the sufferers.

J. S. CLARKSON,
Editor Des Moines Register.

The record of the loss and damage in the country along the track of the cyclone is increasing as the details come in, and will largely exceed all expectation or estimates made. On hundreds of farms every building is destroyed, the crops annihilated and much live stock killed.

The Evening Post special from Mount Sterling says: A negro named Jim Mitchell, well known about here as a vicious character, waylaid the wife of a respectable farmer named Robert Thomas at noon yesterday, and ravished her in the most brutal manner. The scene was only two miles from town and within two hours the wretch was in jail. The husband went through the street swearing until the sympathy of the citizens was aroused to such a pitch that no effort was made to prevent five men who, armed with pistols, entered the jail and forced the jailer to deliver the victim, who was taken and hung to a railroad trestle half a mile from town. The body was taken down this morning and buried by the Coroner. He confessed the crime twice, and was fully identified by Mrs. Thomas. Everybody, even the negroes, fully justify the decision, sentence and execution of Judge Lynch.

Springfield, Illinois, special.—A [illegible] large crowd thronged the streets. Vaughn [illegible] so much depressed yesterday, but [illegible] spirits and [illegible] night [illegible] walked manfully to the [illegible] meeting death grimly. He dropped six feet, and died after a few struggles. The gallows was an old-fashioned rope and trap. There was no demonstration by the crowd.

Vaughn murdered William Watts, Marshal of Tamaroa, on August 14, 1881. Vaughn was drunk, and Watts attempted to arrest him, when the former plunged a knife into the latter's breast, and turned to flee. Watts shot at him, striking him in the leg, and then fell, dying almost immediately. Vaughn was captured after a sharp chase, and taken to Pinckneyville, and tried and convicted. He was considered a hard character. Vaughn had said he would kill Watts if he ever attempted to arrest him, and after he was arrested remarked that he was a man of his word.

St. Louis, Mo., special.— The Post-Dispatch special from Albuquerque, N. M., says: Milton Yarbery was hanged here this afternoon, for the murder of Charles Campbell. The execution was in a vacant space adjoining the town. Crowds came in yesterday and to-day. Thousands were present, including Mexicans, cow-boys, railroad men and miners. There were numerous fights, but no interference with the hanging. Yarbery died with the same bravado which characterized his life. He marched to the scaffold with a determined step, and never flinched. When the rope was placed about his neck, some one in the crowd cheered. The drop was five feet. He died with but few struggles.

A dispatch from Llano, Tex., says a free fight occurred there yesterday between two parties at feud with each other in which Henry Hatty was killed, John Caggins mortally wounded, and Jack Caggins, Jack Herriage, Ben Carter and A. Harwell more or less hurt. The battle was with Winchester rifles and fifty to sixty shots were fired. No arrests. The District Court made a requisition on the Adjutant General for a company of State troops to protect the court and preserve the peace.

A fierce storm at Clarkaville, yesterday morning, unroofed several houses and destroyed trees and fences. Two men, William Bird and Edward Sinclare, working in the Red river bottom near town were killed by lightning.

The bodies of Patrick Gavin and Patrick McManamon, victims of the Pogue's Run disaster, were recovered this morning. There are several others still missing. It is supposed they have been carried out into White river.

Jackson, Mich., dispatch:

Mrs. Schumacher, wife of the saloon keeper, who got [illegible], and shot her in the stomach, died at midnight. Policeman Schwiemer, who broke into the house and tried to arrest the murderer, and received a bullet in the head, is still alive, but will probably not recover. If he does he will be entirely blind. Schumacher shot himself in the bowels and died in a few minutes.

Kankakee, Ill., dispatch:

A boy named Dunn, 13 years old, living at Grand Crossing, was arrested near here yesterday with a horse in his possession which he had stolen from a man named Gleason, at Clifton, Iroquois county. In the lad's pocket was found a yellow-covered book entitled "Jesse James Among the Crackers." He was taken to Clifton this morning or examination.

A Boston dispatch:

This morning Timothy Remick's cotton-waste mill, at Boston Highlands, took fire. The building contained much cotton waste, which, being thoroughly soaked by water from the engines, became so heavy as to burst the walls, which fell upon several firemen, who were badly injured. Thomas Killian, it is feared, is fatally hurt.

Nineteen firemen were buried beneath the falling debris. A third alarm was sent out, bringing a large additional force to the spot, and in a short time they were rescued. All had suffered to a greater or less extent, nine or ten being seriously injured. Two fire captains are believed to be fatally injured.

St. John's N. F. dispatch:

The French fishing schooner La Syrene, of Miqueler, sank on the 10th instant, and took down her whole crew with her, numbering seventeen hands. The scene of the disaster was on St. Peter's bank. The vessel was deeply laden with salt and salted codfish. Her starboard bow was pierced by the stroke of a heavy "ice growler," and she sank without a moment's warning.

A special from Matamoras, Mexico, says: A dispatch from Chihuahua to-day states that twenty-seven Apache prisoners, captured in the recent fights with the Jesus and Maria bands, were taken out in a field yesterday and shot. They behaved with wonderful bravery, each one meeting his fate with remarkable coolness and looking defiantly at the executioners.

The Iowa cyclone made one dip into Nebraska. At a point on the Platte river, in Butler county, a half mile of prairie was dug up as by a great plow. Fortunately, it was an unsettled part of the country.

[illegible] of good sense is the worst of poverty.

PILES!

How many suffer torture day after day, making life a burden and robbing existence of all pleasure, owing to the secret suffering from Piles. Yet relief is ready to the hand of almost any one who will use systematically the remedy that has permanently cured thousands. Simmons' Liver Regulator, is no drastic violent purge; but a gentle assistant to nature.

CONSTIPATION!

Should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach, arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache. [illegible]

PROTECT & SUCCESS

THE PASTILLE Prof. Harris' Radical Cure Trade Mark FOR NERVOUS DEBILITY

BY YEARS OF USE!

A valuable Discovery and New Departure in Medical Science. A positively effective Remedy for the speedy and permanent Cure for organic weakness—the deplorable disease resulting from indiscreet practices or excesses in youth or at any time of life—by the only true way, viz: Direct Application acting by Absorption, and exerting its specific influence on the Vesicles, Ducts, and Glands, that are unable to perform their natural functions while this disease pervades the human organism. The use of the Pastille is attended with no pain or inconvenience, and does not interfere with the ordinary pursuits of life; it is quickly dissolved and soon absorbed, producing an immediate soothing and restorative effect upon the nervous organizations wrecked from vicious habits or excesses, stopping the drain from the system, restoring the mind to health and sound memory, removing the Dimness of Sight, Confusion of Ideas, Aversion to Society, etc., etc., and the appearance of premature old age usually accompanying this trouble, and restoring the vital forces, where they have been dormant for years. This mode of treatment has stood the test in very severe cases, and is now a pronounced success. Drugs are too much prescribed in this trouble, and, as many can bear witness to, with but little if any permanent good. There is no nonsense about this Preparation. Practical observation enables us to positively guarantee that it will give satisfaction. It has been in general use for several years and we have thousands of testimonials from patients, as to its value, and it is now conceded to be the most rational means yet discovered for reaching and curing this very prevalent trouble, that is well known to be the cause of untold misery to so many, and upon whom quacks prey with their useless nostrums and big fees. The Remedy is put up in neat boxes, of three sizes. No. 1, (enough to last a month,) $3; No. 2, (sufficient to effect a permanent cure, unless in severe cases) $5; No. 3, (lasting over three months, will restore those in the worst condition,) $7. Sent by mail, in plain wrappers. Full DIRECTIONS for using will accompany EACH BOX.

Send for Sealed Descriptive Pamphlets giving Anatomical Illustrations and Testimony, which will convince the most skeptical that they can be restored to perfect health, and the vital forces thoroughly re-established same as if never affected. Sold ONLY by

NERVINE

SAMARITAN NERVINE

Cures Epileptic Fits, Spasms, Convulsions, St. Vitus Dance, Vertigo, Hysteric, Insanity, Apoplexy, Paralysis, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, and all Nervous Diseases. This infallible remedy will positively eradicate every species of Nervous Derangement, and drive them away from whence they came, never to return again. It utterly destroys the germs of disease by neutralizing the hereditary taint or poison in the system, and thoroughly eradicates the disease and utterly destroys the cause.

SAMARITAN NERVINE

Cures Female Weakness, General Debility, Leucorrhoea or Whites, Painful Menstruations, Ulceration, of the Uterus, Internal Heat, Gravel, Inflammation of the Bladder, Irritability of the Bladder. For Wakefulness at Night, there is no better remedy. During the change of life no Female should be without it. It quiets the Nervous System and gives rest, comfort and nature's sweet sleep.

SAMARITAN NERVINE

Cures Alcoholism, Drunkness and the habit of Opium Eating. These degrading habits are by far the worst evils that have ever befallen suffering humanity. Thousands die annually from these noxious drugs. The drunkard drinks liquor not because he likes it, but for the pleasure of drinking and treating his friends, little thinking that he is on the road to ruin. Like the Opium Eater, he first uses the drug in small quantities as a harmless antidote. The soothing influence of the drug takes strong hold upon its victim leading him on to his own destruction. The habits of Opium Eating and Liquor Drinking are precisely what eating is to alimentiveness, as over-eating first inflames the stomach, which redoubles its craving until it paralyzes both the stomach and appetite. So every drink of liquor or dose of opium, instead of satisfying, only adds to its fierce fires, until it consumes the vital force and then itself. Like the gluttonous tape-worm, it cries "Give, give, give!" but never enough until its own rapacity devours itself. Samaritan Nervine gives instant relief in all such cases. It produces sleep, quiets the nerve, builds up the nervous system, and restores body and mind to a healthy condition.

SAMARITAN NERVINE

Cures Nervous Dyspepsia, Palpitation of the Heart, Asthma, Bronchitis, Scrofula, Syphilis, diseases of the Kidneys and all diseases of the urinary organs. Nervous debility, caused by the indiscretions of youth, permanently cured by the use of this invaluable remedy. To you, young, middle-aged and old men, who are covering your sufferings as with a mantle by silence, look up, you can be saved by timely efforts, and make ornaments to society, and jewels in the crown of your Maker, if you will. Do not keep the secret longer, until it saps your vitals, and destroys both body and soul. If you are thus afflicted, take Dr. Richmond's Samaritan Nervine. It will restore your shattered nerves, arrest premature decay, impart tone and energy to the whole system.

SAMARITAN NERVINE

Is for sale by druggists everywhere, or may be had direct from us. Those who wish to obtain further evidence of the curative properties of Samaritan Nervine will enclose a 3-cent postage stamp for a copy of our Illustrated Journal of Health giving hundreds of testimonials of cure from persons who have used the medicine, and also their pictures photographed after their restoration to perfect health. The American Popular Dictionary, $1.00

[illegible]

SUNSHINE PUBLISHING CO., Geneva, Ohio.

Our readers will find this wonderful book the cheapest Dictionary published. The information it contains is worth many times the amount asked for it, and it should be in the possession of everybody. With this book in the library for reference, many other much more expensive works can be dispensed with, and ignorance of his country, history, business, laws, etc., is inexcusable in any man. Note the price, $1, post paid.

Be sure, before buying, to examine the Name Plate to be found on the rear of every Buggy manufactured by us, for NONE ARE GENUINE unless they bear the name of Columbus Buggy Company,

COLUMBUS OHIO.

Many inferior goods are offered as Columbus Buggies, and care should be used to distinguish between "Columbus Buggies" and Columbus Buggy Co's. Buggies.

TESTIMONIALS.

GENTLEMEN: Your buggies have given me entire satisfaction, both in style and durability I have used them for the past three years. Your recent improvements on road wagons I consider the best in the market.

JAMES H. RAMBURG.
Frederick Maryland.

DEAR SIRS: We have used buggies of your make that have been in use three years, and no buggy we have that cost twice the amount has given better satisfaction.

JAMES H. ALEXANDER.
Johnstown, Pa.

GENTLEMEN: We have used the Columbus Buggy Company's work for the last five years and can conscientiously recommend it as strictly first class as to style, material, workmanship and durability. Your buggies have given better satisfaction than any other make of vehicles we had in use for the last ten years

PALMER & WHITTAKER.
Red Oak Iowa.

GENTLEMEN: It gives me pleasure to state that I have been selling your buggies and carriages for four years, and can safely recommend them to any one in want of a buggy or carriage. Yours Truly, J. L. GRIBBLE.
Macomb, Illinois.

GENTLEMEN: With over fifteen years experience in building buggies, wagons, &c., I do not hesitate in saying your buggies and carriages are strictly first-class in workmanship, material and proportions, filling a long-felt want for a reliable article that can be sold at a price lower than any ordinary manufacturer can produce and sell the same quality of Work at Yours, etc. I. S. KRICK, Conneautville Pa.

GENTLEMEN: I have used your Brewster side-bar buggies for four years, together with buggies that cost me $300 and $350, and your buggies were the first that went out, on account of being side-bar. They have not cost me $5 for repairs, and those I have sold of your make have given good satisfaction. I think that you make the cheapest and best road wagons that are made in the United States for the money. Respectfully, F. H. HAMLIN, Lawrence Kansas.

DEAR SIRS: We have been using your buggies for the last four or five years. They have given entire satisfaction. I think they are the best buggies made for the money.
W. R. GRIMES & CO., Liverymen Whitehall Illinois.

GENTLEMEN: We have been handling your work for two seasons, and have in every instance found your buggies first class. We never have had one of your jobs returned to us for repairs; neither have we had a single complaint on account of work not being perfectly satisfactory. Very Respectfully, S. P. BUCKLEY & CO., Springfield, Illinois.

GENTLEMEN. I have no hesitancy in saying that the buggies manufactured by the Columbus Buggy Company are the best work for the price I have any knowledge of. In not a single instance has there been any dissatisfaction on the part of any one of my customers.

FRANK L. HALL.
Owensboro, Ky.

DEAR SIRS: For the past two years we have used your buggies side by side with other makes in both our stables, and are perfectly satisfied with the strength, durability and workmanship, compared with others. As fast as our stock in livery is used up we shall replace them with your manufacture, knowing from experience that it is the best we can do. Respectfully,

SWEET & FOLLANSBEE,
Quincy Illinois.

For sale by dealers everywhere.

Any of our readers who will enclose two 3 cent stamps in a letter to the Columbus Buggy Co., Columbus O., will receive in return a beautiful engraving in colors, representing an Australian scene and their manner of traveling in that country with ostriches as a motor. They have this picture (the packing costing six cents) to all who may send for it, desiring in this manner to make themselves more widely known to the people.

Alliteration's Artful Aid.

[New York Sun.]

As an orator, Colonel Ingersoll, of Peoria, drops too much into the sing-song, and a rhetorician, he indulges too frequently a weakness for alliterative speech. Here are a few random phrases from his address in the Academy of Music recently:

"The chill of chains."

"Shared the gloom and glory of the seven sacred years."

"The war was waged and won."

"Forged new fetters for their fellow men."

"Our fathers fought for freedom."

"The streams went singing to the seas."

"Made merchandise of men."

"Mere legal lies, mean and meaningless, base and baseless."

The habit seems to be growing on the Colonel, and he will no doubt be obliged to us for pointing out the fact. An excessive dependence upon alliteration's artful aid may mar the effect of extremely eloquent elocution.

SHET THEM DOORS."—A crude old farmer, living on the line of one of the recent railroad surveys in Connecticut, and who is owner of a barn of large dimensions, with huge swinging doors on both sides, observed a posse of surveyors busily driving a row of stakes in the direction of his big barn. Sauntering leisurely toward the trespassers, with an air savouring somewhat of indignation he addressed the leader of the gang as follows:

"Layin' eout another railroad?"

"Surveying one" was the reply.

"Goin' through my barn?"

"Don't see how we can avoid it."

"Wall, now, mister," said the worthy farmer, "I kalkerlate I'v got somethin' tew say 'bout that. I want yew tew understan' that I've got somthin' else tew dew besides runnin' eout tew open and shet them doors every time a train wants to go through."

The fine fishing at Put-in-Bay, Syracuse and Avondale, offer special inducements to lovers of that sport.

A Word to Mothers.

Mothers should remember that it is a most important duty at this season to look after the health of their families and cleanse the malaria and impurities from their systems, and that nothing will tone up the stomach and liver, regulate the bowels and purify the blood so perfectly as Parker's Ginger Tonic advertised in our columns.—[Post. THREE THOROUGHBRED

IMPORTED STALLIONS

The horses so well known throughout the county, owned by George Clark, will stand for mares this season as follows:

Mondays and Tuesdays at Corunna; Wednesdays and Thursdays at Waterloo; Fridays and Saturdays at Auburn.

It is not necessary to give a pedigree of these stallions, as their record is established. Those desiring colts from these horses will call in rear of A. W. Allen's livery barn on the days named. JEFFERSON CLARK, Manager.

By order of the judge of the DeKalb circuit court, the stallions belonging to the estate of George Clark, deceased, will continue at the same stands and on the same terms and conditions as directed by said Clark in his lifetime. W. TEETERS, Administrator.

THE ÆTNA IS THE SAFEST, STRONGEST AND BEST POWDER

IN THE WORLD FOR

REMOVING STUMPS AND STONES!

It is unnecessary to tell a farmer his land is more valuable without the stump than with them. He knows that now. What he wants to know is the Best Quickest and Cheapest method of removing them, and that question we answer by saying, BLAST THEM OUT WITH ÆTNA POWDER. Any stump, large or small, green or decayed, can be thrown entirely out of the ground and broken into pieces small enough to handle.

If you have any stumps, send us your address and we will send you a man to do your work, or will sell you the powder and tools so you can do it yourself Don't delay, but attend to it at once.

Notice to Bridge Builders.

Notice is hereby given, that the Board of Commissioners of DeKalb county, Indiana, will, on

THURSDAY, JULY 27, 1882,

at 10 o'clock a. m., let to the lowest and best responsible bidder the building of a Howe Truss Bridge, about one-half mile north of the village of St. Joe; said bridge to be forty-five (45) feet long, and to be built on pile abutments.

Also on the same day at 2 o'clock p. m. said Board of Commissioners will let to the lowest and best responsible bidder the construction of a Howe Truss Bridge one and a half miles east of the town of Butler; said bridge to be fifty-five (55) feet in length and placed upon pile abutments.

Said lettings will take place at the site of the proposed work. Plans and specifications can be seen at the auditor's office. Successful bidders will be required to file a bond to the acceptance of the Board for the faithful performance of the contract. The right to reject any or all bids is reserved.

By order of the Board.
Attest: ALBERT ROBBINS, Auditor.

Stallions for Sale.

Pursuant to an order of the DeKalb circuit court, as administrator of the estate of George Clark, deceased, I will at Auburn, DeKalb county, Indiana, on or after Wednesday, July 26th, 1882, offer to sell at private sale four valuable stallions, described below, with their bridles, halters, saddles, blankets, etc., and also the stallion barn, situated in the rear of Allen's livery stable, being a part of the personal estate of said decedent.

TERMS: No bid received for less than the appraised value. One-third of the purchase money to be cash in hand, and balance at one year, with interest secured by note with personal or real estate security, waiving valuation laws and payable at First National Bank of Auburn, Indiana. Said stallions are,

First.—"Hidare," a beautiful dapple gray, six years old, weight 1,800 pounds, and is a full blooded imported Norman. Was imported by Dunham, the celebrated importer of horses, of Dupage county, Illinois.

Second.—"Prince," a blood bay, imported Canadian Norman, eight years old, weight 1,600 pounds.

Third.—"Frank," a bay Mambrino, seven years old, weight 1,300 pounds, and is a fine roadster.

Fourth.—"Jim," a half blooded gray Norman, nine years old, weight 1,500 pounds, and has the finest herd of colts of any horse in northern Indiana.

Pedigrees can be furnished if desired. All these horses are tractable, sound in every particular and sure foal getters.

The administrator will take pleasure in showing stock of any and all of the horses, and answer by mail or otherwise all inquiries about them. All are making the season and have all the business they can do. They can be seen at Auburn, after July 6th, next. Private offers are respectfully asked, and the confidence of such will be kept. The right to reject any or all bids is reserved.

GREAT discoveries of oil have been made in Pennsylvania recently, in Warren county. Great excitement prevails there.

WE have received a paper called the National View, published at Washington. It is a greenback paper, and handles the subject very creditably.

THE out-look for the democracy of Indiana is very encouraging. The republican papers are doing a noble work advertising Judge Lowry, throughout the district.

THE American Poultry Adviser, a recent publication on the subject of poultry breeding, will prove a valuable acquisition to people in that business. Published at Janesville, Ohio.

HON. FRANCIS T. HORD, of Columbus, will be a candidate before the democratic state convention, for the nomination for auditor general. We know of no one who would fill the place better.

WE are in receipt of a dainty little piece of music "When the days are going by." Words by Miss Violette E. King; music by G. Wallace Dawson. Published by Dawson and Becker, Kendallville, Indiana.

INDIANAPOLIS has a benevolent association, the high standing name of "Iron Hall." It seems to be a sort of cooperation life insurance company and in spite of its iron-clad name is no doubt a good institution.

OUR old-time friend and fellow teacher, D. M. Allen, now publishing the Harlin Independent at Maysville, Allen county, received the nomination for surveyor of that county, at the recent democratic convention in Fort Wayne. Glad to hear it.

"IDLE HOURS," Mr. Guhlky's puzzle paper at Waterloo, has been somewhat diminished in size, but still retains its original feature. Those interested in puzzles, will find this paper at the head of the list. Address A. C. Guhlky Waterloo, Indiana.

SOME small-pox patients were upset in San Francisco bay recently, and instead of dying by the consequent exposure of being several hours in their drenched clothing, they all got well. And now the doctors are trying to account for this startling disturbance of their theories.

IT is now believed that Hon. James H. Smart, will be induced to accept the nomination for state superintendent of public instruction. Mr. Smart has done a great work for the schools of Indiana, and the people can do no better service to the cause than to put him into the office again.

HON. HENRY S. CAUTHORNE, of Vincennes, will be a candidate before the democratic state convention for the office of clerk of the supreme court. He is a man well known all over the state and is highly respected for his great ability. He has been several times a member of the legislature, and has been speaker of the house at least once. We know no reason why he should not receive the nomination.

THE fight between straight and independent republicans in Pennsylvania promises to be a very pretty one. The shallow pretense, however, that the so-called independent move is inaugurated to do away with bossism, is a fraud of the most gauzy kind. It is meant to oust Cameron, the present boss, but what one of them can show that it is not done hoping to put another, more pliable to a faction of the republican element, in his place?

SUMMER is the season of the year above all others when the system is liable to get out of order and severe and dangerous bilious attacks frequently follow. The principal cause of nearly all sickness at this time of the year has its origin in a disordered Liver, the largest organ in the body, which if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and death will ensue. A little precaution taken in time in the shape of a reliable and efficacious Liver Regulator will in most cases prevent illness and fatal consequences. No medicine in modern times has gained a wider reputation than Simmons' Liver Regulator manufactured by J. H. Zeilin & Co. This justly celebrated medicine Regulates the Liver, promotes digestion, and fortifies the system against malarial diseases.

THE FAR WEST.

AN INTERESTING LETTER INCIDENT TO HER SURROUNDINGS.

CENTERVILLE, MONTANA, June 12, '82.

EDITOR COURIER: As per agreement I will give you a synopsis of our trip from Indiana to Montana. I purchased tickets for emigrant passage via, Chicago, Council Bluffs and Ogden. The fair from Columbia City to Dillon, Montana, was $56.40. We boarded the train at Warsaw May 16th, at 4:30 a. m., and arrived in Chicago at 9:20 a. m. Having several hours to wait, we took in as many of the sights of the great city as we could. At 12:05 p. m. we left Chicago for Council Bluffs, via. the C. B. & Q R. R., arriving at that point at 9:30 next day. The trains all run out to the Union transfer grounds, about two miles west of Council Bluffs, and within one-half mile of the Missouri river. Here the various companies have erected a handsome depot. Immediately after arriving at the transfer grounds the emigrant passengers were all registered. Previous to this, however, a number of us became acquainted with each other and organized a party sufficient to fill one car, and when we were registered we had our names all put down together. The emigrant train was made up at 1:30 p. m. and drawn up in front of the depot. One man was inside of the car to assign places to each family. These cars are made expressly for emigrant passengers. There are ten sections in each car, or twenty double berths. The seats are put in the same as in a regular sleeping car except they are not upholstered, and passengers must furnish their own bedding. The upper berths are made of slats, and when not in use are hung up to the roof out of the way. The passengers were requested to all form in line in front of the depot. The man with the register called off the names and we entered the cars as we were called and were assigned seats by the man inside. There were seven in my family—myself and wife, four children and my wife's sister. They gave us two sections, or four double berths. When the car was filled we had just thirty (seven of them children); so you may know we had plenty of room. The car had two stoves, which served us to make our tea and coffee. We provided ourselves with plenty of lunch for the trip. We left the transfer grounds at 5:00 p. m., and crossed the Missouri river over the mammoth iron bridge. This bridge is 2,750 feet long from one abutment to the other. We were now in the great state of Nebraska. For two days and nights we traversed its broad plains and sandy deserts. For many miles at a stretch all we could see was level, barren land, with scarcely a spear of green grass to be seen. Between Bushville and Pine Bluffs we crossed the line into Wyoming, and passed over hundreds of miles of plains that did not seem as though men could exist there long enough to build a railroad; and yet we see some thriving cities scattered along the road in these barren places. How they prosper is a mystery. The first town of any importance in Wyoming is Cheyene, a city of 6,000 inhabitants. Here passengers changed cars for Denver, Colorado. When we reached this point, a heavy gale of wind was blowing and some snow. At Granite Canyon we begin to ascend the summit of the mountains. Within distance of thirteen miles we ascend a grade one thousand feet and reach Sherman at the summit altitude 8,242 feet. Here we strike a snow storm and strong wind, and I must confess it made us feel a little homesick to see snow fall thick and fast, and ice on the 10th of May. The weather kept up about the same temperature until the next day about noon, when it became warm slowly. Sherman City received its name in honor of General Sherman—the tallest general in the army. Somebody is erecting a huge monument in this place in memory of Oakes Ames. It may be possible that it is being done by some of the remnants of the Credit Mobilier gang. From this point so can be seen the Black Hills, which rise in a mighty black mass to the clouds. The general out-look from Sherman is indeed grand. The scenery from Sherman to Echo City is varied. At this point we leave Echo Canyon and within one-half mile of the canyon is Pulpit Rock. This rock is formed of small pebbles firmly cemented together by a stiff, tough clay. The base is wide and gradually grows smaller until near the top when it projects and forms a pulpit pillow. The train stops just a few minutes ahead of this rock for water, and it generally requires fifteen minutes, the a number of us took advantage of the time and jumped off to knock out a few pebbles for specimens, as it stands almost within reach of the track. We thought we would get them out as high up as possible, and accordingly we proceeded up the side. About the time your correspondent reached the projection the bell rang for the train to start. To see forty or fifty men and women going down that hill was just as good as a circus. A perfect or modest attitude did not seem to be consulted, as my feet could not keep pace with the rolling pebbles. I was content to ride down on the seat of my best pants, let the result be what it may; but I am glad to say that all got aboard the train, if some of them did have to run down to the station, just one-half mile ahead, the train being allowed to run only four miles an hour at this point. It is safe to say we did not take any more chances on short stops. Soon after leaving Echo City we passed the Thousand Mile Tree—a large, thrifty pine. Upon one of its branches is hung a huge sign-board that tells the western bound traveler he has passed over one thousand miles of railroad west of Omaha. On the trunk of the tree is fastened a large silver plate bearing the following inscription: "To Omaha 1,000 miles; to San Francisco 1,000 miles." A little further on is the Devil's Slide. This slide is composed of two ridges of granite rock reaching from the river nearly to the top of a sloping grass covered mountain. They are from 50 to 200 feet, narrow slabs standing on edge about ten feet apart. Why it was called Devil's Slide, I do not know, but I think it would be devilish hard on the fellow who would undertake to slide down. Some twenty miles further on is Devil's Gate. For a good many miles the Weber river has been flowing on either side of the railroad. As it nears this Devil's Gate it seems to gather in a very narrow, rapid channel, and rushes into the foot of the mountain out of sight. The railroad runs through the spur of this mountain by a deep cut. As we come out into the canyon again, we discover the river has made a short horse shoe bend around under a projection of the mountain. A wagon road that has followed this river many miles is allowed to continue its course by a space between the river and the wall of the mountain. This road, however, is not generally noticed by one who passes for the first time, until it is seen coming out from under the projection. The Devil's Gate is said to be the grandest sight on the U. P. railroad between Omaha and Odgen. After leaving Weber canyon we entered fertile valleys of the great Salt Lake. Here we again strike civilization, as these valleys are dotted with well cultivated farms. We arrived at Ogden, Utah, at 2:30 p. m. Sunday. Here we changed cars for the north. As all the rest of our traveling companions were still going west, we had to bid them good-bye, probably never to meet again. Ogden is a city of 6,000 inhabitants and is under Mormon rule, though the Gentiles are becoming strong. We left Ogden at 7:05 by the Utah and Northern railroad for Dillon, Montana. This road is a three-foot, narrow gague, and makes from fifteen to twenty miles per hour up through the mountains. We arrived at Dillon at 5:30 p. m. Monday, May 22,—348 miles north of Ogden. This place is headquarters for freight to all points north and east. The railroad has built a large freight house here, but it does not hold one-half the freight that comes here. This freight is all hauled to inland towns by overland freight teams. These teams are made up by trailing two and three wagons together and drawn by from eight to twelve mules, and make trips as much as one hundred and fifty miles. At this point my wife's father met us with a team to take us home—a distance of one hundred and twelve miles. We made this trip in three and a half days, through the mountains, and arrived at Centerville, Meagher county, on the 26th, being just ten days on the way.

We all stood the trip very well except the last two days. We got rather tired riding in the wagon, especially the children. After taking a rest and looking around I will write you again on the general out-look of the country. Respectfully,

JAMES WANTS.

Many miserable people drag themselves about with failing strength, feeling that they are steadily sinking into their graves, when by using Parker's Ginger Tonic they would find a cure commencing with the first dose, and vitality and strength quickly and surely coming back to them. 27-4t.

Where's the Trouble?

A number of our subscribers complain of not receiving their COURIER regularly each week. We endeavor to be very careful, counting the names and the papers of each package, and it seems impossible for us to miss one name, let alone several each publication day. There is some "snide" work going on in these government shops, and we propose to look up the matter. Whenever any of our subscribers fail to get the COURIER, we want them to inform us immediately, in person or by letter, and if we can catch the "trappers" it will go hard with them.

The Courier.

We are pleased to state the COURIER is in a thriving condition. Its subscription list stood last week at 1908, and our advertising patronage is increasing as each week goes by, and the job department has been thronged with work. In this line of the trade we take no "back seat" for any office in the state, and work is ready when it is promised. In a few days we will have an assortment of new type, and those wanting neat and tasty letter-heads, bill-heads, statements, etc., are asked to call. We are obliged to our friends in different parts of the county who have assisted us in obtaining the largest list of good and reliable subscribers of any other paper in DeKalb county. Wishing one and all a pleasant future we look for your aid in the future for the welfare and advancement of the only democratic weekly newspaper in the county.

Well, the democratic convention has been held and the voters have to wait until the other convention is held and then select their candidates.

The old steam sawmill at Taylor's Corners, one of the old land marks of this part of the county, has finally been sold and the machinery moved away.

It "used to was," that it was considered entirely out of place for county officers to take active sides, for or against rival candidates for nomination, but things ain't as they "used to was."

I was among those who were in favor of giving the new road law a fair trial but so far as I can see, it has started out on the old humdrum style. The superintendents do not appear to understand that something better was expected of them, but the old plan of plowing up the low soft places and scraping the muck and mud on the road-bed and leaving it in mounds, and making the ditches deepest next to the road-bed, is the rule. THE Fort Wayne News gives the following item: "Late representatives from Allen seems to be in hard luck. One of them is being tried in the criminal court for abortion, and now Ella Reichelsderfer has brought suit in divorce against Elihu Reichelsderfer. The case will be tried in the DeKalb circuit court. The plaintiff lives at Garrett City, and the defendant at Maysville.

FATHER YOUNG, of this place, and who also holds services at Garrett, was in luck last week. The Herald says: "Father Young, the pastor of the Catholic Church, called in to see us yesterday morning, and we enjoyed a pleasant conversation with him. He felt quite elated over his good luck the other day. As he was walking down street he was called into Reyher's store, where a fine silk hat was presented to him by C. Reyher & Co. He returns many thanks to the gentlemen who so kindly remembered him by such a useful and valuable present."

Normal Music School.

The Northern Indiana Music School will be held at the Fort Wayne college, August 8th to 25th. J. F. Kinsey, principal assisted by Otto A. Schmidt and Princess L. Clark. This is decidedly the best and cheapest first class music school in the country.

A WOMAN.

GRACE S. WYLLIE.

The poet's laurel wreath she does not wear,
Since in her busy life she seldom writes
The poems that she lives; yet on the heights
With native sympathy her soul doth share
The poet's keen delights.

She neither seeks nor gains the world's acclaim,
Though rarest gifts are hers of mind and face;
More proud is she to fill her simple place,
And wear what seem to her the dearest names
That womanhood can grace.

Her joy is to guard her loved from pain,
To save from them the burdens hard to bear,
To give her days, her nights, her life, to care
For those who, loving her, yet entertain
Their angel unawares.

And more than artist's patience she doth give
To tasks of motherhood, since not alone
High dreams are clothed in color, form or tone;
[illegible] from the lives that human beings live
Its highest beauty known.

In such as she the world may not bestow
Its vain applause! far from all vulgar strife
She dwells content, if through her hidden life
Her loved the meaning of the name shall know
Of mother and of wife.

MABEL'S REVENGE.

"Will," said 'Squire Dermody to his eldest son, one morning, as they were seated at the breakfast table, "some one has been in that orchard again and broken the limbs of three of my choicest Bartletts, and I want it stopped."

The 'squire spoke very decidedly as he glanced at the Dermody heir, a handsome young man of 22; for the 'squire was very angry at this moment because of the depredations of some unknown young miscreant among the fruit which he valued so highly.

"I've done my best, father," replied the son, "to catch them at it, but I can never find any one near the orchard. It is a mystery to me where they come from, unless it is Jim himself who does the stealing."

Jim was the hired man, living in the tenement house on the place; but the 'squire did not think he would have the temerity to steal his fruit and damage his pet trees, for he had more than once known to his sorrow what it was to offend his employer. So he gave an impatient sniff, and bade his son keep his eyes open and catch the real offender, adding that if he caught him he was to give him a severe flogging.

"It's some of those young miscreants from town that are shooting all my squirrels, and they deserve to be hanged," said he.

Late in the afternoon of the same day, as the heir was walking near the orchard, apparently oblivious of everything but the beauty of the distant landscape, his attention was suddenly arrested by a cracking of the limbs near the edge of the orchard, and with a single bound he was over the fence, and directly under the tree from where the sound came.

Looking up into the branches he discovered what caused him to hesitate with surprise, and, perhaps another sentiment. A young girl of about 16, black-haired, black eyes sparkling with the excitement of mischief and fear combined, sat on a large limb of the tree, grasping a smaller limb of the tree above her head, and evidently enjoying the 'squire's choice fruit to the best of her ability. She was bare-footed and bare-headed, and looked a veritable little gypsy.

But Will had been told by his father that the thief was to be summarily dealt with, and such blind obedience had the father exacted of his son that he never once thought there were any extenuating circumstances which could excuse him. The 'squire's word to his son was his law and sooner than disobey him he would have undergone any frightful ordeal. So, choking down the sentiment the bewitching picture had momentarily aroused in his heart, he ordered the offender to descend.

Still defiant, the picturesque orchard robber slid deftly down from her perch, when her captor seized her firmly by the arm.

"My father said I was to flog the thief," said he.

"I'm not a thief, and you dare not flog me!" And the pretty face flushed with anger.

"But I caught you in the act of stealing my father's fruit, and I must punish you. What's your name, and what made you break the limbs of those pear trees?"

A glance of scorn was her only reply.

"Will you answer me not?" he continued; and then, angered by her persistent silence and looks of defiance, aided by the recollection of parental command, he struck her a light blow across the shoulders.

The graceful form quivered as the switch fell; but it was with pride, not pain, since the stroke could not have hurt a fly. The black eyes flashed lightning as she wrested herself from his grasp.

"I hate you, you mean coward!" she gasped. "I'll make you repent that, as sure as you live!" And as she ran sobbing out of the road, Will felt that her prophecy had been fulfilled with the uttering.

* * * * *

A year passed. Our young avenger of his father's stolen fruit had joined a party, one bright October morning, for a hunting expedition. They had gone to Cat island, a large swampy island situated near the head of Hemlock lake, which bordered the Dermody estate.

Now the day's sport was done, and they were returning home. As they neared the center of the treacherous little body of water a sudden squall arose, and, striking the sail with full force, before they had time to shift it, their boat was upset.

Two of the young men were fortunate enough to grasp the gunwale of the boat, where they clung, but the remaining three, being separated from it by the force of the fall, and excellent swimmers, struck out boldly for the shore, a distance of half a mile.

One, two, [illegible] emerged from the waters of the lake and stood in safety on its shore, watching the form of the third, who seemed to be suffering from some injury received by the upsetting of the boat, and making but slow progress, being still over a quarter of a mile away. Suddenly a cry of horror broke from their lips as they saw Will throw up his hands and go down. Stripping off part of their clothing that their actions might be less impeded, they plunged again into the waters of the lake and struck out in the direction of their drowning companion.

At this moment a young girl, a wild faced, gypsy like maiden, rushed from a fisherman's hut near the beach, and, without any ado, plunged also into the water, and commenced the race with her two male rivals for the rescue of the drowning man. Her life had been spent on the water and in its bosom, and she soon proved herself more than a match for her competitors.

She reached the spot where the young man went down just in time to see a tuft of hair floating on the surface. Seizing this firmly in her left hand, she supported the senseless body by almost superhuman exertions in one so young until the arrival of the two tardy swimmers, and together they bore the drowning man to the shore.

* * * * * * *

Will Dermody was lying in a weak condition in his bed, recovering from a severe fever which had resulted from his recent mishap; for it was not without the greatest exertion on the part of the physicians that he was restored to consciousness and life.

His mother stood by his bedside, and had just finished telling him the particulars of his rescue.

"It was Mabel Wheelock, a fisherman's daughter, who rescued you at the risk of her life; and, thinking you might wish to thank her," said Mrs. Dermody, with a smile, "I have sent for her to come to the house, and she is waiting in the sitting-room at this moment."

"Oh! mother, pray do not keep me waiting a moment from thanking this angel of the wave for saving my worthless life, for—"

He stopped in surprise as the door opened and he beheld the bright gypsy face and graceful form of the girl who stole the 'squire's fruit.

"Mabel, Mabel! Can you ever forgive me?" he began, flushing with the recollection and repentance of the episode in the orchard. As his mother stole from the room, the young girl came quickly to his side, and, with a face from which all the wildness and defiance had fled, placed a soft, brown hand over his pale lips, and asked him if she did not promise to make him repent the blow he struck her.

Will kissed the little hand and retained it in his own, and glanced again with deep admiration at the pretty face of Mabel; but this time he had no command from the 'squire which forbade the admiration.

Of course, after this, his recovery was very rapid; and a few days thereafter he might have been seen with a beautiful gypsy faced girl wandering through his father's orchard; for he had gone to the hut for her and demanded her assistance in despoiling that choleric old gentleman of his fruit.

The 'squire must have acquired a more forgiving disposition since first we met him, as the look which he cast on them was decidedly one of approval.

As time went on, Will and Mabel, being so constantly together, despite their different social status, discovered that they were in love, and so very naturally he asked her to become his wife, to which she responded by a kiss and a small word of three letters; and the Dermody mansion had for its mistress in a few years a beautiful young woman who had first been caught in the act of plundering its orchard.

Across the Hellespoint.

Philadelphia Press.

A party of men were dining a few days ago at the Hotel Bellevue. The conversation turned on the salutary effects of sea bathing, and one of the guests observed that it was a pity so few persons were good swimmers.

"I usually feel at home in the water," said another.

"And so do I," exclaimed a third and a fourth.

"As for myself," continued the first speaker, who happened to be Dr. Edward Bedloe, of Walnut street, "I can swim several miles at sea without becoming fatigued. Last year when abroad I swam from Abydos to Sestos, Byron's much-vaunted feat, and I assure you it is a task which requires no very particular exertion on the part of a capable swimmer."

"Tell us all about it, Bedloe," came from a chorus of voices.

"Oh, there is not very much to tell," was the reply. "As most of you know, I was United States consul at Verona until lately. Last summer I treated myself to a holiday of a few weeks and went for a hurried trip to the principal cities of Italy and Asia Minor. I wound up with Egypt, and had a very good time. While making a hurried exploration of the ruins of Pompeii, I made the acquaintance of a fellow countryman, a Congregationalist minister. We were both in the house of Marcus Lucretius. I made a remark in English in regard to the mural paintings, and the clergyman answered me. He proved such a charming and enlightened companion during the remaining hours I passed in the excavated city that I sought his acquaintance. Our route lay in the same direction, and we soon became intimate comrades. He proved to be an excellent swimmer, which was an additional bond between us, for I cannot tell you how delicious cold water is in Asia and the southern climes of Europe. I could tell you a dozen and one anecdotes, but you want to hear about the swim, and don't want a leaf out of a guide book.

"The parson and myself arrived at Abydos, a very unromantic spot in reality and remarkably dirty, but full of the romance of fiction. We discussed Byron's Bride, and the loves of Hero and Leander, and particularly of swimming the straits, and finally I proposed to the parson that I should swim across. He agreed, but stipulated to remain near me in a boat while I was swimming. We postponed action until the following morning. It was a bright and warm day, and the sea looked as smooth as a piece of glass. I stripped and entered the water. I soon found the current was flowing very rapidly, which made my course a little zig-zag, and made it hard work for the rowers in the boat. I took things easily, however, getting through my work principally with breast strokes, and occasionally floating on my back. The parson frequently hailed me and asked if I would like a pull out of his flask, but I did not avail myself of his offer. I finally land on the shores of Sestos (Asia), seventy-five minutes after entering the water without feeling at all fatigued. I believe the distance is over four miles. I do not think I should care about swimming across in winter. It was a December trip that widowed poor Hero. I fared better than either Byron or Leander. The poet wrote:

'Twere hard to say who fared the best,
Sad mortals! thus the gods still plague you!
He lost his labor, I my jest;
For he was drown'd and I've the ague.

"I was not drowned and I certainly was not afflicted with the ague or any other aches. I felt a little sleepy afterward, that was all. I subsequently swam some distance in the Dead Sea. The water was so thick with salt it was next to impossible to sink. I also swam across the Jordan river, not a very great feat, but, as I told the parson, I was desirous of seeing what it felt like on the other side. I climbed the bank and was a little disgusted at not seeing any of the sweet fields said to lie across the Jordan river. The only thing which was at once perceptible to my eyes and nostrils was a dead donkey."

Pachas and Harems.

Washington Capital.

General Charles F. Stone is a Pacha, but only a little one for a cent. Old Mehemet Ali was a Pacha of the first rank—they range like mandarins—but 75,000 men followed his banner, and the approach of his desert warriors and black soldiers made the minarets of Stamboul tremble with the loud voices of the muezzins from the balconies calling the faithful to prayers. The calling is, "There is no God but Allah, and Mohammed is the prophet of God! Prayer is better than sleep! Come to prayer!" It has echoed often on the Bosphorous at the approach of a foe, and seems likely to soon again be heard over the sweet Waters. This whole intrigue and conspiracy has meant Halim Pacha from the start. Teufik Pacha, whose father, Ismail, bribed the succession for him from the Porte, was put in by England and France, when Ismail was deposed for extravagance, as a mere dummy Khedive. Teufik is a soft, chubby-cheeked spongy creature, good-natured, easy and compliant, and the delight of the harem women, whose requests for pretty things he is said seldom to refuse. He has only one wife, but that means nothing in an eastern harem; to announce that the Khedive of Egypt had only one wife, although his religion entitles him to four, was taffy thrown to Europe. His palace is filled with women—some of them French. Halim Pasha is the son of Mehemet Ali, and uncle of Ismail Pasha, the last Khedive; the title of Khedive meaning "Our Lord," was created for Ismail, who paid barrels of baksheesh to the Sultan for it. By the law of the Koran, supreme above everything in Mohammedan countries, the eldest male of the family after the death of a sovereign succeeds him. On the death of Said Pasha, ruler of Egypt, the influence of the Emperor Napoleon and Ismail's vast wealth euchered Halim out of the succession and put in Ismail's European popularity, for Louis Napoleon took him under special protection, determined that if England virtually controlled Turkey, France should make it even by standing in her way on her road to India. Prince Halim then came to the front as the Porte's pet Egyptian.

A Cherokee Belle.

Indian Territory Cor. Providence Journal.

There are some remarkable types of beauty among the native Cherokee women, which will account for the fascination which they have exercised over white adventurers from the earliest contact of the two races, and which has caused a large intermixture of white blood so noticeable in the present condition of the Nation. One of these was conspicuous among those in attendance upon this gathering. When I saw her she sat with a companion upon the trunk of a fallen tree engaged in the familiar occupation of Pleasant Riderhood in twisting her shining black hair, which had fallen down. She was dressed with great neatness in a white jacket and clean print gown, with a chip hat and a red ribbon around her throat. When her black locks were rearranged they lay over a low brow, which they swept with a natural wave. The features were of barbaric beauty, and of a tropic mould of contour, which the full lips and the high cheekbones emphasized, but did not disfigure. The small, rather black eyes glowed with a steady fire, and the whole aspect of the face might be described as radiant and grave, yet full of animal life and power of passion. Her complexion was of a rich walnut color, with the rich blood giving a red stain to the cheeks, and showing so clearly as to suggest a realization of the graphic Irish expression that "the point of a rush would bring blood to her cheeks." This was Miss Eagle Brown, the daughter of Hunter Brown, a full-blooded Cherokee, and one of the finest and most characteristic types of her race.

"Crisped like a war steed's encolure"

Time Works Wonders.

Philadelphia Times.

Over in the Fatherland Chris, who was sixteen years old, agreed with Katy, who was twelve, that when they got to be rich enough they would marry. Chris was on his way to America, and that was twelve years ago. The young folks wrote to each other every year, and each remembered the parting vow. Some months ago Chris, who lives in Baltimore and is well-to-do, wrote for Katy to come over, as he was ready for a wife. Katy boarded the steamer Hohenstaufen and made the passage, landing in Baltimore a few days ago. Chris who was on the wharf when the immigrants came trooping out, looked in vain for his dear little girl. He asked an officer to to point her out. Katy was prettier than ever, and Chris ran to her with outstretched arms. But Katy drew back with a scream. She could see nothing in this sturdy bronzed man of the rosy-cheeked fellow who made love to her years ago. She got excited about it, accused Chris of being an imposter, and applied to the police. There was a great time for several hours, and when conclusive proof was brought to Katy that Katy's Chris was the Chris then before Katy, she cried and finally consented to be married. The reporter who called the next day found Katy as chirrupy as a cricket. It was her Chris after all, she said.

Farm and Workshop Notes.

The Crescent strawberry is the best variety for all purposes.

In Cheshire, England, extraordinary results have been attained in the application of half-inch bones to poor upland pastures.

The sugar beet forms starch in its leaves, but in the leaf stalk this is converted into grape sugar, and into cane sugar in the thick top root in which it is stored up.

Dalrymple, the great wheat farmer of Dakota, has sold $80,000 worth of his land to George Howe, of Bradford, Pa. Dalrymple found it necessary to decrease his acreage in order to farm it successfully.

Algerian wheat planted in Bohemia and Austria is said to give very satisfactory results, yielding more largely than other varieties. It is a hard variety, and yields almost twenty-five bushels per acre.

According to the Government return there was imported into Canada in 1881 $317,195 worth of flour and $452,531 worth of cornmeal, compared with $533,688 worth of flour in 1880, and $418,808 worth of cornmeal.

Breeders of Herefords claim for their favorites that thy are among the most hardy of all breeds of cattle, and thus are particularly adapted for counties where it is impossible to give special care of cattle through the winter.

By growing deeply-rooted crops as part of a rotation, the subsoil is made to contribute to the general fertility. Shallow-rooted crops, on the other hand, have generally a special faculty for appropriating food accumulated at the surface.

To make a cement for stoves take iron fillings and mix to about the consistency of putty for glazing with white lead and linseed oil. Fill in the joints as securely as possible when the stove is cold, and let it stand a day or two before using.

Few of our farmers have yet learned the advantages of the praticce of English farmers in establishing what are intended to be permanent pastures, of sowing not only clover and timothy but several other varieties of seeds in combination with them. In this way they avoid the loss of time which most of our farmers suffer, when nature is taxed to make a turf after the clover and timothy have gone. Nature will in time do this work as is shown by our roadsides that were fomerly pastured very closely by cattle running at large.

The secret of raising winter squashes is to plant them late. When maggots get into the vines the only way to serve the crop is to cover the vines about six inches deep with earth. Burying the worm kills it and does not hurt the vines.

The blacksmith often injures the wood-work of a carriage by fitting his irons when too hot. If the wood burns ever so little it weakens it, and if a joint is near the latter it is sure to open. A blacksmith who cannot fit an iron without depending upon its burning its way down should never be allowed to work at the forge.

The average of German observation shows that the annual yield of milk rises gradually from the birth of the first calf, till the fifth, reaches its maximum after the sixth, sinks gradually till after the tenth calf, when it is about the same as at the first calving, and after the thirteenth or fourteenth calf is only one-fourth or one-fifth of the maximum yield.

Farm manures contain all, while commercial fertilizers may contain only only a portion of the ingredients which plants use for food. But if a farmer were to find it profitable to apply large quantities of phosphate to his fields, as is often the case, he would propably secure that material more cheaply by purchasing a superphosphate, or bone meal, than by getting horse manure from the city stables at large expense.

A New Musical Instrument.

The London Times describes a recent trial of a new musical instrument invented by Mr. Baillie Hamilton, which resembles in shape and in the means of producing sound the harmonium or cabinet organ. There is, however, one important difference. Mr. Hamilton employs what is technically called "free reeds," but instead of acting upon them singly, he divides them into groups of three connected by a bridge, which so modifies their individual sounds as to emit a single note of great sonorous beauty and power. To each group of reeds belongs a sounding box or cavity through which the air passes much as the breath in singing passes through the throat, the intention being to produce a quality of tone resembling the human voice. In this attempt Mr. Hamilton has been remarkably successful by means entirely different from those employed in the "vox humana" stops of ordinary organs. The timbre of the new invention varies somewhat between the voice and the softer wind instruments, such as French horn, clarinet, etc., partaking of the qualities of both, the beauty of the sustained notes being, indeed remarkable. The chief defect of the instrument is its slowness of speech, which makes the execution of rapid passages a matter of extreme difficulty, if not an impossibility. This drawback, however, does not appear to be structural, and may no doubt be remedied in subsequent specimens.

Florida Oranges.

Chicago Tribune.

Oranges grow in the sun. All Florida is a bed of white sand, enriched by phosphates. These phosphates are in the shape of decayed animal matter. The sand is speckled with shells, the occupants which have gone to enrich the soil. So an orange grove is set in a sand bed. Fifty trees are set to the acre, which gives each tree about thirty-five feet. Late orange raisers are setting thirty-five trees to the acre. The trees commence to bear when eight years old, and keep increasing, so far as any one knows, forever. The age of an orange tree is not known. They continue to bear for no one knows how long. I saw trees forty years old. They were forty feet high, eighteen inches through, and bore 10,000 oranges. Colonel Hart, of Palatka, told me that he had sold $200 worth of oranges in one season from one of those fine old trees. An orange grove has to be cultivated constantly. It is harrowed and cow peas are sown in the spring. In the fall the cow peas are turned under to fertilize the soil. I believe there are now oranges enough in Florida when fully grown, to supply the world with oranges. Oranges commence ripening in December, and ripen all along till March. It is a delightful crop for a farmer to raise, because he has plenty of time to harvest it.

This is the way they harvest oranges: The oranges are cut off the trees with shears and sorted by rolling them down a right angle triangle open at the bottom. The little ones go through the opening first, and the very largest ones roll clear to the end of the trough. Then they are rolled up in paper, boxed up and sent to New York—freight 50 cents a box. A box holds from 100 to 150 oranges. A tree will bear from 200 to 8,000 oranges. Trees pay from $5 to $200 apiece annually. A tree paying $200 of course would be a phenomenal tree, very old and splendidly cared for. Col. Hart told me he realized $175 from one tree. Groves produce from $50 to $500 an acre, according to age and cultivation. An orange grove of twenty acres will sell for $40,000. There is much money made in the cultivation of oranges, but much patience and skill are required. Many Northern men have failed because they simply set out trees and then went away and left them. They have to be constantly attended to. They are not a sure "bonanza," and really only the patient, skillful and painstaking get rich in their cultivation.

The Battle of the Bouquet.

New York Herald.

The sailing of the White Star steamer Britannic yesterday with a very large passenger list brought a great crowd of well-wishing friends to bid the travelers bon voyage. There was the customary crush of flowers, and over a specially fine bouquet there arose quite a conflict. As it lay upon the saloon table one of the gentlemen of the passenger list looked it over and proceeded to draw from it a choice sprig of mignonette for a boutonniere. As he was pinning it in position another of the passengers stepped up with the remark, "Excuse me, sir, but the bouquet was sent to me." The flower plucker turned with equal courtesy and replied, "Pardon me, but I think you are in error; it is my bouquet." Without much further ado, each of the gentlemen proceeded to convince the other that he was in error, and did it, too, with considerable harshness of speech. From good society English they soon passed to profane English, and then, at a rapid stride, to a torrent of billingsgate. The other waiting passengers and their friends looked on aghast at the exhibition the two gentlemen were making of themselves, but a moment later they were still further shocked to see one of them give his antagonist a blow in the face. "It was a good sound whack, too," said one of the spectators. The officials of the vessel had by this time reached the point of action, and the belligerents were separated just as one of them was about to make use of the disputed bouquet as a missle to fling at his opponent. Each of the malcontents then proceeded to give the grounds for his belief that he was the owner of the floral offering, when a steamer steward discovered a note attached to it. That was at once seized upon as a key to the exciting complication. "I know that writing," cried one of the two men. "It is from Miss ——." The note was opened, and there was written, after a couple of pages of most affectionate rodomontade, the name which had been mentioned. The other gentleman did not attempt to break down this piece of evidence, but abandoned the trophy, while there was an evident desire on the part of some present to hustle him ashore and punish him for his haste and indiscretion by leaving him ashore. However, at noon the steamer departed with both the flower warriors aboard, and what complications would arise at sea was left to the imagination of those who had seen the rise and progress of the battle of blossoms.

The Darwinian Creed.

London Pall Mall Gazette.

Those who themselves explicitly reject the Darwinian creed, yet cannot possibly escape from many of its implications. It runs through almost all the best thought of our time; it tinges our unformed public notions; it reappears under a hundred disguises in works on law and history, in political speeches and religious discourses, in artistic theories and vague social speculations. Our very novels and poems are full of latent Darwin germs. If we try to think ourselves away from it we must think ourselves away entirely from our own age. Whoever builds at all must build largely from materials supplied by Darwinians. Whoever deals with social forces must deal with forces greatly molded and remodeled by Darwinian ideas. The physician who wholly neglected Darwinian results would fall behind in the race—would, in fact, be naturally selected for quiet extinction; the statesman who wholly overlooked the political and ethical implications of the Darwinian beliefs, the strength of the new intellectual factors introduced by Darwinism, would be incapable of really guiding the political thought of to-day.

JOCOSITIES.

Man, like buckwheat cakes, always feels sweetened when surrounded by 'lasses.

A boat can sail on a tack and not make a fuss about it, but when a man sails on a tack he—well, the case is different.

When Patrick saw the announcement in a shop window: "Great Slaughter of Clothing," he stepped in and enquired for "wan of them kilt suits."

A lawyer rose for prayers at one of the Talmage revival meetings recently. He feared the judgment day and had doubts about asking for a continuance of his case.

"[illegible] dies of a broken heart," says a French proverb. Nobody expects her to any more than they expect a homely man to die of a broken suspender.

A Michigan man told his daughter that if she would learn to do housework, he would surprise her. She learned the art, and he fulfilled his promise by discharging the hired girl.

"Member of the church, out of breath—"What are you ringing that bell for? What are you ringing that bell for?" Sexton—"Why, Mr. Blower is dead." M. C.—"O! no; it isn't true; stop the bell!" Sexton—"Well, then, I suppose I've told a lie."

While you are climbing up the mountain,
Dearest Rhoda,
I shall be standing near the fountain
Drinking soda.
While you are gazing raptly seaward,
Little dear,
You will find me sailing leeward
For a beer.

A striking window ornament is made as follows: Take one woman weighing about 200 pounds, with a neck like a stove-pipe and hair uncombed, and let her throw up the sash, look up and down, and call out: "Reuben, you come in here or I'll take your hide off!"

When the "divided hygienic skirt" is adopted by women, the male sex should make some startling changes in their costume—wear "united sanitary trousers," for instance. We don't know what "united sanitary trousers" are, but then we are in the same predicament in regard to the "divided hygienic skirt."

We ran across a man the other day who was traveling for pleasure. "But," said we, "you don't seem to be having a very hilarious time." "No, certainly not; I am not traveling for my own pleasure. I am traveling for the pleasure of my wife." "Oh! so your wife is with you, is she?" "No, sir; she is in New York."

"That man is a phrenologist, Pat." "A phat?" asked Pat, puzzled. "A phrenologist." "Phat's that?" "Why, a man that can tell, by feeling of the bumps on your head, what kind of a man you are." "Bumps on me head, is it?" exclaimed Pat. "Begorra, thin, I should think it would give him more of an oidea phat kind of a woman me wife is!"

Mystery explained: Gus de Smith called at a very fashionable house on Austin avenue, a few days ago, and acted so queerly that when the lady's husband came home she said: "What is the matter with young de Smith? He acted so strangely. I think there must be a screw loose about him somewhere." "Reckon not. I saw him this morning, and he was tight all over."

Referred: This purports to be a literal translation from the German: "'Pretty wifekin,' said Herr X to his young neighbor-ess, 'give you me yet a kiss-let. I ask only out of curiosity, because I gladly know would whether it from your mouth sweeter tastes than that of my frau.' 'Neighbor,' replied she, snappishly, 'ask you only my husband; he has your dear frau many a kiss given; he must it know.'"

A Philadelphia paper says that on Chestnut street a lady of uncertain age looks unutterably at a gentleman, who thereupon ventures to offer her his umbrella. "How dare you speak to me, sir?" she demands, in apparent anger. "I beg you not to be offended; I could not resist offering a simple courtesy," he replied, adding as her anger simpers away, "You look exactly like my mother." She scudded along alone, with a look that would have taken the glazing off a stoneplat.

A father never thinks his ten-year-old son is stronger than a horse until he employs him to turn the grindstone to sharpen an old ax that is about as sharp at one end as the other. The old man bears down until the young lad's eyes hang out and his trousers' buckles flies off, and just before a blood vessel bursts his father encourages him with the remark: "Does—it—turn—hard?" Thousands of boys have run away from home and become pirates in order to escape a second siege at the grind-stone.

Some Dainty Work.

All the Year Round.

In Elizabethan times one Mark Scarliot constructed a lock of eleven pieces of iron, steel and brass, and a chain of forty-three golden links was attached to the same, and this being put round a flea's neck, lock and chain and flea weighed only a grain and a half of gold. Surely such a miracle of skill was worth preserving for posterity. Oswald Nothingerus once turned 1,600 dishes of ivory which all went into a peppercorn, if indeed, we may believe contemporary writers. They were shown to Pope Paul V., who counted and verified them himself, by the aid of a magnifying glass. Father Ferrarius, a Jesuit, would not be outdone, and he made twenty-five wooden cannon, which went into the same compass; and Simon Marolus—whoever he was—had one of these miniature wonders in his possession, and was very proud of it.

Changes in French Climate.

At a recent meeting of the French Academy of Science, the change which seems to have occurred in the French climate, during the last few years, formed of the chief topic of discussion. It was remarked that the sardine fishery, which regularly brought in to the Breton population $3,000,000 per annum, had now become a thing of the past, the sardine having completely disappeared from the coasts. M. Blavier attributed the mildness of the winter and the precocity of the spring to the altered direction of the gulf stream, but no definite opinion on this subject was pronounced.

FROM THE WIRES.

IOWA AGAIN THE SUFFERER.

Cedar Rapids, June [illegible]—A fearful hurricane is reported in Blackhawk and Buchanan counties last night, the most serious results as far as heard from, being at Independence, thirty-nine miles north of here. Every telegraph line leading to this city, save the one from here to Chicago, is down, and no later news is obtainable than reports of passengers who were on the Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Northern train at Independence just after the storm passed.

At 4:30 o'clock it grew ominously dark [illegible] of Independence so that lamps were used in houses and on [illegible], and it was [illegible] see a car length ahead of the train.

At Independence the wind force was most violent, demolishing a number of houses, blowing down the smoke-stack of the Insane Asylum and causing great destruction at Sells Bros'. circus, blowing down the tent, the pole killing three employes.

The storm was seen several minutes before it struck the city, and the people were quite well prepared to protect themselves by going into their cellars.

School buildings were unroofed, lumber piles were scattered, trees were blown out by the roots in many instances, and much other damage done that could not be particularized by the passengers.

It was not a whirling tornado at Independence, but a straight windstorm.

At Waterloo the top of the Illinois Central Railway bridge was blown away, and other damage reported.

At this place the storm struck about 6 o'clock, the wind blowing a gale, unroofing some buildings and breaking down a good many trees, signs, etc. The wind was followed by a heavy rain. People quite generally sought places of safety, fearing a repetition of [illegible] disaster.

The sky presented a peculiar aspect, very like that reported before a tornado.

FROM DUBUQUE.

Dubuque, special.—Word was received at 10 o'clock last night here of a heavy wind and rain storm along the lines of the Illinois Central railroad west during the afternoon, with great damage at Independence. The wires were all prostrated, and to-night not one is working, and it is impossible to get communication with any side. Such facts as we learn were brought in by Conductor Keepers and some of the managers. The storm struck Independence a little before 5 o'clock, and wrought great destruction. Fences were torn up, barns wrecked, houses leveled, and trees uprooted. The windmill of the Illinois Central railroad was blown down and many houses and buildings unroofed. The depot of the Burlington & Cedar Rapids railroad is said to be a wreck. The roof of Fonda's store was taken off, and also the roof of B. O'Brien's. One of the livery stables was unroofed, and one report says the bridge across the river was injured.

At Waterloo the wind was terrific, but it is not known how much damage of a serious nature was done. Probably the tents of the military encampment are ruined. The storm struck Dubuque at 6 o'clock, but no special damage was done.

FROM DES MOINES.

Des Moines, Iowa, special.—Another terrible rain and wind storm passed over Iowa yesterday afternoon. The recently desolated town of Malcom, Powsheik county, still exposed to the elements through damaged and roofless buildings, was exposed for three hours to the pitiless storm. The damage to goods rescued from Saturday's storm is enormous, and probably a total loss. At Pleasantville, Marion county, the residence of P. Lyon was badly twisted, and props placed against it on the east side were driven through the wall. Numerous chimneys and shade and fruit trees in that vicinity were blown down, signs and awnings whisked away. It is thought the damage North and East of here is more severe.

Cedar Rapids, Iowa, special.—A special to the Republican gives some details of a very destructive windstorm at Independence yesterday afternoon. The railroad depot was badly twisted and the windmill destroyed. In the city a large number of residences ane business houses were unroofed and some were demolished. The school building was partially unroofed. Sells Bros.' circus tent was demolished and three of the men reported killed. It was not a whirlwind, but a sweeping hurricane. The extent of the damage cannot be learned, as the wires are down.

New York dispatch says:

The main body of the strikers, numbering over 1,000, went over to the yard of the Central Railroad of New Jersey, and at once took possession of the place. The police were telegraphed for, and [illegible] sent [illegible] yard to the [illegible] ferry at Communipaw. In the mean time about 300 strikers had gone to the sugar-house at the foot of Washington street, and compelled the men to stop loading the cars of the [illegible] Company, which had been brought around on floats. Calls for police protection are pouring into headquarters from all directions.

The Pennsylvania Railroad Company will swear in 300 special policemen this afternoon.

Twelve miles of cars, laden with material, of which a large proportion is perishable, are stalled on Jersey meadows. Hundreds of tuts of butter [illegible] pots, and the railroad companies under the law which claims the obligations of common carriers, who undertake to deliver safely goods entrusted to them, will probably be required to make good the damage.

It is rumored the locomotive engineers sent a delegation to the headquarters of the Brotherhood in Cleveland, asking for instructions. It is also said the engineers and firemen will [illegible] is seen.

[illegible] employed in the yard of the Central Railroad to-day joined the strikers, bringing the entire freight traffic to a standstill. It is expected the military will be called out, as the police are about exhausted.

The delay to the shipping interests causes a loss of from $150,000 to $200,000 every day to business men in this city. The merchants of this city have certainly sustained a loss of $1,25[illegible],000 since the strike began, besides the permanent loss of business, due to the transfer trade to other cities.

The Board of Trade has passed resolutions declaring that the advance asked by the freight handlers should be granted, and protesting against the the sweeping advance in West-bound freight rates recently announced by the trunk lines.

Philadelphia, Pa., special.—It is announced that owing to the labor troubles in Jersey City the Pennsylvania Railroad Company will transfer freight shipments to South Amboy by the old route.

Des Moines, Iowa, dispatch:

A dispatch just received by the Register from Ft. Dodge says: "The Milwaukee and St. Louis train dispatcher says the town of Emmettsville, county seat of Palo Alto county, was blown to pieces this morning, by a tornado, and over one hundred people killed. The Illinois Central and Chicago and Northwestern trains were blown from the tracks, and the Milwaukee and St. Louis road wrecked. There is a wash-out north of Forest City, and there are reports that three or four more towns in the locality were blown to pieces. The wires north of here are all down. It is impossible to get more news at present.

The Iowa Prohibition Election.

Des Moines, Iowa, special.—Returns have been received up to this hour from 732 townships of the State, including all the large cities, but with a good many of the larger towns unreported. These townships give the prohibitory amendment a net majority of 28,004. The State Register estimates that the total majority in the State will be between 40,000 and 45,000. The Temperance State Committee claim 60,000.

Washington, special.—With a full vote polled, this county (Washington) will give 600 majority for the amendment.

Muscatine, special.—The official returns from all the townships in this county are in. Muscatine county gives a majority of 108 for the amendment. The amendment will be carried by 50,000 majority.

Beer Drinking.

That we are fast becoming a beer-drinking nation is fully and officially demonstrated by the statistics of the Internal Revenue Department. A tabulated statement just completed from the books of the department for "Tovey's Brewers' and Maltsters' Directory" advance sheets of which are before us, shows that for the year 1881 the total of malt liquors consumed in the United States was 15,[illegible] barrels. During the revenue year ending May 1st, 1881, the aggregate was 14,1[illegible],466 barrels. This shows an average increase in manufacture and consumption for the last eight months of 1881, as compared with the corresponding period of 1880, of 1,760,000 barrels, equal to an increase of 2,347,043 barrels for the year. This makes almost, if not quite, one-third of a barrel, or about two hundred glasses of malt liquor to every man, woman and child in the country.

New York leads in the list of States with 5,294,164 barrels sold last year, with an aggregate increase of nearly 350,000 barrels over 1880. Pennsylvania comes next, showing the consumption of 1,599,130 barrels, with a corresponding increase over the preceding year. Ohio ranks third in the list, and is credited with having consumed 1,480,862 barrels in 1881, ending May 1st of the same year, an aggregate increase during the eight months of 198,659 barrels. There are six States wherein no malt liquors were manufactured and sold under the revenue laws; namely, Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Maine, Mississippi and Vermont.

Of the cities, New York is credited with 2,656,077 barrels in 1881, against 2 327,456 in 1880, an increase of over 300,000 barrels. Philadelphia is second, with 969,178 barrels, against 832,558 in 1880, an increase of 1[illegible] barrels over the preceding year, while [illegible] comes next, with 876,061 barrels, to 711,578 in 1830. Milwaukee takes the lead in proportion to population, having turned out [illegible] in 1881, [illegible] barrels over the preceding year. Brooklyn, "the city of churches," shows up with 840,228 barrels, while Boston, the city of culture and esthetic taste, managed to dispose of 967,240 barrels, an increase of nearly 46,000 over the preceding year. Cincinnati sold 741,760 barrels, against 841,238 in 1880. The amount made and sold in Cleveland is not given, but the aggregate for 1881 is 155,807 barrels. Of the States Georgia shows a decrease of 3,040 barrels, Kansas of 8 044, Nevada of 1,506 and Oregon of [illegible]. But little malt liquor is manufactured or drank at the South, no Southern city out-side of Baltimore appearing upon the list.

Long Silence.

Madison Courier.

Mr. D. G. Owen, of Ghent, Ky., was in the city yesterday. The Courier reporter, on receiving an introduction, expressed the wish that the venerable gentleman's visit here might be a pleasant one, when he replied: "My visits to Madison are always pleasant, for I was brought up here—went to school with [illegible] Ross, Sim Hunt and many other boys of this city. I know every foot of ground in the valley, although there have been great changes."

Speaking about Madison, Mr. Owen said: "I never come here but I recall a horrible tragedy—the murder of White by Sheets—a case that created more excitement, perhaps than any murder ever committed in these parts. It was along in 1824, I think, that it occured. I was the only eye-witness to the bloody deed, and I kept it a profound secret for thirty-five years."

"Remarkable!"

"Yes, sir, I didn't tell a living soul that I saw the murder for that length of time, and John Sheets, the murderer, was the first one I told it to. I was a boy, and I was skylarking around down near the south end of Mulberry street, just after dark. I saw White come out of an alley with a Yankee yoke on his shoulders, carrying two buckets of water. Sheets came along just then, and he struck White with a cane several times. White snatched the cane from Sheets and struck him several whacks over the head with it. Sheets jerked out his knife and plunged it into White near the heart. White staggered off a few steps grasping "I am a dead man!" fell upon his face and died in two minutes. I can remember yet the heart-rending screams of White's poor wife when she learned of his death. Now here's the reason I didn't tell what I saw: My brother-in-law, Will Carpenter, was prosecuting attorney, and I knew if I appeared as a witness—the only witness who saw the murder—all who favored his acquittal would say that Carpenter had gotten his little boy brother-in-law to swear to made up testimony. Sheets was tried, but the circumstantial evidence was not strong enough to convict him. When I told Sheets about my knowledge of the affair thirty-five years afterwards, and convinced him of it by describing the encounter, he almost fell in his tracks, and exclaimed, "My God, Greene, your evidence would have hung me!"

Lincoln and the South.

Vicksburg (Miss.) Herald.

When President Lincoln died the South lost incalculably. He was killed in the zenith of his power, and, as President Garfield said, "in the fullness of his fame." There are few in the South who do not believe he would have been, had he lived, the true friend of the Southern people, few who do not beleive the South lost more than the North by his death. We believe he would have made it his chief object to build up the States that suffered so much from war. We believe he would have healed the wounds with kindness and won the mass of the people by standing like a stone wall between them and revengful oppression. His son "is a chip of the old block." He has let no opportunity pass to show the Southern people kindness. He has worked side by side with the Southern Governors for the relief of the overflow sufferers, and we are sure Robert T. Lincoln has been praised oftener since he has been at the head of the War Department by Southerners than by Northerners. His thoughtful kindness and his attention to the details are proof that his heart was in the work. The Southern people are impulsive, warm-hearted and extremely grateful, and we are correctly expressing their sentiment for the Secretary of War.

Marksmanship in the Army.

From the New York Herald.

The War Department has determined to improve, if possible, the shooting capacity of the army. This is a good idea. The army is an expensive department of the Government. We hire it to kill people when the occasion demands. For this purpose we furnish it rifles of the most approved pattern, except when there is a job in the way, and someone wants to make a little money in a fat contract. The curious thing about our army is that while the only enemy it is called on to oppose is within its own territory and jurisdiction, that enemy is, as a rule, as well, if not better, equipped in death-dealing machinery than it is. There is only one way by which this can affected, and that is through connivance of the Indian agents. If we had honest agents, war on the plains would be impossible, but for some reason or another we have never been able, except in a few rare cases, to discover the right class of persons for this service. If the shooting standard of the army is to be elevated, targets will, of course, be needed. The larger portion of the army is on the plains and Western forts. If in some way it could be arranged that the agents who live and flourish in this region could be made to serve in the capacity of targets for the experimental volleys of the military it would be a great gain all around.

Peter Cooper's Air Cushion.

Peck's Sun.

Peter Cooper always carries a rubber air cushion, which he blows up and places in a chair or street car, before sitting down. The other day, in a Third avenue car, he was seated on his air cushion, when a well dressed lady sat down beside him. She had a large pin to fasten her dress on the side and as she sat down the pin struck Peter's air cushion and the air began to escape with a hissing sound. The stream of air struck the lady on the side of the [illegible] as it [illegible] where it would naturally strike a person, if not on the elbow. She looked at Mr. Cooper and he began to sink down, and looked as though the Greenback resumption were coming in, and then the woman stopped the car and yelled for a policeman, claiming the old man had stabbed her. Both were taken to a police station, when, it being found that she was not wounded, Peter was allowed to go and have his cushion mended.

KING'S MAGIC TOOTH ACHE CURE.

If you feel drowsy, debilitated, have frequent headache, mouth tastes badly, poor appetite and tongue coated, you are suffering from torpid liver, or "biliousness," and nothing will cure you so speedily and permanently as to take SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR or MEDICINE.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

The cheapest, Purest and Best Family Medicine in the World.

An EFFECTUAL SPECIFIC for all diseases of the Liver Stomach and Spleen.

Regulate the Liver and prevent Chills and Fever, Malarious Fevers, Bowel Complaints, Restlessness, Jaundice and Nausea.

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common as bad breath, and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons' Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your Appetite, Complexion, and General Health.

PILES!

How many suffer torture day after day, making life a burden and robbing existence of pleasure, owing to the secret suffering from Piles. Yet relief is ready to the hand of almost any one who will use systematically the remedy that has permanently cured thousands. SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR is no drastic violent purge; but a gentle assistant to nature.

CONSTIPATION!

Should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache.

THE PASTILLE

Prof. Harris' Radical Cure

Trade Mark

FOR NERVOUS DEBILITY

BY YEARS OF USE!

A valuable Discovery and New Departure in Medical Science. A positively effective Remedy for the speedy and permanent Cure for organic weakness—the deplorable disease resulting from indiscreet practices or excesses in youth or at any time of life—by the only true way, viz: Direct Application acting by Absorption, and exerting its specific influence on the Vesicles, Ducts, and Glands, that are unable to perform their natural functions while this disease pervades the human organism. The use of the Pastille is attended with no pain or inconvenience, and does not interfere with the ordinary pursuits of life; it is quickly dissolved and soon absorbed, producing an immediate soothing and restorative effect upon the nervous organizations wrecked from vicious habits or excesses, stopping the drain from the system, restoring the mind to health and sound memory, removing the Dimness of Sight, Confusion of Ideas, Aversion to Society, etc., etc., and the appearance of premature old age usually accompanying this trouble, and restoring the vital forces, where they have been dormant for years. This mode of treatment has stood the test in very severe cases, and is now a pronounced success. Drugs are too much prescribed in this trouble, and, as many can bear witness to, with but little if any permanent good. [illegible] is no nonsense about this Preparation. [illegible] observation enables us to positively guarantee that it will give satisfaction. It has been in general use for several years and we have thousands of testimonials from patients, as to its value, and it is now conceded to be the most rational means yet discovered for reaching and curing this very prevalent trouble, that is well known to be the cause of untold misery to so many, and upon whom quacks prey with their useless nostrums and big fees. The Remedy is put up in neat boxes, of three sizes. No. 1, (enough to last a month,) $3; No. 2, (sufficient to effect a permanent cure, unless in severe cases,) $5; No. 3, (lasting over three months, will restore those in the worst condition,) $7. Sent by mail, in plain wrappers. Full DIRECTIONS for using will accompany EACH BOX.

Send for Sealed Descriptive Pamphlets giving Anatomical Illustrations and Testimony, which will convince the most skeptical that they can be restored to perfect health, and the vital forces thoroughly re-established same as if never affected. Sold ONLY by

Unsolicited testimony to the Efficacy of Prof. Harris' Pastilles, taken from Letters received from Patrons!

Indiana, April 11, '79.—The Remedy is working perfectly. Had epilepsy from weakness, for 8 years past.

Iowa, Oct. 18th, '79.—I am almost surprised at your Pastilles. They have worked like a charm on me, I am just twice as much of a man as I was before taking. I was on the verge of the grave, I thought, and there was no cure for me, but now I am in good hopes for a cure.

West Virginia, Aug. 25, 1879.—I received your medicine and I believe it has cured me, for which I am very thankful. Inclosed find $5. Please send me another box [illegible] for a friend. You have done a great thing for me. I will send you all the orders I can.

From a Physician and Surgeon.

Missouri, June 26.—Please forward me another box of the Pastilles. The patient on whom I have used most of one box, in addition to a sample box, is fast recovering, and I think another will set him all right.

THE meeting of the democrat editors of the state at Indianapolis, last week was quite well attended, and was a pleasant affair. Aside from the necessary business done, a number of good speeches were made. At the regular meeting addresses were made by J. B. Maynard, editor of the Sentinel, Gov. Hendricks and Ex. Senator J. E. McDonald. At the banquet in the evening, Judge Hord delivered the address of welcome, which was responded to by Col. Maynard. Speeches were also made by Col. McDonald, of Columbia City, Judge Niblack and others. The many brief speeches made at the forenoon meeting showed a variety of opinions on the constitutional amendments, especially that in regard to prohibition.

PRESIDENT ARTHUR never did a better thing than when he persistently turned a deaf ear to all the petitions for Guiteau's pardon on the ground that the assassin was insane. If any murderer is to be pardoned, let it be the man who has a sufficient amount of sanity and of moral sensibility to repent and become, as many of them no doubt could, safe members of society. But these cranks whose mania is for murder, are not the kind to whom it is safe to show a leniency. A mercy to them, is misplaced. It is not for the safety or welfare of society to let them live. Sooner or later, they may escape confinement, and their insane thirst for blood be appeased by the sacrifice of other innocent victims. Sane or insane, a man of Guiteau's particular line of thought is better dead. The world will breath easier, now that it is rid of him.

"NOT willing to submit it to a vote of the people" is the way republican editors and orators are still talking. They don't seem able to understand what they are called on to do in this election. It is simply to say whether we want prohibition or whether we do not want it. We are not called on to vote for or against the submission of the amendment to the people. That is not the point. The constitution provides that it shall be submitted to the people, whether we want it submitted or not, provided two legislatures have voted in favor of the original bill. So the only question is: Do we want the amendment to become a part of the constitution? If so, we must send members who agree with us in this view. If we do not want the change, then we must send members who are opposed to the change. If a majority of the members of the coming legislature cast their votes for a prohibition amendment to the constitution, then by the express terms now found in the constitution it must go to the people for their approval or disapproval, whether the people wish it to come before them or not. So all this talk about being afraid to give the people a chance to vote on the question is nonsense, and has its origin either in ignorance or a purpose to deceive.

WHAT is the matter with Loveland of the Headlight? We don't believe he can tell, we don't believe any one can tell. But for a long time, he has gone out of his way on all possible occasions, in order to sling slang at the editor of the COURIER. The most improbable lies, the most slimy epithets that he could evolve from his inward or his outward nastiness were hurled persistently into the face of a shamed and disgusted public. And why? We have never till now mentioned him except in a respectful manner. We have done more than this, and better than this. We have taken him in off the streets when too drunk to be ornamental and allowed him to sober off in the COURIER office. Then we had him put safely on a train and started homeward. But now the scene has changed. The light of his lurid countenance no longer flashes in on the darkness of our sanctum, and we miss his belched-up fumes of stale whisky. Why is his friendship turned to anger, and his heart altogether gone astray? We ask this question more from curiosity than in anger. We gladly dismiss the subject and wait for an answer to our conundrum: What has the editor of the COURIER said or done to make the editor of the Headlight so virtuously mad?

In Hymen's Bonds.

Charles E. McDonald, son of Col. I. B. McDonald of Columbia City, has been captured by one of Auburn's fair damsels. He surrendered unconditionally about a week ago, the fortunate lady being Miss Lillie Griswold, daughter of Hiram Griswold. They were quietly married June 24, at the M. E. parsonage in this place. Charley is a good fellow and a promising young man, for whom we predict a successful future. He and his young bride have the best wishes of the COURIER, that their wedded life may be long and happy.

Exit Guiteau.

We can only give a synopsis of the assassin's execution, and do so for the benefit of those who have not access to the daily papers. His last night was passed with but little sleep. After a hearty breakfast he read awhile and at 9 a. m his brother John came to see him, in company with Rev. Dr. Hicks and Warden Crocker. At 11 a. m. he had his dinner, and seemed to feel composed. But shortly after 12 he broke down and seemed quite overcome for a short time. At 12:27 he was taken from the jail to the scaffold which stood at one end of the corridor, and within the building. After mounting the steps Rev. Hicks offered a short prayer. Guiteau himself then read a sort of a prayer he had composed, and followed this by chanting a poem, or hymn, as he called it. At 12:40 the drop fell, and he died almost without a struggle. After half an hour he was taken down and put into the coffin. Physicians soon after held a post mortem examination. His brain was found to be in a healthy condition. His brother John witnessed the execution, but Mrs. Scoville was not present.

Purdue University.

We have received the new catalogue for Purdue. It is full of matter of value to such as have an interest in our state schools. Parties desiring to enter this institution, or the State University at Bloomington, may be examined at home in their own counties, as the county superintendent can be authorised to conduct the examination. Applicants for admission to the academy should be over fifteen years of age. They must pass a satisfactory examination in arithmetic (through percentage), geography, English grammar, (etymology,) and spelling. The examination must show a fair knowledge of these elementary branches, as taught in the common schools. A law passed March 12, 1877, gives the board of commissioners of each county of Indiana the authority to appoint two students, residents, of the county, to Purdue University, and the students thus appointed are exempt from the payment of entrance and incidental fees, the the regular charges for room, heat and light. The reduction thus provided for amounts to $33 a year, or about one-fifth of all necessary expenses of a student. Sixty-eight of the students in attendance the present year were appointed. The students appointed must reside in the county. The catalogue shows a healthy and vigorous condition for a school that is still comparatively in its infancy.

D. D. LUKE, of Ligonier, will be a candidate for superintendent of public instruction before the democratic state convention. Mr. Luke will be remembered by many of our people, he having been in charge of the Butler school in 1876.

JOHN SHERMAN is around again telling the people how dangerous it is to our financial interests to be coining silver dollars. A man of sense would be apt to take a few of these same dollars and pay his debts with them. But John believes that even that would be ruinous.

—THE Press made some important additions to the county superintendent's allowances, last week. The bill was $116.00; and now the question is, who added the other $25.00.

MAX DEMBUFSKY, of Goshen, will, we understand be a condidate for nomination on the democratic ticket for joint representative for Elkhart, Noble and DeKalb.

ALLEN ZOLLARS, ESQ., of Fort Wayne, will be a candidate before the State Democratic Convention for Judge of the Supreme Court.

M. W. Dunham, of Wayne, DuPage county Illinois, will import 250 fine Norman horses this summer. So says the Indiana Farmer.

THE Washington monument will be 400 feet high before the close of this year.

COUNTY MATTERS.

WATERLOO:

The fine soldier's monument unveiled at Hicksville, the Fourth, was the handiwork of our townsman, Herman Froelich. It is said to be a fine specimen of work in that line.

The Butt hotel is neat outside as well as inside. The new coat of paint improves it very much. The popular proprietor will occupy it two years longer after which time he will be found in the Recorder's office in Auburn. But he will have things pleasant while he stays here.

The temperance men here are earnestly discussing the prohibition matter, and are generally in favor of the proposed amendment to the constitution.

Burglars raided our town Saturday night. They first entered the blacksmith shop of Campbell & Zimmerman and secured the necessary tools for their nefarious work. They commenced operations on S. J. Lock's place and the postoffice, taking about $30 and some silverware from the former and stamps, money, etc., to the amount of about $50 from the latter.

A freight train on the Lake Shore road ran off the track about 2½ miles east of town, last Friday. The section men were putting in new rails and had several out at the time of the wreck. Five or six cars were demolished and the engine took a rest on its side in the ditch.

Prof. C. B. Reed is at Goshen, as one of the faculty of the summer musical normal.

Dr. Murphy, of Leo, was in town this week.

Miss Lizzie Clark returned Monday from Edgerton, where she has been visiting friends for several days.

Freeman Kinney and Will Patterson of Angola, spent Sunday with the family of John Leas.

Miss Zoie Ettinger, of Angola, is visiting here with her sister Mrs. B. F. Kennedy.

H. E. Coe, Frank Blattner, Ed. and Gene Best went up to Lake Gage, fishing last Thursday and returned the next day with 150 pounds of fish.

Geo. Morrell came home Friday from Marion Iowa, for a months visit with his parents.

Miss Ida McCartney of Angola, visited over Sunday with Mrs. R. Shull.

Mrs. J. W. Patterson and children left Friday for their home in Marion Iowa.

Mr. and Mrs. Sthair of Fort Wayne, visited over Sunday with the family of Sam Beck.

Mrs. Parmeter and Mrs. Swan of Toledo Ohio, returned to their home last Saturday after a weeks visit with their sister Mrs. J. S. Bowers.

James Clifford and wife and Paul Clifford left Sunday night on No. 6 for Findlay, O., having been called there by the death of their brother Sam Clifford who was killed at Lima Ohio, last Sunday.

Miss Walter of Middleburry Ind. is the guest of Miss Ola Leib.

Frank Long returned Monday night from Peoria Illinois, where he has been for the past six months studying music.

SEDAN.

Oh how delightful—the weather we mean.

Health generally good.

Notwithstanding the heavy rains, corn is looming up well, and the farmers faces look much brighter than they did a few weeks ago.

Candidates are beginnig to ride out and make calls.

Our friend J. A. McIntyre departed from his quiet home June 25th, to attend a term of school at Valparaiso, Indiana.

The greenback meeting at Hesse-Cassel, Friday evening was a fizzle. So the boys say.

The Lords supper was administered by Rev. Kelso, Sunday morning at the church.

Train No. 38 running east Friday was thrown from the track 2½ miles east of Waterloo. The engine and five cars were completely demoralized. No one hurt.

Mr. and Mrs. H. S. Hine started Tuesday for Berlin, Ohio, to visit friends and their old home.

Beef at twenty-five cents a pound reminds us of the time when the children of Isreal made a calf of pure gold.

BUTLER TOWNSHIP.

The ague is still afloat.

Dr. A. A. Kester, is building an office at Cedar Creek.

John Harney has not moved yet from the Center.

Miss Emma Grube, closed her school last Friday at the Center. Emma is a fine young lady.

Mr. Reed closed his singing school at St. Johns school house.

The St. Johns band had a strawberry and ice cream festival at Mrs. Hogue's July 1.

E. E. Spangler has gone to work for J. A. Miller.

MARY ELLEN.

BUTLER.

McAllister's battery have gone to Indianapolis, to attend the grand encampment.

Butler had a grand display of fire-works. Those at the residence of Mr. Quackenbush being exceedingly brilliant.

Mrs. S. A. Hubbell and daughter Ida spent the 4th with Mrs. F. V. Robinson.

Dr. and Mrs. Fanning and Mr. and Mrs. Johns took in the sights at Hicksville, Tuesday.

The lawn social given by the Lutherans at the residence of Mr. Quackenbush, proved to be a success both socially and financially. The receipts were about $21.00. The lawn was brilliantly lighted by several headlights borrowed from friendly locomotives, while a variety of Chinese lanters added beauty to the scene. Strawberries, ice cream, music, games and swinging helped to pass the time very pleasantly.

J. D. Price and daughter Dell of Bryan, also Mrs. Jacob Ferris were at the social Wednesday night.

The concert given by the Disciples Thursday evening was pronounced the best of the season. The program was good and the house crowded.

Rev Walker of Fort Wayne, occupied the Disciples pulpit last Sabbath.

The concert given by C. E. Leslie's quartette Saturday evening was first class. They have organized a class of about sixty and will hold a convention lasting five days.

About fifty dollars worth of carpenter tools belonging to Adam Sternberg, were stolen from A. J. Mason's new house on Sunday night.

THE following from the Indianapolis Independent shows the standing of our candidate for representative in the city where his work would be known:

> Hon. D. D. Moody, of DeKalb county, has been again selected by the unterrified Democracy of old DeKalb to lead their ticket in the coming campaign. Mr. Moody made a most excellent record in our last legislature as an industrious, hard-working and pains-taking representative. During the entire session he was pretty sure to be found in his seat, and not like many of the members of both Houses, Republican and Democrat, loafing around town or telling "side-splitting stories" in the lobby. He fought corruption and jobbery whenever it made itself apparent, whether emanating from Republicans or Democrats, and The Independent does not hesitate to say that such men are decidly in the minorty in our State legislatures. We not know who will be pitted against him in the coming race, but unless it is a first-class man in point of ability and integrity, the citizens of DeKalb, irrespective of party, had better return Mr. Moody.

In Memoriam.

WHEREAS, It has pleased an allwise Providence to remove from our midst by death, the husband of our beloved sister, Mary A. Ehlers.

Resolved, That we heartily bow to the will of Him that doeth all things well; and

Resolved, That we herewith extend to her and her friends in this their deep affliction, our heartfelt sympathy and condolence; and

Resolved, That while we realize how sad it is to part with dear and loved ones, we rejoice that in this instance we do not mourn as they that have no hope; and

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be presented to Mrs. Mary A. Ehlers, also a copy to each of the city papers for publication.

—We take pleasure in announcing to the public that we have just secured a copy of the work entitled "Foundation of Success and Laws of Trade." This work begins at the foundation of the alphabet of business and social forms, and building thereon, they have reached intricacies of complex business, and penetrated the inner wants of social and public life. It is a judicious counselor in all matters relating to business and is a convenient guide in the transactions of public assemblies, etc. Mr. C. S. Kinney will remain in town for a few days, and we commend him to the courtesy and patronage of our citizens.

—EXAMINATION.— Notice is hereby given that at the next regular examination of teachers, I will at the same time and place hold an examination for applicants for admission to the State University at Bloomington, and to the Purdue University at Lafayette. All who wish to enter either class, should notify me in writing as early as July 22. J. A. BARNS, Co. Supt.

C. S. Kinney, agent for the new book the Foundation of Success and Laws of Trade, will be in town Friday and and for a few days thereafter canvassing for that valuable work. He will visit all our business men, and they will find it their interests to take a copy.

—On dit, that a marriage will take place soon in the north end.

—Mr. Stoughdecker has a two-year-old colt in a bad condition.

—We have not had a picnic near town this summer. Strange.

—Auburn did not show much patriotism on the Fourth of July.

—Straw hats wouldn't draw a fourth prize, for comfort, this summer.

—Forepaugh has changed his route and will not come to this place.

—"Hebel's front is going in, and don't you forget it."—[Wittmore.

—The black birds are said to be giving the corn fields a hard racket.

—The holiday season has passed. Nothing now but lawn socials and picnics.

—When duties seem to clash, "the moral law always has the right of way."

—The Franklin Democrat is offered for sale by the heirs of the late editor.

—The excursion to Pleasant Lake last Sunday was not largely patronized.

—Has Frank Leas struck another show company, or why this long absence?

—The Courier force took their lemonade at Pleasant Lake on the Fourth of July.

—Ed. Lesh killed a full grown porcupine near the Saginaw depot last Sunday.

—There will be communion services at the Presbyterian church next Sunday.

—Quit a crowd of fine looking gentlemen from Garrett, were in town on Monday.

—Jim. Henry is making an effort to out do Barnum. He has two pet crows and a coon.

We learn by C. Klotz that Mr. Chas. Bagman, of Butler township, has corn waist high.

—The physicians should lay in a fresh supply of "doses." Green apple time has come.

—The Tain Club met at C. P. Houser's Monday. They will not meet again for a short time.

—The anvil was fired four times on the morning of the Fourth. Don't say we ain't patriotic.

—There will be a meeting of the DeKalb County Medical Society in Dr. Cowan's office, July 12.

—Sheriff Leas is repairing his residence at Waterloo, so as to have things cosy on his "final return."

—Hollister went to Fort Wayne, Saturday, and brought home a lot of pine-apples and watermelons.

—Some devilish boys broke the street lamp in front of Gibson's bakery. They ought to have twenty days.

—John Krueger is painting his window blinds and putting up screen doors John is getting high-toned.

—Eckhart, the carriage maker, east of the creek, is doing a fine business this year. Glad to hear of it.

—Boys, don't you think that the Courier has been imposed upon long enough? If you don't we do.

—Geo. Parks, who drives Silver's lumber wagon, had a large log roll on his left foot, mashing it badly.

—The ladies ask: "Where's the Newville man?" The crop of strawberries in and around this place is short.

—It's about time that we hear of some la-da-dah youth dumping a boat load of young ladies into the lake.

—The Wittmer Bros., have done a nice job grading and boxing the sides of north street, an improvement greatly needed.

—Charley Emanuel, assisted by Samuel Weaver, was putting up a job on someone Monday evening. They rode out of town together.

—A small display of fireworks, shooting a toy cannon and a martial band enlivened the citizens of this place on the evening of the Fourth.

—The family of candidates that will appear before the republican convention, Aug. 12, is increasing daily.

—New potatoes are in the market here now, but people go slow when they have to pay sixty cents a peck for them.

—John Canon has his new residence, on Van Buren street, enclosed. Is Jno. getting the cage before he does the bird?

—Some nice music is indulged in at the organ store. One party plays a B flat horn and the other seconds on the piano.

—Snyder & Culbertson have erected a large shed, in rear of the Republican office, for the protection of agricultural implements.

—We are requested by Wm. Sthair to thank those who assisted in the burial of his sister, and their kindness will be long remembered.

—The Junction was enlivened the latter part of last week by the arrival and transfer of military companies on their way to Indianapolis.

—Josiah Watts, of Fairfield Center, had heard so much about the Courier that he concluded to take it, henceforth and for all time to come.

—Army worms in untold numbers are destroying the young corn and injuring the wheat and barley in the eastern part of Jefferson county.

—Geo. Babcock and Unica McDowell were welded together Sunday. Everybody has a right to their choice if they pay their own funeral expenses.

—McQuiston & Long have put a refrigerator in their store room. This will be a big advantage in warm weather in the keeping of butter, lard, etc.

—The common house flies don't seem to register as readily as they have in years gone by. It was cold enough Monday night to freeze their "gills" off.

—The circus versus the picnic:

The circus has its elephant,
The picnic has its ants;
The former prowl around the tent,
The latter up your pants.

—We notice that one or two of the boys have resurrected the "society style" of wearing a rose on the lapel of their coat. This is too utterally awfully.

—There will be a Lutheran Congress held at Rome City, July 14, at which time there will be addresses on various topics of interest by the leading ministers of that church.

—We hear that a Seventh street man will not allow his wife or children to go on the street. If this is true he ought to have a bunch of firecrackers shot off in his left ear.

—It's too bad that the way the Courier is conducted don't suit a few republican blowguns who would like to run the town and both political parties. We'll 'tend to the paper, gentlemen.

—The gin mills did a pretty fair back door trade on the Fourth. But, then, that's all right. If there ever was a day when a good, patriotic citizen wants a "snifter" its about that time.

—If there are any strong young fellows who cannot find anything to do, about these days, they might step out into the country where farm hands are very scarce and labor commands a good price.

—A number of our exchanges have portraits of Charles J. Guiteau on their pages. We did not invest in one. Judging from the sentiment of our people none of them cared about seeing him.

—Denison's ice wagon now visits here three times a week. Families can be supplied with a fine quality of ice, and in such quantities as they need, at thirty cents a hundred. Cheap enough certainly.

—Any cross-road town that would like to invest in a hook and ladder truck could get a good deal by calling on our authorities. We suppose it would be exchanged for any kind of country produce.

—Under the new law no ten days' notice is necessary to delinquent tenants, but suit may be begun for possession in all cases where by terms of contract rent is payable in advance, upon failure to pay rent.

—Quite a number of our citizens availed themselves of the cheap fare to go to Pleasant Lake Sunday. The only thing we dislike about it is the day. We don't believe Sunday was originally made for excursions.

—We are glad to state that Col. Todd has "jined" the pledge. It has been ten full months since the Colonel has seen the stuff sparkle, and he has a greater horror for it than a woman has for a frisky mouse in the sitting-room.

—Dr. Elson attended the meeting of the State Dental Association last week. He thinks these meetings are valuable to the profession, and he is right. Business of every kind is improved by a free exchange of thought among those engaged in it.

—The little colored girl who makes her home with the Presbyterian minister, came near being kicked by a horse Saturday. She ran against the "lifting propensities" of the animal, while her attention was engaged in another direction. Had the horse been of an ugly disposition she certainly would have had to "put on dem golden slippers."

—This is about the way the world wags now-a-days:

The pugilist dots his "eyes,"
The grocer crosses his "teas,"
The billiardist minds his "cues,"
And the farmer minds his "peas."

—The writer is under obligations to Rev. Matthews for an invitation to eat ice cream and strawberries at the social, last Friday. Sorry our "opening" was in such a condition that it would not allow any delicacies to melt therein.

—From an editorial in the Butler Review we are justified in saying that Harry Weamer, its "editor" has changed his spots, and hereafter the Review will be an organ for the democracy. "While the lamp holds out to burn, etc."

—Three men with teams and wagons are traveling through the country claiming to be agents for the Fairbank Scale Co. They beat the hotel keeper at Flint, Ind. out of a $35 board bill. Remember this and look out for them.

—Mr. L. Bowers and Capt. Silvers indulged in the sport of shooting at glass balls thrown into the air from a spring trap, Saturday evening. When a charge of shot goes into some valuable cow there will not be so much fun in glass "bawl" shooting.

—In regard to personal matters the Republican says of the Courier: "It speaks insultingly of a very estimable young man." We are ignorant as to who the e. y. m. can be, yet we have one consoling fact: He is not at the helm the Republican shebang.

—Next Tuesday will witness a spirited contest between the self-binding reapers sold in this county. It will take place on the farm of Mr. Jacob Brechbill who lives about two miles north of Altona. All who are interested in wheat harvesting machines should attend.

—The strawberry season is nearly past, yet many of our citizens indulge in the delicate short cake although the bushes had two crops each year. The price has been 15c, but this does not make so much difference. What the people want is a quart measure that will hold more than a pint.

—Mrs. Malloy had a hearing before a temperance committee at Wabash, last week, and was vindicated of the charges against her in trying to capture the heart of Wm. Wohlgamuth. Instead of calling Billy her darling she pronounced him an illiterate ass, and her ideas are correct.

—It is all a waste of material for the boys to be getting up a display of fireworks for Guiteau's effigy. Guiteau has before this seen the most brilliant and reliable fireworks ever invented, and all that our boys can do in that line will be mighty tame to a man of his present experience.

—Now we suppose that Shad will "let up" on the dog fighting business. The other day his dog visited the slaughter house, which is against the rule when Tarney's old "Watch" is there. They went together and were allowed to finish the battle. The result was Shad's bull dog got badly used up.

—The strawberry and ice-cream festival given by the Presbyterian society last Friday, was a nice affair. As a general rule these gatherings are patronized largely, and it is owing to the fact that Rev. Matthews, the present minister, interests himself considerably and puts life and enterprise into the organization.

—When the Republican wants a little speech on personal matters let the "editor" tackle Steve Girardot, whom it recently abused because he happened to waver from the straight path one day. Mr. G. is an ESTIMABLE old man, a hard working, industrious farmer, pays his debts and is what is termed a good, peaceable citizen.

—Young man don't pay any attention to what people will say. If you have anything to do, do it to the best of your ability, regardless of comment. If you succeed the merit will be your own; if you fail you can see your error, correct it and try again. Success in life comes only through perseverance and minding your own business.

—By and by it will transpire that the smartest lawyers in this country are our girls. They have already reached such a degree of legal knowledge that any one can tell you that a promise of marriage, to be binding, must not be made on Sunday, and that a contract to marry at a date more than a year ahead must be made in writing.

—Some one, not having the least sympathy for the insanity business, hung Guiteau in effigy from the balustrade around the court-house tower Friday evening. They were discovered while coming down, but escaped without recognition. They started up some fireworks to make a tableau, but didn't succeed very well. The effigy was hanging there next day.

—There is no mistake but that bottle beer, lemonade, soda water and numerous other summer drinks are refreshing and healthy, but the following receipt takes the strawberry short-cake: Take a pail of water and wash it clean. Then let it boil till it is brown on both sides. Pour in one bean. When the bean begins to worry, prepare it to simmer. If the soup will not simmer it is too rich, and you must pour in more water. Dry the water with a towel before you put it in. The drier the water the sooner it will brown. Serve on lily pads.

On the Water.

[Special to the Courier.]

Clarence Raut and Henry Tess, of Auburn, brought two Waterloo girls to Pleasant Lake Sunday, and the girls flirted with Jackson boys till the Auburn boys started home without them, but finally returned and got their lassies.

Firecracker Day.

The Fourth of July, has passed and gone and the patriotic small boy has his thumb tied up from the effects of holding a firecracker when it went off. The celebrations in towns around us were largely attended and a good time was had generally. Some of our citizens went to Fort Wayne, and others to Pleasant Lake, and returned home worn out and penniless.

What would Pay.

We noticed a road scraper standing in front of Ensley & Harter's store that for strength and endurance is far ahead of any like machine we ever examined. The town has two scrapers, either of which is of little account, and if the authorities would make some rural trustee a present of them and purchase some thing like the one in question, the work of the machine would pay for all three in one season.

Accommodating Late.

Treasurer Miller, in his clever, characteristic way, has made arrangements for delinquent tax-payers to liquidate their accounts without incurring the expense of collectors or loss of time and trouble in coming to the county seat. In another part of the paper he has a notice which will explain itself, and the people at points named should feel grateful to this officer for the kind and considerate interest that he has taken in their welfare.

"The Handcuff Home."

Billy Edgington was released from the county jail last Saturday, and is again a free American citizen. Matters looked dark for Billy having a "celebration" on the Fourth, but he was granted the priviledge by our officers. Dr. Stough still remains within the bars and is left alone to amuse himself until some violator of the law is gathered in. Its a nice, cool place to tarry, and we are told that the grub is superior to that of the Tremont House at Chicago.

Clean Up.

We are glad to mention the fact that the alley dividing Kiblinger's and Hulsenbeck's buildings has been cleaned out. There are several more places of a similar character in the business portion of town that need attention, and for the health of our people, and the general good, we hope all interested will "follow suit" and renovate these stench holes. It is the duty of the marshal to order this done if people are too negligent on their own part.

No Prohibition.

A Courier reporter, in conversation with our candidate for representative, was given to understand that he does not propose to fight for any republican prohibition movements if he is elected by his party to work for the interests of democracy and for the good of the people in old DeKalb. We think Mr. Moody's views on the proposed temperance change are surrounded by good common sense, and we hope he will let the "lemonade" party finish the job that they have laid the foundation for.

State Dental Association.

The 23rd annual meeting of this society was held at Indianapolis last week, and we learn it was the best they have ever had. There was an unusual number present, and it having been our privilege to meet many of the members while in the city, last week, it was our impression that they were an earnest and intelligent body of men. Several distinguished members of the profession living in other states also attended. Auburn was represented by Dr. Elson who was present nearly all the week.

"Shut Them Off."

Why is it that our marshal could not make the license so high for traveling swindlers that they would be unable to pay the bill and oblige them to move onward. Goods that are sold upon the streets can be purchased of our merchants for the same figures, and oftentimes less, than are paid these traveling venders. They perform with snakes, sing a few songs and collect a crowd, the majority of whom lick in their taffy and make purchases only to regret that they didn't deal with home tradesmen. The people should consider these facts and when they want articles corresponding with those sold upon the street-corner, let them walk into some of our stores and price the goods before patronizing a party that you don't know is truthful or not.

A Foolish Mistake.

Don't make the mistake of confounding a remedy of merit with quack medicines. We, speak from experience when we say that Parker's Ginger Tonic is stealing health restorative which will do all that is claimed for it. We have used it ourselves with the happiest results for Rheumatism and when worn out by overwork. See adv.—Times. 37-4t.

"Patriotic Boys."

Under the shades of a cloudy night the non-stalwarts of this quiet town suspended from the portico of the court house spire a stuffed man, and labeled the same "Guiteau." After matters were arranged to suit their "wonderful ideas" in honor of a busted party, they severed their heads with their coats and "mosied" out of the rear door of the court house hall. Another squad of "great men" amused themselves by firing ten cent skyrockets (three for quarter) at this rag man. If they felt so interested in the execution of Guiteau, why didn't they hang him and have a jubilee over his remains a year ago?

Red Ribbon Bill.

A number of our readers will remember Bill Zern, who learned the tinners trade with J. L. Davis, esq. In a letter received from him he jumps headforemost into a temperance lecturer, about three quarters of a mile longer than the moral law. He informs us that he is married and does not taste, touch nor swallow the rosy, and is as happy as a bumble bee under a small boy's heel. He owns a house and lot (didn't give dimensions) and has things arranged to suit the most fastidous. If Bill will come back to his own native home he can find a broad field to use up his temperance talent. He might take advantage of some excursion and make the trip on a half fare ticket, and we will guarantee him free meal checks and a comfortable couch during his stay.

Pill Peddlers.

The town is literally billed for traveling doctors, who will dish out their "wares" in this and all neighboring towns in the county at given dates. When a medical man cannot obtain a livelihood at home, among his friends and acquaintances, there is certainly something "slippery" connected with his profession. A traveling doctor certainly don't accumulate much money as there are too many in the same business. We do not doubt but that there are some good physicians on the road, and again we know that there are some bogus quacks who never received anything but a $10 diploma ($5 for the frame and $5 for filling out the blank) that are imposing upon innocent invalids every day. We have home doctors who can attend to the afflicted in a professional manner and are responsible for their transactions.

Trouble in the Household.

A Courier reporter looked up the Jackson township sensation and we glean the following from parties who were present at the trial: Hugh Antwerp and his wife have lived together for ten years until last week. A man known as "Jimmy, the ditcher, has been boarding there and it is said won the affections of Antwerp's darling. To have a fair understanding regarding matters they indulged in a law suit. Jimmy, the ditcher, employed D. D. Moody as council for the "gal," and a jury of twelve men were chosen to decide whether or not not Antwerp was cranky. It was impossible for them to agree and Mrs. Antwerp toddled off to her father's house, leaving her leige lord to go into the bachelor business with what supply there was on hand. They had two cows which the woman got into her possession, and when the husband went after them she blazed away at him with the contents of a double-barrel shot gun, but aimed too high to tickle his frame. The matter rests quiet at present and will probably have an ending at the next term of the circuit court.

After the above trial Jimmy, the ditcher, was arrested for "basting" Antwerp on the proboscis and was fined $10 for the "fun of it."

Some trouble was had between N. Squires and another party, whose name we have not got, in regard to Squires' cattle breaking into a wheat field. The matter was settled without legal backers.

A piece of grass will be sold to the highest bidder on the Beatty place next Saturday.

An Easter Egg.

Our old friend Isaac Cool has a hen whose esthetic tastes can hardly be accounted for on any known principles of "hen-ology." This hen took it into her head the other day that now was a good season to go into the colored Easter egg business, since all of the other and less enterprising biddies had quit that particular branch of business some time ago. So she went to work, and after advertising for some time for plans and specifications for a new pattern, she, with characteristic independence, proceeded to "reject any and all bids" and got up a model of her own. And a strange model it was. She very sensibly kept the size and shape the same as heretofore, and expended all her ingenuity on the design and color. These are about as follows: The large end of the egg is a decided brown, but toward the middle it is speckled. This takes about one-third of its length. The second third as it slopes to the small end becomes a grayish blue. At this point (the close of the second third) with rare good taste she placed a narrow band of brown entirely around the shell, and then finished off the small end in a neutral shade of pinkish gray. The whole is then "trimmed with the same." It is an ingenious affair and does great credit to the head and heart of this particular hen. We predict for her a brilliant future.

About People.

Ed Gregg is at home.

Johnny Cool is on the streets again after a long absence.

We hear that Charley McDonald will stick type for Houser.

John Butt, the coming man for Recorder, was in town Sunday.

D. J. Lowry, now a resident of Elkhart, Ind., was in town Sunday.

J. S. Bools, of Jackson township, was one of our callers last week.

Mr. Vesley and wife returned home Monday from a visit to Butler.

Miss Fannie Russell is stopping with the family of Dr. Seiring.

Andy Dodge, of the Columbia City Herald, called on us Tuesday.

J. W. Boyle, the next sheriff of this county, was in town last week.

Roy Gregg, the Butler temperance billiard man, Sundayed in this place.

Miss Maud Best, of Waterloo, spent Sunday in the family of E. D. Hartman.

F. B. VanAuken, of Plesant Lake, was here last week, visiting his brother Jay.

Drayman Rhodenbaugh was on the sick list several days, but is again at his post.

We noticed Rev. H. J. Norris, of Goshen, on the streets the latter part of last week.

Mrs. Frank Bush, of Orland, Ind., has been visiting friends in town for several days.

Charley Shepherd, the vocalist of Hicksville, was on the streets the latter part of last week.

M. F. Long went to Waterloo, Sunday, to join his wife who has been visiting there for several days.

Charley Ervin, of Kendallville, is a visitor with Clarence Raut and other young acquaintances in town.

Geo. Staley, employed at Anderson Bros. carriage works at Waterloo, called on the boys last week.

Mrs. D. D. Snyder left yesterday for Richmond, Ohio, where she will visit her sister, Mrs. Overholster.

Mr. Marshall Malurin, of Fort Wayne, has been making a brief stay with the family of W. H. McQuiston, esq.

We noticed H. Quinse and J. D. Williamson, of Corunna, in town Tuesday. Probably they wanted a quiet Fourth.

Frank Spake, of Garrett, called on the boys Saturday. He is said to be one of the best "strikers," for his inches, in the shops.

Miss Carrie Cutter and Miss Carrie Epsy, of Waterloo, were driving around town Tuesday. We are glad to see that Miss Cutter's health is improving.

Fred. Yesbera was in town on the Fourth. It's about time he was getting 'round, if he don't want another fellow to tramp about in his "old shoes."

Mrs. M. Douglas and her two daughters are visiting at Maysville, this week. Mike don't like keeping "bach," and wants to rent himself out to some enterprising widow until his trio returns.

Dr. Cowan went to Decatur, yesterday, to "dose" his old friends yet remaining on the tramping ground of years gone by. He came back to-day looking like a blue jay after the breaking up of a hard winter.

J. C. Jackson, formerly of Sedan, but now residing in Howard, Kansas, was in town last Friday. He is now adding to his other business that of real estate, as he has laid out an addition to the town in which he lives.

Miss Lora Walters, of Fostoria, Ohio, is paying a visit to her sister Mrs. W. L. Penfield. Miss Lora is a practical printer, and has been employed on the Pharos, at the above place, for a number of years.

Richard Reiner, our old-time neighbor in Waterloo, dropped in to see us this week. He has sold out his business at Big Rapids, Mich. and is now looking up a new location. He will be a worthy citizen wherever he stops.

Dr. D. C. Kelley, of Syracuse, was in town last week. His hotel at that place is becoming a popular resort. Such of the rooms as are not reserved for his transient guests are engaged frequently in advance. Still he will make arrangements to accommodate all who come.

Dr. Z. W. Shepherd, of Ada, Ohio, called in to see us Monday. The Dr. is now practicing medicine at that place and has a good business. He also has charge of the Christain church there and preaches occasionally at Leipsic, about thirty miles distant. His daughter Addie is still at the musical college at Warren, Ohio, while Mellie is teaching the grammar department of the school at Leipsic.

—A very bright looking young gentleman named Goodman, arrived in the city a few days since, and at once entered into a co-partnership with his father, Frank Goodman, the painter. The propose to enlarge the house on the S. W. corner of G. and Railroad streets and the young man is to do all the fine scenic painting, while Frank does all the coarse work. Emil Fischer may as well skip now, as he will get no more scenic work to do. Strange to say he only weighs 8 pounds, and though stark naked when he arrived, Mrs. Goodman took him to her arms and gave him a fine suit of clothes, made to order. Feeling a little indisposed he will remain with his mother some time, as he is too bashful to be in public. Here is our Frank, we can't tell how soon we'll be in the same boat. Ain't that so, Myers? Now between brother and brother religiously, ain't it?

We clip the above from the Durango, Col., Republican, and would only say that we hope the youthful painter will not get the colic as bad as his father used to have it.

—Uncles Samuel Ralston and Geo. Brandt are advertised on the bulletin boards to give a free concert Saturday evening, from the balcony of the court house. It has not been decided whether Guiteau's "melody" will be the opening or closing piece. It will be well enough, however, for those who will be present from abroad to learn a part of this "beautiful and pathetic hymn." It starts out in this style (sing softly):

"I am going to the Lordy,
I am so glad,
I am going to the Lordy,
I am so glad,
I am going to the Lordy,
Glory hallelujah!!!

—On the return of the excursion trains, Tuesday, some of the boys looked as though had gone through one of Jeff Grube's clover hullers. "A very estimable young man" lost his equilibrium and had not a search of his remaining clothing been made, he wouldn't have found himself for several days. In his hip pocket was observed a check which read as follows:

Danville, Ill., has an extraordinary suicide sensation. Three young girls deliberately killed themselves the other morning, by taking arsenic—one because her father lived with a disreputable woman, another because she was an orphan, and the third for reasons unknown.

Further obstacles have risen to the scheme to re-establish the Jews in Palestine. Turkey opposes it. Russian Jews are welcome, says the Porte, to any part of the dominions of the Sultan except this very part. No Russian Jew will be allowed to settle in the land of his fathers. Reasons are not given for the decree, but it is believed that the Sultan has concluded it to be the part of prudence not to give the Jewish nationality a center around which it might grow.

The correct and enduring diagnosis of the insanity of Guiteau is given in the recent letter of ex-Surgeon General Hammond to President Arthur. Dr. H. Says: "I do not know that my opinion, even if it had any weight, would be of any service to the unfortunate man. For, though entirely sure that he is insane, I am at the same time equally certain that he is one of those reasoning maniacs who know the difference between right and wrong, who possess sufficient power of self-control if they choose to exercise it, and who are therefore, in my opinion, responsible for any violation of law they may commit."

The hope and confidence of business men throughout the land are revived and growing in strength under the cheering influence of the harvest in progress, and the fair promise of that which is yet to come. It is evident that an abundant harvest will cheapen the cost of living, and revive the export of grain. Thus the chief cause of labor troubles will be removed, and the alarming drain of a balance of trade against us stopped, or checked. The prospects of such a havest, all things considered, were never better at this season of the year. Corn has suffered by the wet weather and late late season, but the almost certain large surplus of the vegetable crop will more than recoup that loss, and we may now count upon the benefits of an unusually large aggregate fruit crop. Thus we have assurance of prosperity "in basket and in store," and should "take heart" and be thankful.

Frozen Meat from the Antipodes

The arrival at London on the 25th of the sailing ship Dunedin, from New Zealand, with a cargo of frozen meat, is a noteworthy event at this time, when meats are so dear in our markets. The experiment of shipping meat from the antipodes to North atlantic ports in steamers has proved a brilliant success, but the Dunedin is the first sailing vessel that has successfully made it. Her cargo contained 5,000 dead sheep, and the long voyage across the equatorial seas consumed ninety-eight days, during which the temperature in her hold was maintained at about twenty degrees below the freezing point by the Bell-Coleman refrigerating apparatus, and the meat delivered at London in fine condition. The commercial importance of this shipment, both in the great provision markets of the Northern and in the agricultural and pastoral countries of the Southern Hemisphere, where the exhaustless herds of cattle are valued mainly for their hides and tallow, cannot be well overrated. The London Times, commenting on the vast significance of the Dunedin's experiment, warns the British country gentleman to be prepared to find "his carcasses underbid from the world below his feet," and our own stock-raisers may take the warning to heart.

"Kiss Me."

Chicago Tribune.

The servant of a newly-married wife of a Berlin banker had remarked that every afternoon, in the absence of Frau ——'s husband, a shabby-looking individual, ugly, ill-bred and suspicious, called at the house and remained closeted with her mistress for an hour. Supposing some intrigue, the the day listened at the keyhole and was horrified to hear a voice say, "Kiss me," and another apparently replying to the tender invitation by playfully exclaiming "Oh you Dem Jdaart You good-for-nothing!" The next time the shabby man called, the servant managed to let the husband know. A violent scene between the "happy pair" was the consequence. The presence of the suspicious visitor was however soon and satisfactorily explained. He was a bird fancier who had been requested by the guiling bride to teach a few amorous phrases to a pet parrot, with which she intended to surprise her husband on his birthday.

MELVILLE'S REPORT.

The Navy Department is in receipt of a report from Engineer Mellville, giving in detail the story of his search for Lieutenant DeLong and party, and the discovery of their dead bodies. The following extracts are from DeLong's note book:

Under date of Monday, October 3, Delong writes that his party thought they saw a boat, but upon reaching the spot found only a mound. A camp was made in a hole in the bluff, and a roaring fire built, soon drying and burning their clothes, while the cold wind ate into their backs. Nothing was left to eat but their dog, which was killed and dressed, and a stew made of such parts as could not be cured. All partook of the stew except DeLong.

At 8 a. m. the party reached a hut, which was large enough to hold them, and for the first time since Saturday they managed to get warm. Erickson was very low, and prayers were read for him, before the others sought rest. At 10 a. m. all except Alexy laid down to sleep. Alexy went off to hunt, and at noon returned wet, having fallen into the river. At 6 p. m. they roused up and had a pound of dog meat for each person and a cup of tea, the day's allowance. But they were so greatful that they were not exposed to the terrible gale which was raging that they did not mind the short rations.

On Wednesday they had tea and dog meat for breakfast. Alexy again went off hunting and came back with nothing. On Thursday they had a cup of third-hand tea with half an ounce of alcohol in it. Alexy was again sent out to hunt, and Erickson died while he was gone. Alexy returned empty-handed. The notes at this point say: "What in God's name is going to become of us? Fourteen pounds of dog meat left, and twenty-five miles to a possible settlement."

They could not dig a grave for Erickson, as the ground was frozen too hard, and they had nothing to dig with; so they sewed his body up in laps of tent, covered him with their flags, and buried him in the river. Three volleys from their Remingtons were fired over him.

Under date of October 6th the notes say: "117th day—Breakfast consisted of the last half-pound of dog meat and tea. The last grain of tea was put in the kettle, and we are now about to undertake a journey of twenty-five miles, with some old tea leaves and two quarts of alcohol. However, I trust in God, and I believe that He who has fed us thus far will not suffer us to die of want now." The party left a record in the hut, which was found by Melville, as already reported. They got under way at 8:30 a. m., and proceeded until 11:20 a. m., by which time they had made about three miles, and were all pretty well done up. They had half an ounce of alcohol in a pot of tea for dinner. They went ahead and soon struck what seemed to be the main river. Here four of the party broke through the ice, in trying to cross, and fearing frost bites, a fire was built. Alexy was sent off too look for food, being directed not to go far or stay long. He came back about 5:30, with one ptarmigan, of which soup was made, and with half an ounce of alcohol made their supper.

"Sunday, 9th.—All hands at 4:30. Half ounce of alcohol. Read divine service. Sent Ninderman and Noros ahead for relief. They started at 7; cheered them under way.

Monday, October 10—Last half-ounce of alcohol at 5:30. At 6:30 sent Alexy off to look for ptarmigan. Eat deerskin scraps; yesterday morning eat my deer-skin foot tips. Under way at 8. In crossing creek, three got wet, built fire and dried out. Ahead again till 11; used up. Built fire and made drink out of tea leaves and from alcohol bottle. On again at noon; very hard going. Ptarmigan tracks plentiful. At 3 halted, used up. Crawled into a hole in bank. Alexy in quest of game. Nothing for supper except spoonful of glycerine. All hands weak and feeble, but cheerful. God help us."

"Tuesday, 11th.—Gale with snow; unable to move; no game. One spoonful of glycerine and hot water for food. No more wood in our vicinity.

Wednesday, 12—Breakfast, last spoonful of glycerine and hot water. For dinner, a couple of handsful of Arctic willow in a pot of hot water, and drank the infusion. Everybody getting weaker and weaker, and hardly able to get firewood. Gale with snow.

"Thursday, 13th.—Willow tea. No news from Ninderman. We are in the hands of God, and unless he relents we are lost. We cannot move against wind, and staying here means starvation. In the afternoon went ahead for a mile; after crossing another river, missed Lee. Went down into a hole in the bank and into camp. Sent back for Lee. He had laid down and was waiting to die. All united in saying the Lord's Prayer, and cried. After supper a strong gale of wind, horrible night.

"Friday—Breakfast, willow tea; dinner, one-half teaspoonful of sweet oil and willow tea. Alexy shot one ptarmigan. Had soup. Wind moderating.

"Saturday, October 15.—Breakfast, willow tea and two old boots. Concluded to move at sunrise. Alexy breaks down; also, Lee. Come to empty grain raft; halt and camp. Signs of smoke at twilight to the southwest.

"Sunday, October 16.—Alexy broke down. Divine service.

"Monday—Alexy dying; Doctor baptized him; read prayers for the sick. Collin's birthday—40 years old. About sunset Alexy died of exhaustion and starvation. Covered in the ensign and laid him in the crib.
